Right there the Flatwoods showed its teeth. Fifty pistols leaped into view. Al Counterman, far back in the crowd, snatched a long-barreled six-gun from somewhere under his blouse and his lanky body stiffened to balance, a light in his one eye no man there ever seen before. Uncle Nick, with a vigor that set at defiance his weight of years, hurled younger men aside and sprang into the cleared circle.

But with so many women and children present pistols were out of the question. The desperado doubtless counted on this very fact. Stung to madness by the blow, he leaped up and lunged again with the knife.

This time he ran square into the preacher. With a readiness and courage hardly looked for in one of his cloth, he had stepped in front of Jack Warhope, his tall figure erect and superbly dominant.

Fifty flatwoodsmen, half crouched and straining forward, stood staring. The eyes of the dark-faced man stretched so wide that they appeared to bulge from their sockets. He lifted a dirty hand, brushed it across the wiry stubble of his face and, like a man half dazed, slowly shut the clasp knife and put it back in his pocket. Fifty flatwoodsmen relaxed, straightened; fifty pistols went back into hiding.

The preacher slowly raised an arm and pointed toward the open door. The desperado's eyes dropped; he rubbed his lips together as if to loosen them; turned and stalked from the room.

"Mebbe we ortn't t' let 'im git away," muttered a voice.

"Aw leave 'im go," grunted Uncle Nick, a curiously puzzled expression on his face as he gazed at the open door through which the renegade had gone. "He's licked—an' 'e ain't wo'th hangin'."

The old man turned away, still with the puzzled expression on his face, motioned Jack to a chair at the side of the room and began examining his hurt.

At that moment Texie slipped through the crowd, some white strips of torn tablecloth in her hand, and approached the woodsman. A smile twisted his lips, and the girl, dipping one of the strips in the cold water Aunt Liza brought, began to wash the blood from the gashed shoulder and make it ready to be bandaged.

The preacher looked on a moment, turned away and went back among the women who were gathering again about the punch bowl. The elaborate frock coat and stiff neck stock had again asserted themselves. The stoop had come back to his shoulders; the flare had left his eyes.

The girl, with fingers trembling, glanced through the open door into the square of darkness that had swallowed up the desperado; bent low over the bandages, and brought her face close to the woodsman's ear.

"Jack—he looked like—like—Ken would 'a' looked—!"

The woodsman started; looked into the square of darkness; and then into the girl's face.

"No, no!" he whispered. "Even if he was alive, he wouldn't 'a' come down that—low—!"

CHAPTER VII

Fancies and Fence Rails.

Jack Warhope made a one-handed job of his work among the feed-pens next forenoon, though it was a task for two. The young woodsman was immensely sensitive over the fact that he was a bound boy, though Simon Colin never obtruded it on him and seldom exercised any sort of authority over him.

He allowed him to live on in the cabin where his father and mother had dreamed their dream, to come and go as he pleased. The shrewd old money-lender probably knew that the young man's high spirit would urge him further than any amount of exercised authority possibly could. And Simon Colin knew the race from which his bound boy had sprung.

From the first, Simon's treatment of his bound boy had caused his neighbors no small wonder—it was so unlike him. He had sent him to the village school till he outgrew it, and had allowed him to roam the woods without any sort of restraint. Far from discouraging his very aptitude for woodcraft, he had even loosened his heart-strings—and his purse-strings; an infinitely harder thing for him to do—to the extent of buying him the best double-barreled shotgun the market afforded, and a revolver of model and workmanship as fine as the art of revolver-making could produce at that time—two gifts on which the boy certainly cast no discredit.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Wilbur of California Succeeds Denby

The first cabinet member appointed by President Coolidge is Curtis Dwight Wilbur of Los Angeles, who will succeed Edwin Denby as secretary of the navy. He is chief justice of the California supreme court. He is also a graduate (1888) of Annapolis. If you doubt it, go to the gymnasium of the Naval academy and look at the brass tablet which records that Midshipman Wilbur did a record hitch-and-kick of 9 feet and 1 inch. Judge Wilbur has four children of his own and is a leader in the boy scout movement. Every summer he takes a group of youngsters to the Feather River country and teaches them to camp and fish. Moreover he says: "There has always been something in my blood that responded to the calling of the sea and a love for the sea; for ships, for salt air is a part of my makeup." And, finally, don't forget that the appointment of a California man is good Coolidge politics. So, altogether, the appointment would seem to be a happy selection.

Secretary Wilbur was born in 1867 in Boonesboro, Ia. In 1883 the Wilburs moved to Jamestown, Dakota territory. After resigning from the navy Secretary Wilbur went to California and practiced law. He has been on the state supreme court bench since 1918 and chief justice since 1922. A brother, Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, is president of Leland Stanford university. The new secretary is nationally known as a jurist.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson Checks Publishers

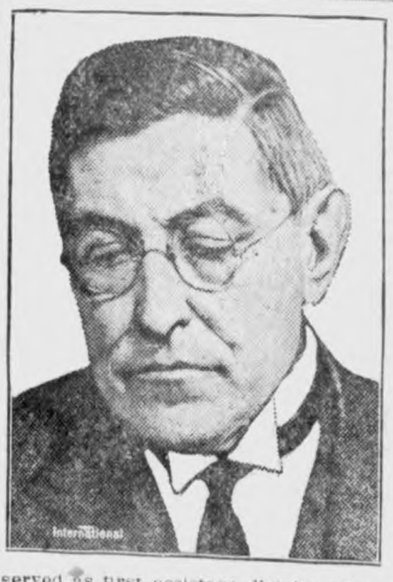
Mrs. Woodrow Wilson has decided to avail herself of her legal rights to check publication of selections from her late husband's letters and manuscripts until she can determine in what manner the war president's papers will be given to the public as a whole and in an authorized way.

It is Mrs. Wilson's intention, as executrix of the war president's estate, either to have his letters and manuscripts assembled and published by some one who will act on her authority, or to gather them into a collection of Wilsonia and make it available to the public probably by depositing the papers in some national institution such as the Library of Congress.

Mrs. Wilson has been advised by her family attorney that as executrix of Mr. Wilson's estate she has legal rights in the publication of his letters and manuscripts, not alone under the law and authorities, but under an amendment to the copyright law, now part of the revised statutes of the United States.

Since Mr. Wilson's death some of his letters have been published; some others have been offered for sale, and still others were in process of publication and widely advertised, until Mrs. Wilson determined upon her action.

Roberts, Special Counsel in Oil Cases



When President Coolidge selected Owen J. Roberts of Philadelphia to act with former Senator Atlee Pomerene of Ohio as special counsel in the Teapot Dome oil investigation, not one member of the senate public lands committee had ever heard of him—and the members had no cause to feel lonesome, either. It is said he was warmly recommended by Senator George W. Pepper of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Roberts is forty-eight years old. His early education was obtained at Germantown academy. After that he went to the University of Pennsylvania, receiving his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1895. In 1898 he received an L.L. D. from the same institution. From 1898 until 1900 he was a fellow and instructor in the University of Pennsylvania law school, and served as professor of law from 1901 until 1918.

For three years, 1903 to 1906, he served as first assistant district attorney of Philadelphia county. It was there he got his first training in criminal cases. Since then his work has been confined mostly to civil trial and court work. During the World war, however, at the request of the attorney general he represented the government in the prosecution of cases arising under the Espionage act in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and was made special deputy attorney general for that purpose. During the war, also, at the request of the United States Housing corporation, Mr. Roberts represented this body in Philadelphia.

Edward B. McLean and the Oil Scandal

Edward B. McLean, who has figured prominently in the oil investigation, seems to be guiltless of everything except being caught in telling an untruth at the request of Albert B. Fall to help the former secretary out of a tight place. He is a rich man who enjoys playing the host to notables and is famous for his hospitality. He inherited a large fortune from his father, John R. McLean, which included the Washington Post and the Cincinnati Enquirer. He married Miss Evelyn Walsh, daughter and heiress of Thomas Walsh of Denver, a very rich mining man. He bought the famous Hope diamond, one of the world's most magnificent gems, for his wife. His first born son, Vinson Walsh McLean, was known as the "hundred-million-dollar baby" and no child was ever so watched over and protected. And then, one morning in Washington, the boy broke away from his governess, ran into the street and was run over and fatally injured by a slow-going driver driven by a perfectly respectable old ward school teacher from Vermont.

So Ned McLean has long been in the public eye. During the last few years he was prominent as the intimate friend and host of President Harding with whom his friendship began when the late president came to the senate from Ohio.

Mr. McLean asserts that he never had any financial interest, in or any connection whatever with the oil leases, and he owns up to telling an untruth about those $100,000 Fall checks.

OPERATIONS FOR FEMALE TROUBLES

Some Are Necessary, Some Are Not

These Women Gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Trial First

Fairview, S. Dakota.—"A year ago I was sick in bed for three weeks and the doctor said I would not be any better without an operation. I had bearing-down pains and sick headaches, with pains in the back of my neck. I felt tired all the time, down-hearted, and got poor and pale and was scarcely able to do anything at all for some time before I took to my bed. The doctor said one of my organs was out of place and caused all my troubles. I was too weak and run-down to think of an operation and as one of my neighbors told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began taking it. I have received great relief from it and recommend it very highly. It cannot be praised too much in cases of female weakness."—Mrs. O. M. RING, Box 106, Fairview, South Dakota.

New Jersey Woman Writes

Camden, New Jersey.—"I take great pleasure in writing you this testimonial. I was a great sufferer of woman's ailments and doctors told me 18 years ago that I must have a serious operation to remove some of my organs. I refused to have it done and took a full course of your medicines for six months, then after the full course I took a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound every week or two, also Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine every Spring. I am well and stout and still have my organs they wanted to remove. It was while I was in the hospital that I heard your medicines praised by other patients there. I have recommended them to my friends and to my own family. You may use this testimonial far and near, from the smallest paper to the largest, and I will gladly answer letters from women who wish to know what the Vegetable Compound has done for me and what it will do for them if they give it a fair trial."—Mrs. J. RICH, 322 N. 40th St., Camden, New Jersey.

Through neglect, some female troubles may reach a stage where an operation is necessary, but most of the common ailments are not surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after operations have been advised.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 100,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported that they had been benefited by its use. This statement is important to every woman. For sale at drug stores everywhere.

Mastodon and Mammoth

The mammoth was an elephant, now extinct, related to and nearly the same size as the existing Indian elephant. It, however, had a long, thick, hairy coat and very long, upward-turning tusks. The mastodon is any of the numerous species of extinct elephants, which differ from the mammoth chiefly in the molar teeth, which have high conical cusps or parallel ridges with little or no cement in the interspaces. Some have small tusks in the lower jaw besides those in the upper jaw.

Dead Letter Office

The dead letter office is a division of the Post Office department under the control of the fourth assistant postmaster general to which unclaimed letters, parcels, etc., are sent from local post offices. It receives about 16,500,000 dead letters and parcels a year, and 9,000,000 post cards and postals. The loss to the general public through the careless directing of such matter is about $500,000 annually. No letters or packages are sent to the dead letter office until they have been given a directory service at the post office to which they are addressed, and all available methods to locate the addressee have been exhausted.

Bob, the Beloved Fiddler

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(©, 1924, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Gloom prevailed in Blue Lake camp. There was not to be a Saturday night dance at the hotel this week—the three-piece orchestra which usually played for the tent and cottage colony as well as for the guests of the hotel, had found a better field for their doubtful talents and had taken the early morning boat. Mr. Stokes, the obliging and perspiring host, had telegraphed wildly in several directions, only to meet with defeat; owners of phonographs found one excuse or another for not lending their machines, and the large tuneless one in the hotel parlor had blared itself to death apparently, for it had emitted one last agonizing screech, and refused to go on that very morning. Mr. Stokes, attired in spotless flannels, and looking like a crimson peony, made a canvass of his scattered guests, pleading that someone with musical ability would play for the Saturday night dancers.

"What is a dance without music?" he had plaintively inquired for the twenty-fourth time when he reached Judge Randall's cottage at the edge of the lake. "Miss Betty, of course I know I would be court-martialed if the youngsters knew that I had persuaded you to leave the floor for the orchestra—" he paused with a pleading look in his bovine eyes.

Betty Randall looked thoughtful. She did love to dance!

"Isn't there anyone at all?" she asked, incredulously, at last. "What has become of old Nat, the black fiddler who played for us last year?"

"Died last winter, Miss Betty. You see, if Blue Lake wasn't so far off the beaten track it would be easier to find some one—to get a musician in a hurry—but tucked away off in the hills—"

"Very well, Mr. Stokes, there is no use in my spoiling everyone's pleasure—you can count on me to play the piano. I wish it was in tune," she said, with a whimsical little smile curving her charming mouth. "And now, let me bring you some of our good lemonade, you look so warm."

When Mr. Stokes had departed, Betty stole a glance at her mother. Mrs. Randall was knitting placidly and lifted calm blue eyes as blue as her lovely daughter's. "Do you mind, mother?" asked Betty.

"Not at all, dear. I am thinking of you—it will not be very agreeable for you."

"Pooh," said Betty, carelessly. "It will be novel—I will pretend that I'm a poor music teacher glad of the chance to earn money—no, I will not pretend, even to myself. I shall be just Betty Randall, playing for her friends to dance—heigho!" She stretched her arms gracefully and turned her face to the blue lake. But the lake was a blue blur, for tears filled her eyes.

"Who is that man talking to Mr. Stokes?" suddenly inquired Mrs. Randall, pointing toward the pine woods.

"Why, it's a—tramp—warning him away, perhaps," replied Betty, absently. She went into the house to pick out some music—there was a book of jazz music that her younger brother treasured, and there was a dance folio of her own that contained many popular dances.

"I am glad there is not to be a violinist—I could not play with one—after—Bob." Her little tearful whisper was strangled in a sob at the memory of her young lover who had gone away after the war. Bob Ferry had gone to the Northwest "to make a fortune" so that he could marry Betty, who was rich. The Randalls would have received him with open arms, poor as he was, for they already loved him as a son, but Bob had a certain stiff pride of his own. Months had elapsed since his departure, and Betty believed that he had forgotten her. Her letters were returned by the Post Office department, undelivered.

So she had closed that door of her life.

"What are you going to wear tonight, Betty?" asked her mother at dinner that night. Dinner was served on the wide veranda overlooking the lake and the soft lapping of the blue waves against the piles was a pleasant accompaniment to the well-cooked, perfectly served meal.

"Wear?" repeated Betty; "the green georgette, I think, mother."

"Do wear the rose-colored one, dear," suggested Mrs. Randall, looking very radiant about something. "It will give you some color."

"Why, I haven't worn pink since—for ages," protested Betty.

"To please me—to please us all, dear."

Betty smiled at her family. Her father, sun-browned and sleepy after a long day's fishing; Dicky, plainly excited, and her little sister Sue. So Betty Randall wore pink that night to please her family.

She looked like a pink dream when she entered the ballroom at the small hotel. There was a valiant charge of dancing young men and a bass murmur of protest when she waved them all away and mounted the little stair that led to the musicians' balcony. She edged onto the tiny balcony while Mr. Stokes panted up the stairs, pausing with his head at the floor level.

"Miss Betty," he wheezed. "You are an angel to help us out. Let me present to you our violinist for the evening. Mr. Robert Perry. Good luck to you both!" The round, red face vanished, and Betty, perched like a pink fairy on the piano bench, discovered that she was not alone; a tall form was leaning against the piano, a pair of very sun-bronzed hands were busied with the violin. A husky voice had murmured some conventional remark. Betty did not dare look higher than those slender hands; the hands searched through her music, placed something on the rack before her, and just as the great clock in the hall below struck eight a trembling sob came from the violin and Betty's fingers crashed down on the opening chords of a waltz.

What a wild waltz melody that was! Betty's trained fingers kept perfect time, but through it all was the tremolo of her agitated body and the throbbing of her heart, and weaving in and out was the crying voice of the stranger's violin. Old melodies stole from the mellowed wood of the instrument and mingled with the rhythm of the waltz. On the floor below was the slip-slip of light feet on the polished boards, laughter and sometimes a humming accompaniment as the dancers went on and on. The slim brown hands left the violin for a moment, another page was turned on the piano rack, and then the stringed voice called Betty into the past, where she and Bob had met and loved and parted. Her eyes were heavy with unshed tears as she lifted them to his hands, so like Bob's—to the broad chest with its clean khaki shirt open at the brown throat, followed the satiny wood of the violin to the curve of lean jaw and the strong chin. Then, compelling brown eyes drew her look to their own.

It was Bob! Bob, the beloved fiddler—the unknown tramp!

Betty did what any other heart-sick woman would have done under the same circumstances. She fainted quietly away, looking like a fallen pink rose.

The strong arms of the fiddler carried her down the winding stair to her father's arms, and they supported Mrs. Randall across the sands to the cottage. Then he waited alone on the veranda, fear in his eyes, until Betty came shyly down.

"I am no longer poor, Betty," he told her at last, after a long tale of a walking trip that had resulted in losing his comrades and tramping penniless with his violin.

"It doesn't matter—when I saw your hands I knew my poor fiddler had returned at last."

Last of Toll Gates in Missouri Is Gone

The only toll gate which remained on the public roads of Missouri, located on a gravel highway between Jefferson City and Columbia, a distance of 14 miles, is abolished. The road will be taken over by the state highway department and no more tolls will be collected. It was established in 1867 and the money taken in was used entirely for maintaining and improving the road.

Naturally the toll gate has no place anywhere in the great plan of road construction which is now being carried forward in this state. Such benefits as formerly were received by a single section from the establishment of a toll road are now provided for an entire state by a program of construction from which all derive benefit, and toward which all must contribute a reasonable amount in taxes. Perhaps, however, there are certain analogies between the toll gate and modern plans of road building.

The man who passed that way did not always pay toll cheerfully, but without this means or some other means of paying for road work and maintaining good roads he unconsciously paid a much greater toll to the obstacles in the way of travel. The same is true of the taxpayer today. He is, in a sense, paying toll, although for road improvement on a large scale, and without that payment he would pay in the long run a far heavier toll to time-consuming and money-consuming mud roads.

But where the toll gate helped to lift one district out of the mud the state and the entire country are now being lifted slowly out of the mud through state road building programs and the government aid that is offered for this purpose. We have progressed far beyond the toll gate stage. Communication should be free. Further progress should abolish existing toll bridges across the Mississippi.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Acres of Skylights

In the great terminal station of the Pennsylvania lines in New York there are 80,000 square feet of skylights entering into the roof construction. Not a single grain of putty has been used to render it waterproof. Nearly every known shape of skylight was employed in its construction, and some idea may be gained of the care the work involved when it is considered that the specifications prohibited the use of curved glass, each light lying in a plane different from that of its adjoining light, involving the use of irregular shapes in surface and dimensions. These skylights are made from rolled steel bars, glass, copper and brass without the use of any packing or filling substances, and, although the system had never been used prior to its adoption by the architects, the decade of subjection to extremes of temperature and heavy rainfall has demonstrated its ability to withstand any weather conditions.

Speed

Can human beings travel at the rate of 1,000 miles an hour and live? The United States Army Recruiting News, in discussing this question, says that such a speed is mechanically possible, but the physiological element may make it impossible. Experiments on animals in France show that such speeds produce anaemia of the brain and hence insensibility and sometimes death. A well-known aviator who won a speed record said, in describing his sensations: "I went out cold as I turned the pylons"—that is, he became insensible for the fraction of a moment. Of course he recovered almost instantly. But with a higher speed he might not recover. What that speed is has not yet been ascertained.

HAMROCKS PLAY CRYSTAL LAKE TOMORROW; FIRST GAME

E BALL SEASON OPENS FRIDAY

ably an Entire New Line-up will Open Up on Crystal Lake Fri.

AME BATTERY TO BE USED

e baseball season will open r High School Friday when the me Shamrocks will play Cry- Lake here. This is the same from which K. H. S. took such ating last fall. However we ex- to turn the tables on them this , so that we will come out of the end of the horn.

ossibiy many changes will be e in the line-up for this game, g to many being ineligible. A- g the recruits are Patet, Tanner D. Gibbs. They are showing d work and possibly before the on is over will win a permanent tion on the team. Coach Tregil- has not announced his battery most think that Gimer and Elder again hold down the important tions. Gimer is back again with more speed and control than before and in previous years speedy ball has spoiled more one brilliant player's batting rd. The second string pitchers probably be Patet, Fuller (both ruits). Dutch Elder will probably behind the bat, but Tanner or D. bs may step into the position. know nothing of the infield line

E MINSTREL WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

The Minstrel, put on by the Boys heletes, was a great sucess. Every ng went off with a bang and as as we can guess the large crowd ich was in attendance was well ased. The show was in two parts e first part being an old fashioned nstrel show and the second was egro court scene, in which a col- d girl was suing Rastus Jones for breech of promise. Especial note given to Russel Bell who carried e part of Miss Ammonia White rough to Perfection, and also to lary Greimann who took the part Aunty Louder. However every- e took their part very weel, and is is what made the minstrel such wonderful success. Buzzer with s hard job, Lawer Snip and Lawyer ap with their logical reasonings, dge Goose with his political eech, the jury with their songs all lped make the program enjoyable d in fact laughable.

A little over $81 was realized, hich will go to buy athletic supp- es. The boys wish to thank you r your patronage.

LETTERS ARE AWARDED TO ATHLETES

Basket Ball Season is Officially Closed By Awarding Letters

The Basket Ball season was offic- ally closed Monday morning by the warding of letters to the boys who ave played the required number of ames. Coach Tregilgus gave a short alk and in his characteristic man- er briefly described each player. The requirements to earn a letter in basketball is to play at least half of the games or play in the Tourna- ment. Eight boys had played the necessary games and were awarded the Bright green letter, which now adorns their sweaters.

Letters were awarded to Clarence Elder, Captain, Gerald Koerner, Andrew Wellemeyer, Milo Patet, Harl Gimer, Frank Gibbs, Wayne Lemke and Vernon Turgasen. It is not so much the value of the letter that counts, but it is the honor of representing the school that is more important. All the boys will back again next year except Elder, who graduates.

The girls also received lettrs, but we are unable at this writing to publish the list of the honored ones.

A "K" club will probably be organized soon.

SENIORS ARE BUSY PREPARING FOR GRADUATION

From now on the Seniors will be busy people. The Class play and Commencement will soon be here and of course that means much hard work.

Class Play,	Date not Set.
Baccalaureate Sermon	May 18
Junior- Senior Banquet	??
Commencement Exercises	May 23

We do not know if the Juniors are going to give the customary banquet or not, but as it is the custom of every school we do not suppose they are an exception to the rule.

GET REPORT CARDS

This is report card week. Great is the wailing and rejoicing thereof.

Owing to the measles epidemic there were no six weeks tests this period, but all grades were based on class work. This is the last six weeks period.

TRACK EQUIPMENT

The boys have recently received two vaulting poles, a discus and a shot as part of their track equipment.

The Orchesrta Class is now practicing five days a week instead of only three, as they have been doing previously.

The Mechanical Drawing class is now inking their drawings. They find it "great stuff".

PLANT MORE PASTURES NOW

Farmers Should Plan to Supplement Livestock Feed When Bluegrass Pastures Are Low

Now is the time to plan the supplementary pasture for livestock during the period when the permanent blue grass pasture will not supply enough feed. According to F. G. Churchill, extension farm crops specialist, more practical farmers are making a special effort this year to insure abundant pasture for July, August and September than ever before.

Rape is one of the vrey best supplementary pastures for hogs, as it will grow on almost any soil, provided a good seed bed is prepared. It provides a great deal succulent pasture rich in protein and minerals. Rape may be sown alone at the rate of from five to seven pounds per acre, or with one and one-half bushels of oats per acre. It can be drilled or sown broadcast and harrowed in. An acre of good rape pasture should carry from 15 to 25 pigs

Sudan grass is being used to good advantage as a summer pasture. It requires a warm climate for its best developement and should not be sown until sure of warm weather. Use from 15 to 20 pounds of seed per acre when sown broadcast. It should be in shape to pasture from six to eight weeks after sowing, according to Mr. Churchill.

The practice of plowing the old feed lots and devoting to rape, sudan grass and some other forage crop, besides supplying succulent pasture, will aid materially in the control of live stock diseases.

LET'S ALL VOTE FOR JOHN

With the adjournment of the special session of the legislature Lieut.-Gov. John Hammill, our own John, finishes one of the most strenuous job in his legislative career as presiding officer of the Iowa senate.

The task of guiding the destiny of the codification of our Iowa statutes through the proper channels of the legislature is a real one and Lieut.-Gov. Hammill has proved himself a real officer of the senate.

To devote one's time to such a task demands a great sacrifice by each and every member of the legislature. Iowa is an agricultural state. The needs of the farmer require the greatest diligence upon the part of our lawmakers and to John Hammill much of the credit for economical legislation is due. As presiding officer of the senate Mr. Hammill has steadfastly sought to expedi ate public business in the appointment of committees through which the real spirit of legislative procedure must be directed he has endeavored to treat all interests fairly and has uniformly enforced prompt disposal of measures coming before the senate so that time might be saved and public expenditure kept at the lowest limit. Mr. Hammill's stand in favor of a state budget law that shall govern and control taxing bodies from the township up and thus prevent waste and extravagance and provide a strict accounting and place public expenditures upon an economical basis should gain for him the support of every farmer and business man of the state in his candidacy for the governorship.

For a politician to take such a stand often jeopardises his interests at the hands of persons who seek to to profit by the expenditure of public funds but this paper feels that Mr. Hammill's stand on this question is typical of the man.

Mr. Hammill is a Hancock County man, a home man we might say. He graduated from the Britt High School in 1895, and two years later finished his law course at the State University and hung out his shingle in his own home town and made good. He served this county two terms as county attorney and in the year 1908 was elected state senator of this district. In 1920 he was elected Lieutenant Governor and reelected in 1923. During Governor Kendall's absence he served as governor for a couple of months, which experience further fits him for the high office he seeks.

On the first page of the Times is a letter from Mr. Hammill addressed to the republicans of Iowa which gives in more detail just where he stands.

TIMELY GARDEN TIPS

The adult striped cucumber beetle hibernates over winter and appears early in the spring and feeds on leaves of cucumber and melon plants as soon as they are up, according to Dr. C. J. Drake, entomologist, Iowa State College. Last summer we tried out several remedies for the control of the striped cucumber beetle," says Dr. Drake, 'and found gypsum and calcium arsenate, a reppelent and a fertilizer all in one, to be the best. Use one part of cacium arsenate and 20 parts of land plaster of gypsum. As soon as the young plants come up, apply the dust. During fair weather two or three applications per week are adequate, but dusting after each rain is necessary. If applied early in the morning when the dew is on, the dust will stick better and give better results. About 10 or 12 applications per season are required. This treatment does not burn the plants like ordinary lime."

"The Kleckley Sweet, sometimes called Monte Cristo, is the best watermellon to grow for home use in Iowa," says C. L. Fitch, horticulture extension specialist, Iowa State College. "This year we are planning to demonstrate the best melons, cantaloupes and squashes with about 25 co-operators in as many counties. We are including a new gray melon, the Thurmond. It has dark red flesh, black seeds and eats like fudge made by one's best girl.

"Among cantaloupes, we include the gold meated kinds, also Honey Dews and Casabas, a new red meated fruit, and the Persian. Among the squashes we recommend the original Hubbard, the Warty, Golden and the Blue Hubbards, the Delicious for table use and the Mammoth Yellow Chili to beat them all in size at the county and state fairs."

People who grow Hubbard squash should plan now to combat the squash vine borer, according to Mr. Fitch. "The best control for these borers is secured by growing a few squash plants in advance of the general crop. Plant a few seeds in little pots in the house. Squash cannot be transplanted, but the whole pot of earth can be set out about the same time the general crop is planted. These trap squashes get most of the eggs laid by the mother moths. About the time the trap vines begin to spread out runners, they can be pulled up and burned. To make this method of control more effective, we find at the Iowa Experiment Station that if the general squash crop is not planted for 10 days or so after the normal planting date, the trap plants will catch more of the eggs."

The grouch thinks the first day of the month was invented so creditors could make him sore.

Those who are promoting most enthusiastically the "back t the farm movement never have been ther.

Even if yu do think thec ountry is going to the dogs, you can't save it by howling.

LETTER FROM LIEUT-GOV. HAMMIL TO IOWA REPUBLICANS

LIEUT.-GOV. JOHN HAMMILL IS HANCOCK COUNTY'S PICK FOR HIGH OFFICE

This Letter Is Addressed To All Republicans In Iowa

Britt, Iowa, April 15, 1924.

To The Republicans of Iowa:

Numerous newspapers have very generously made voluntary announcement of my candidacy for Governor of Iowa before the primary election June 2nd. but I deem it advisable to make a personal appeal to the republicans of the state, to which party I have always given allegiance and in whose principles I am in thorough accord.

I was born on a farm in Iowa county, Wisconsin, in 1875 and my early education was obtained in the common schools of that state. When I came to Iowa with my parents in 1889 settlement was made on a farm near Britt, Hancock oounty, Iowa, and that community has been my home through the passing years. I graduated from the Britt High School in 1895 and in 1897 graduated from the law department of the State University of Iowa and entered at once upon the practice of law in my home town. I served Hancock County two terms as county attorney and in 1908 was chosen senator from the district composed of Hancock, Cerro Gordo and Franklin counties. I was elected Lieutenant Governor in 1920 and re-elected to that position in 1922. I served as Governor from August 27th to November 1st, 1923, during the absence of Governor Kendall from the state.

As the presiding officer of the state senate I have steadfastly sought to expediate public business. In the appointment of committees through whom the real spirit of legislature procedure must be directed I have endeavored to treat all interests fairly and have uniformity enforced prompt disposal of measures coming before the senate so that time might be conserved and public expenditure kept to the lowest limit.

I am in favor of a state budget law that shall govern and control taxing bodies from the township up and thus prevent waste and extravagance, provide a strict accounting and place public expenditure upon an economical basis, which must lead to a material reduction in taxes. One of the elements producing the depressing condition in agriculture is excessive taxation and the taxes must be reduced. Such a need is so pressing as to prompt the most intelligent application of the budget principle to all taxing functions.

The most searching scrutiny should be observed by all assessing functions from the State Executive Council down to the school district in order that all property and all securities should bear their just burden of taxation.

Although a practicing attorney, I have for several years given personal direction to my farm interests in Hancock County and have been a member of the Farm Bureau since its inception. I have made a study of farm problems and in public addresses before farm institutes, short courses and other farm activities I have clearly set forth my views upon this all important issue.

I am conscious of distressing conditions that are pressing hard against agriculture and every effort possible should be expended in an intelligent solution of the problems that confront Iowa's greatest industry.

It is a matter of record, not only written in platforms but the consummation of constructive achievement, that the republican party has always been the friend of labor and by legislative procedure has, through the passing years, placed upon the statute books of Iowa laws that have advanced the cause of labor, accepted its claims for wholesome recognition and vindicated the large contribution it makes to the welfare and prosperity of the Commonwealth. I am in strict accord with this splendid record of my party and am ready to contribute further effort to the solution of other problems as changed economic conditions may suggest from time to time.

If the republicans of Iowa impose a confidence and trust in my candidacy for the high office to which I aspire which shall lead to my preferment, I promise fidelity to duty and the best that is in me in service to the people of the state which I revere.

Cordially yours,
JOHN HAMMILL.

COOLIDGE SLAPS SENATE PROBES

President Demands Body Quit Muck-Raking; Rallies to Mellon's Side.

Washington — President Coolidge called for a change in the methods of the senate investigating spree when he sent the upper house a terse message, asserting in emphatic terms that it was time for the senate to return to a government "under and in accordance with the usual forms of the law of the land."

The President, forwarding a complaint from Secretary Mellon of actions of the senate committee inquiring into the internal revenue bureau, declared that the "state of the union" demands that the senate remain within its constitutional rights in conducting inquiries.

In his letter to the President Secretary Mellon attacked the senate investigation of the bureau of internal revenue and declared that the inquiry had degenerated into a "morale breaker." The secretary pointed out that the engagement of Francis J. Heney as counsel, at the personal expense of Senator Couzens, is evidence that the aim of the investigation now is persecution.

A continuation of the senate's interference, Mr. Mellon said, would bring things to a point where neither he nor any other man of character could take the responsibility for the treasury.

The message evoked a storm of Democratic protest. Senator Walsh of Montana, prosecutor for the Teapot Dome oil investigation, declared the message was a "rebuke" to all senate investigating committees.

"The President wants us to stop these investigations and he ought to say so," the senator said. "Of course he isn't asking anything of that kind, but the message unquestionably was written to formulate public opinion which would have that effect."

Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, Senator Jones of New Mexico, and others from the Democratic side joined in the attack, which held the senate far beyond its usual closing hour. It went unanswered from the Republican side.

Japanese Note Raps Proposed Exclusion Act

Washington. — Japanese exclusion sections in the immigration bill pending before the house and proposed as amendments to the similar bill before the senate suddenly assumed the status of an international issue of first importance. In a communication unusual in gravity of expression, the Japanese government, through Ambassador Hanihara, reiterated its formal protest against the exclusion of that country from nations entitled to a definite quota and warned of "the grave consequences" which enactment of the measure "would inevitably bring."

Harry and Mal Defy Senators in Home Town

Washington Court House, O.—Politely, but firmly, the home town of the Daugherty brothers, Harry M. and Mal S., rejected the Brookhart-Wheeler senatorial investigating committee and all its ways. Within a stone's throw of the little flat where the late Jess W. Smith babbled his secrets to Miss Roxie Stinson, Senators B. K. Wheeler (Mont.) and Smith W. Brookhart (Rep., insurgent, Ia.), held a committee session which was blocked in its purpose by the refusal of Mal Daugherty to appear or produce his bank records, and by an injunction which was served upon the senators by the husky local sheriff, W. L. Lewis.

Reparations Commission Accepts Dawes' Report

Paris. — Settlement of reparations problem was brought nearer when, acting with remarkable rapidity, the reparations commission by unanimous vote decided to accept the experts' reports. Notice of the decision was immediately served upon Germany, and that country was simultaneously requested by the committee to send an official representative to Paris for a hearing on the subject of the report on April 17, or shortly thereafter—unless the reich preferred to make a written reply.

Estimate Tax on Stinnes' Fortune at $175,000,000

Berlin.—Hugo Stinnes, who, while alive, refused to save the tottering finances of Germany, is bound to save them now by his death. The government expects to collect an inheritance tax of $175,000,000, 25 per cent of his estimated fortune of $500,000,000.

Rebel Navy Surrenders

Mexico City.—Two vessels of the Mexican navy which have been in the rebellion surrendered at Puerto Mexico. They were the Zaragosa and the Agua Prieta G. The rebels are without a navy now.

Plan to Salvage Ships

Norfolk, Va.—Plans are being made to salvage the sunken and shell-torn hulks of the battleships Alabama, Indiana and San Marcus, which lie in Chesapeake bay.

MRS. ROBERT E. SPEER

Mrs. Robert E. Speer of Englewood, N. J., as president of the national board of the Young Women's Christian association, will have a prominent part in the American Y. W. C. A. convention which opens in the Hotel Commodore, New York, on April 30. Every state and nearly forty countries will be represented and the theme will be international peace and friendship.

TRAIL OF HAMON COIN VANISHES

Jake Paid, or He Fibbed, Teapot Domers Hear.

Washington.—Either the late Jake Hamon was the most colossal yarner since Baron Munchausen or there was an extraordinary slick system for getting campaign contributions into the Republican war chest and out again without human intervention.

That Hamon did give away a great deal of money to make his political dreams come true is firmly believed in Oklahoma among both business and political magnates. But nobody seems ever to have seen that money, or received it, or receipted for it, or expended it.

William H. Miller, for example, a dignified, forthright-speaking man, who was once assistant attorney general of Ohio, declared under oath to the senatorial Teapot Domers that Jake Hamon never gave him a check for $25,000 to pay the Congress hotel, Chicago, bill of $18,700 for Warren Harding's campaign headquarters during the 1920 Republican national convention.

And yet it was only the day before that J. B. French, also dignified and forthright-speaking, declared under oath to the senatorial investigating committee that Hamon, in a long and intimate business talk, did tell him that he gave Mr. Miller a check for that amount and for that purpose, Jake adding, said the witness, "we had to be good to 'Bill' Miller."

The testimony of this Mr. French, who was Hamon's business partner and, as he put it, "a Texas Democrat, thank God," was read in sepulchral tones by Senator Stanfield (Rep., Ore.) to Mr. Miller, and he, far from being overcome by the recital, said in decisive but not showy tones when it was finished:

"Regardless of the origin of that statement, it is untrue."

Industry of Germany O. K.'s Dawes' Report

Berlin.—The chairman of the German Association of Industry, Doctor Sorge, has given out the following statement: "After studying the proposals of the experts I am of the opinion that we must accept them. The burden which the German industries must bear is colossal, but the proposals indicate a big step forward over previous proposals in that they are free from all military and political influences and are based upon business considerations."

Haynes Lays Bootlegging to Thirst of the Rich

Washington.—Ninety per cent of the bootleggers would go out of business if the demand for their product in the higher circles of society was shut off, Federal Prohibition Commissioner R. A. Haynes said in an address before the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Indorsement of the candidacy of Calvin Coolidge was recorded at virtually all county Republican conventions held throughout Oklahoma Friday.

COOLIDGE TALKS TO 1,000 WOMEN

President Addresses Delegates to Woman's Law Enforcement Meet.

Washington. — President Coolidge talked law and law enforcement to a thousand delegates to the Woman's National Conference for Law Enforcement. The President was presented to the gathering by Mrs. Herbert Hoover. He did not platitudinize the women in the way that used to be accounted necessary. He began in a tone and with a word so intensely characteristic of him; for the tone was hard and definite, but deliberative, and the words were these:

"You are an association, I am told, gathered together for the better enforcement of the law."

Then he forged ahead in this little impromptu on law, saying:

"Now, just what is it that we mean by law?"

That question, too, was altogether characteristic of his mind and method.

"You will see that the law is a rule of action. That is why enforcement is sometimes so difficult."

Then fundamental after fundamental—thus:

"It is very easy to enact legislation. We have state legislatures, and the national congress, that each year put upon the statute books thousands upon thousands of enactments to regulate and control our conduct. But it is of no avail unless behind it there is a sentiment that will enforce. I sometimes wish people would put a little more emphasis upon observance of the law and a little less upon its enforcement. It is a maxim of our institutions that the government does not make the people but the people make the government."

He was glad, therefore, to see the women. It encouraged him, he said, for it represented a determination on their part to observe the law and to get it observed. And with that kind of sentiment the result, he declared, could not long be in doubt.

"Now the practical question comes—and all these things are intensely practical—what can we do to secure enforcement?

"We have to do what we do in all movements for the betterment of the race. We have to have an awakening of the conscience. That is what you represent and that is why your presence encourages me. It shows not only that we have law on the statute books, but that there is behind them the determination of an awakened conscience which declares to the world that our liberties are to be made forever secure."

Wilbur to Keep Personal Tab on Navy Oil Leases

Washington.—A new naval oil policy, designed to safeguard the government against any such losses as those granted under former Secretary Denby, was announced by Secretary Wilbur. In a letter to Senator Hale (Rep., Me), chairman of the senate naval committee, Mr. Wilbur declared that "no leases or contracts will be made" by the Navy department without the personal approval of the secretary of the navy.

Soviet Plot in M. E. Church, Legion Is Told

Ottawa, Ill.—Russian and German agents are working in this country to split the Methodist church on pacifism, John W. Gorby, vice president of the National Transportation institute, asserted at an American Legion meeting here. The attack on the Methodist church, he said, is part of a campaign to break down the American spirit and breed a policy of nonresistance in this country.

Belgium Will Act on Funding Debt With U. S.

Brussels. — Premier Theunis announced that he intends to move immediately toward the funding of Belgium's debt to the United States. "There is an important part of our debt which does not correspond with any budgetary receipts, but which we must regularize as soon as possible," the premier said. "We must without delay fund the United States loans to us before and after the armistice."

Hines' Ruling to Speed Cash to Disabled Vets

Washington.—The national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion announced at the conclusion of a four-day conference here that Director Hines of the veterans' bureau had revoked bureau regulation No. 35, which meant, the committee, said, that "hundreds of claims of disabled men will now be paid immediately after award by the 14 district offices."

"Base Line"

Every one who has given any attention to the matter of geodetic surveying knows the necessity of accurately measured "base lines" from which all subsequent measurements are based. The ideal site is a perfectly level stretch of open ground, ten miles in length, along which the base line may be measured. To obtain this the surveyor must clear away all obstructing trees, bridge over ravines and resort to other expedients. Recently the geodetic survey of Canada adopted a novel method in running the base line along the seashore in such a position that half the line is under water at high tide, says Natural Resources of Canada. The location is Oyster bay, British Columbia. Here the rough nature of the land left no option as to the place of the line. In spite of the fact that part of the line was under water several hours every day, the marking posts driven into the sand held firm and the measurements made while the tide was out proved entirely satisfactory.

The Eternal Life

By Nathan Howard Gist

THE world places a premium on attainment. It praises the man who gets things done. It erects hi sstatue in our parks and public squares that young manhood and womanhood may catch inspiration from his life, and emulate his virtues. Halls of fame give him fitting recognition and a large place. Music, literature, all art immortalize him.

Historical text-books make him the hero who led that others might follow. Great men come in groups. Epochs make them, and they make great epochs. Each is dependent on the other.

Human greatness is largely a matter of attainment. A man is great or small according to what he is able to give the world. But his output must show visible achievements and tangible results.

Now all of this is well enough. No fault can be found with such rewards, except that greatness through attainment never tells the story. The whole story cannot be related because there is much greatness of the heart. It is greatness not through doing, but in being.

In the long last effort, rather than attainment, is the greatness that counts. To disregard effort is to minimize the very force that holds the world together.

Many of the finest achievements of the world are not lasting. They are ephemeral. Books, schools and churches, empires and great nations have all lived their allotted time, accomplished their quota of good, and then perished. Such achievements are not failures by any means, but any of them may suffer the fate of oblivion.

But what about noble efforts? What about character, and service, and righteousness? What about example?

Easter is the crowning Sunday of the year because it teaches that lesson year after year. It ever brings forth the potent truth that the life eternal is the life that knows God serves the great teacher Who brought life and immortality to light, and finds life's deepest and truest meaning in service and worthy example.

There is no death when things are considered in that light. The Eternal life is measured by the immortal things of the spirit, and not by the mortal things of the flesh. It is a matter of quality, and not of quantity. It is indestructible because it is of God. It lives for all time. Not long quiescent, it is ever alive and awake to the building of the best world of which human minds, and hearts, and hands, are capable.

This is life Eternal. It is the joy and triumph of the Easter morn.

The Place Where Our Lord Lay

THE place where the Lord lay, from whence He came on Easter Sunday, the firstborn from the dead, may not have been the site of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem, after all!

Recent investigations incline many to the belief that Gen. "Chinese" Gordon was nearer right in picking upon a tomb in the rock, which has the form "of a skull," and is probably the Golgotha of the crucifixion outside the city wall of Jerusalem, as being Joseph of Arimathea's appointed burial place. St. John tells us: "Now in the place where He was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sep-cher, wherein was never man yet laid. There laid they Jesus therefore, because of the Jews' Preparation day; for the sepulcher was nigh at hand." That presupposes a tomb close to the place of execution, and makes probable General Gordon's presumption. St. Mark says further that the sepulcher was hewn out of a rock," as is also his tomb.

At any rate so probable did it appear that this was the garden tomb, that in 1894 Miss Louisa Hope, an English lady, and others bought the property and formed a society to keep the garden and tomb "sacred as a quiet spot and preserved on the one hand from desecration and on the other and from superstitious uses."

Easter Lilies

By Mabel W. Phillips

IN THE vast aisles of His temple,
Where a hundred soft lights glow,
Pouring through the stained-glass windows
Over lilies pure as snow;
He is walking midst the silence,
Listening blossoms bow their heads
To His voice so low and gentle
That a benediction sheds.

In the dim aisles of His temple,
When the lights have ceased to glow,
He still lingers midst the fragrance
Gently pacing to and fro;
Hark! the anthem of the angels
Wakes the dawn, for Christ is near;
Vibrant is each tender flower,
For the night is reft of fear.

In the hushed aisles of His temple,
As the organ music grows,
He is standing midst the lilies,
See the light that o'er them flows?
Safe they rest upon His bosom
Fadeless through eternity,
Stooping with the lamb held gently
Even thus He stoops to me.

Easter Brings Message of Assurance

ARCHEOLOGISTS exploring the 3,400-year-old tomb of King Tut-Ankh-Amen are impressed with the evidences of the ancient ruler's belief in immortality. Everything in the sepulcher proclaims his expectation of a future life. Ancient Egypt believed as firmly as does modern Christendom that for the soul there is no death.

Indeed, the memory of man runneth not back to the time when he did not look forward to a hereafter and express his belief in some way. This belief, apparently, is inborn in human consciousness, a characteristic of all the ages of the race.

The doctrine of the resurrection is not new. The pagan before the Christian era glimpsed the truth. Nature proclaimed it to him in the bursting of the buds and the song of the birds in the springtime. In the seasons he read a confirmation of his belief.

But the Christian, fortunately, has something more than the pleasing symbols of nature to fortify and strengthen his belief in immortality. The materialist may read his fate in the processes of the natural world, but the Christian finds his assurance in the well-authenticated, personally conveyed message from the Creator Himself.

Before Christ men merely speculated on the future, prompted by their beliefs and wishes. When He broke the bonds of death and became "the first fruits of them that slept," He threw a flood of light upon the gates of eternity that forever solved the mystery and illumined the way to the future for all mankind.

Easter, the anniversary of the resurrection of the Son of God, brings a message of assurance and victory to every soul. It cheers with the proclamation that all are citizens of the eternal. It enables men to look across the grave and hurl defiance at death. With the proper understanding of this divine message, the capability of men becomes unlimited, for they know that this life is only the beginning.

Without the courage that this day inspires, life would not be worth the living.

The Message of Easter

By Rachel Ann Neiswender

LIFE is a gift eternal,
How do I know 'tis so?
Because I have planted a tiny seed,
Then watched a flower grow.
I have seen the leaves come tumbling down.
Then spring, and a budding tree,
Oh, God's outdoors so big and wide,
Has told its secrets to me.

Now at this gladsome Easter
When the world is bursting with song,
Let us face life with high endeavor,
Let us bury the old year's wrong.
Let us take from it only the lessons,
The good, that comes sifting through,
Let us cherish the hope that is given
And cling to the paths that are true.

The Lizard

When you have landed and walked a mile or so along the coast you begin to realize the nature of the charm of this loviest peninsula. It is color, in a word; color which changes with the changing sky, and is always striking, always varied. The Land's End region is severe and somber from its granite walls; not so the Lizard, whose very variety persuades to deliberate methods. The purple, black and orange of the rocks; the white, pink and purple of the heather; it is sacrilege to pass them by with a hurried glance. You gaze and gaze, yet are not satisfied. An artist may steal on his canvas an idea of the beauties of Kynance cove; I watched one doing it; and confessed that the brush is mightier than the pen.—Harry Christopher Minchin, in Talks and Traits.

Traffic Law Really Is Aid to Motor Driver

The traffic law deals with two classes of drivers. There is the man who is bent only on beating the game, who will violate all the laws with a light heart if he thinks he can get away with it, or if the penalty seems less than the immediate profit. The law must deal with the problem of catching, restraining and penalizing this irresponsible driver; and in dealing with him, harshness should be the keynote.

On the other hand, by far the larger proportion of motorists come in contact with the law only in what should be its beneficent aspects. To them, the law need be only a set of agreed upon principles for insuring that all of us drive to the least interference with any of us. It specifies certain equipment which we must carry, not with the view of forcing us to carry it, but in order that we may have a convenient and authoritative standard of reference. It prescribes the manner of our driving, in general and in particular circumstances, not with the idea that we need to have a club held over us, but again so that each of us may have a standard by which to forecast the probable conduct of the other fellow.

In defining and enforcing these and other necessary standards, the law can afford to err on the side of lenience. It can often correct without penalizing. It can even more often impose a light penalty as a mere jog to the offender's memory, it can and should reserve the display of its teeth for the habitual or the wanton violator.—Scientific American.

Daylight Saving Is Not Popular in Italy

Daylight saving is unpopular in Italy because of the name the government ascribed to it. At least that is former Premier Nitti's laughing explanation. The new time was called the "legal hour."

With the advent of spring, says Mr. Kenneth L. Roberts in Europe's Morning After, the Italian government ordered that all clocks be set back an hour so that the people might have the advantage of an extra hour of daylight. But in Italy, as in other countries, a large number of people didn't like the arrangement, and so they made a frightful uproar and organized strikes against the "legal hour." The street railway employees, for example, were striking; I asked one of them his reasons.

"The new hour," said he, "makes it necessary for us to get up too early in the morning. Everything is foggy and dark."

I reminded him that the new hour saved coal for the nation and gave him an extra hour of daylight when his work was done.

"Yes," he said, "but it is too foggy and dark when we get up."

"Our mistake," declared Nitti, "was in calling it 'the legal hour.' We should have known that no true Italian would have endured it. We should have called it 'the illegal hour.' Then every Italian would have been unanimously in favor of it!"

Materials in Straw Hats

In the United States straw hats are made from braid that is chiefly imported from Italy, China and Japan, says the Detroit News. Of the various materials which go into the fabrication of plaited hatgear the most important is wheaten straw. The straw must have a length of "pipe" between the knots and must possess a clear, delicate golden color and must not be brittle. The most valuable straw is from Tuscany, and from the Tuscan plaits the leghorn hats are made. Many substances besides straw are used in braids for hats and bonnets. Among these may be noticed willow and cane, as well as palm.

The famous panama hats are made from the leaves of the screw pine.

Nearly Killed by Bats

Attacked by what he declares was a swarm of a thousand bats, Joseph Morasky, Southern Pacific station agent at Imlay, relates a weird story of a recent trip he made through a cave in a mountain six miles east of Imlay. Morasky says he lowered himself into the mouth of the cave, and after proceeding through a natural tunnel and down an incline for about 200 feet came into a large chamber. This chamber was the home of the bats, and he says they began an infuriated attack upon him, and declares that he owes his life to the fact that he wore a very heavy cap, coat and gloves. His clothes were badly torn when he finally emerged from the cave.—Reno News in Sacramento Bee.

Value of Egyptian Irrigation

Irrigation work, including the Assuan dam in Egypt, has cost to date about $53,000,000, but the increase in the value of land in middle and lower Egypt and in the Fayum province has been from $955,000,000 to $2,440,000,000 and the total rent from this area of land has risen from $82,000,000 to $190,000,000. This is what the irrigation engineer has done for Egypt in two decades.

Dynamiting the Mosquito

Man has begun to use high explosives in his war against insects. Dynamite, which we usually think of in connection with the destruction of big things, is now being employed against little mosquitoes. It is used to blast these dangerous disease-carrying pests out of existence by digging ditches which drain the mosquito grounds.

Poisonous Snakes Are Pets of Zoo Keeper

At Port Elizabeth, South Africa, attached to the natural history museum and aviary, is a large "snake garden," where poisonous reptiles live in perfect freedom, among their natural surroundings, says the New York World. The garden is, of course, cut off from the rest of the world by a concrete wall.

Its keeper is a negro who has worked in the snake garden from the days of his childhood and has actually succeeded in building up a real friendship with his charges. Protected only by gauntlet gloves and leather puttees, with his other clothing merely the regulation uniform of the museum, he fearlessly enters the inclosure and freely handles his pets.

When one considers that the majority of the snakes in the garden are of the most deadly varieties—the African cobra, the puff-adder and the fer-de-lance among others—one would think twice before offering to swap jobs with the keeper of the reptile house.

Poisonous snakes are popularly believed to be untamable, but the negro keeper at Port Elizabeth seems to prove that, if not actually affectionate, they can be persuaded by kindness to tolerate human companionship.

The snakes in the Port Elizabeth garden are not used for display purposes only. Their venom, extracted, is used in the preparation of serums and antidotes for snake-bite.

Auto Driving Making Pigeon-Toed People

As a result of continual automobile driving, Americans are becoming pigeon-toed, according to the statement of Dr. Carl Hunt of New York city, after extensive research to determine the cause of a marked tendency to "toe in" on the part of a large percentage of the population in large cities. Complaints of pains in the right foot, which are becoming common, also are attributed by him to the same cause.

"Automobile drivers are developing a new form of foot trouble that in many cases becomes actual deformity," says Doctor Hunt. "Ever since the advent of the foot accelerator, my car-driving patients, in ever increasing numbers, have complained of pains in the outer side of the middle third of the right foot, particularly when walking. In most cases I have found that with correction of the position of the foot on the accelerator, manual manipulations, simple exercises, and properly fitting shoes, the trouble has disappeared."—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Bug That Stabs Potato Bug

Against the devastating potato bug, the United States Department of Agriculture is marshaling an army of enemy soldier bugs, popularly known as "stink bugs."

Every time a potato parasite clashes with one of these deadly antagonists, potato plants are just one bug safer. For the soldier bug usually wins. Advancing to the attack, he jabs a spear-like beak into a soft spot in his prey's armor. Barbs at the tips of the jaws keep the spear inserted. The doomed potato bug at first feigns death, then begins a frantic scrambling over obstacles to shake off its assailant. Exhaustion finally leaves the potato bug at the mercy of the soldier bug's appetite, which sates itself on the blood and juices of the victim.—Popular Mechanics.

Mammals of California

There are 2,000,000,000 mammals in California. Half of these are burrowing rodents, such as ground squirrels, kangaroo rats and gophers, which give farmers much trouble. Dr. Joseph Grinnell of the University of California, however, has a good word to say for gophers and such. Fossils show that they have been in existence at least 200,000 years and he has figured out on one tract of land that in that time gophers have given the soil the equivalent to 3,400 plowings to a depth of six inches. It is all right to keep them off artifically cultivated land but in other areas, the plowing and fertilization furnished by them is invaluable.

Why Bread Becomes Stale

Dr. Katz, a Dutch inventor, has been trying to discover what makes bread grow stale. He has found, it is reported, that low temperature is the chief cause. Bread kept at 140 degrees Fahrenheit was quite fresh at the end of 48 hours, but when the temperature was reduced to 122 degrees the bread began to grow stale and continued to increase in staleness down to about three degrees below the freezing point. Beyond that staleness grew less until at the temperature of liquid air the bread had again become perfectly fresh. It is suggested that bread can be kept fresh by placing it in a fireless cooker immediately after it is removed from the oven.

Penalized

"Why do you always use 'whilst' in place of 'while'?" asked the city editor of the new reporter.

"Because I think it's a nicer word."

"All right," said the editor. "I think you'd better work in the janitorial department for a whilst."—Boston Transcript.

LOST—Ralph Elder wants the Times to assist in a nation wide search for his flock of four ducks. Two of the ducks have green heads (they must be Irish) and the other two are sort of brown colored. Now if anybody have seen these tramp ducks please phone Ralph. They left home a week or two ago. Now the reason we are so anxious to have the ducks discvered is that Ralph has promised to put their wanderjngs to an end and they will adorn the inside of his wife's roaster—and we are invited to the feed and would like to adorn the inside of our tummy with one of thise green headed waddlers. Thanks!

USE BOMB TO START PANIC

Adventurers Set Off Harmless Missile in Gambling Room in Spain So They Can Seize Money.

Never before have Biarritz, Pau, St. Jean de Luz and other holiday resorts in the Pyrenees and the south of France received such a large number of American guests as was the case this year. So full was every one of these favored spots that the difficulty of finding accommodation was almost insurmountable. With the high exchange value of the dollar, the Americans found everything cheap, in spite of the unusually exaggerated prices. Spain was visited daily by numerous caravans of Americans, and on racing or bull-fighting days the train and motor-car services were utterly inadequate for transporting the hosts of intending visitors.

Just before the close of the season at San Sebastian several Americans tasted a certainly rare and perhaps unique emotion in the principal gambling room of the Grand casino. All the tables were surrounded by a triple row of players and spectators. Just as a croupier was declaiming the ritual formula, "Rien ne va plus," there was a loud bang, as if a bomb had exploded under one of the tables.

A panic ensued, "jetons" were scattered on the floor, a few ladies fainted and some of the more unscrupulous of the gamblers collected ivory discs worth some thousands of pesetas. A few moments later the mystery was explained. Some members of the gangs of adventurers who frequent pleasure resorts had placed under one of the tables a harmless bomb in order to cause a panic and enable them to secure any money that might be ready to their hands.

A witty young American woman who had been playing at the bombed table said afterward in the dancing salon that she had had the pleasure of seeing the bank "broken," not by the good luck of a gambler, but by gunpowder. "That," she added, "had made a long journey really worth while."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Did He Get Promoted?

At one of the southern cantonments during the war a recruit from Iowa was doing guard duty at some little distance from the entrance to the camp. Late at night he suddenly saw a figure approaching him and, drawing up his full height, the doughboy shouted, "Halt, who goes there?" "Camp commander," came from the rider. "Dismount and advance to be recognized," sang out the guard. Slowly the rider complied and advanced toward the guard. "Halt!" A snappy rifle salute. "All right, colonel, you may pass." Slowly and laboriously, the somewhat corpulent commander remounted his horse. As he started to ride off a thought seemed to strike him. "By the way, sentry, who posted you here?" "Nobody, sir," grinned the soldier; "I was just practicing."

Only Escape From High Rent.

The only way to get away from paying such high rents is to own one's home. Costs of construction have advanced also and real estate is higher than ever before, but the land will be dearer still as time goes on, while there is no indication that building will ever be cheaper. The most important consideration to the average family is that a home is bought with money that otherwise would have gone for rent, plus a little more that would have been spent for nonessential things and for extravagances.

The habit of saving, or rather of avoiding wastefulness, is taught by buying a home. That good habit is retained after the home is paid for and usually takes the form of savings bank deposits.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Mme. Lopokova, the famous dancer, tells a story of an actor friend of hers whose wife had arranged that he take her young sister, visiting them from the country, to a matinee. The actor's wife was to meet them at the end of the performance, but before they appeared a woman friend, also a "professional," came out. "Pardon me, my dear," said the actor's wife, "but did you happen to see my husband in the stalls with a girl?" "No, my dear, I did not," said the actress' friend, "but if I had, I most certainly should not tell you."

AFTER AN OPERATION

Mrs. Wilke Couldn't Get Back Her Strength Until She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rochester, Minnesota.—"I had a very serious operation and it seemed as if I could not get my health back after it. I suffered with pain almost constantly. My sister came to help take care of me, and she was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for nervousness and a run-down condition. She had me try some of it, and in a very few days' time I began to feel better. In two weeks I hardly knew myself and after taking a couple of bottles more I was up and helping around, and now I am strong and healthy again and am still taking it. It is a pleasure for me to write this to you, and I hope that many other women who are suffering like I was will find out about your medicine. I will give any information I possibly can."—Mrs. JAMES WILKE, 933 E. Center Street, Rochester, Minn.

Remember, the Vegetable Compound has a record of fifty years of service and thousands of women praise its merit, as does Mrs. Wilke.

THE FAIRY

SYNOPSIS.—On the banks of the Wabash stand Texie Colin and Jack Warhope, young and very much in love. Texie is the only daughter of old Pap Simon, rich man and money-lender. Jack is the orphan bound boy of Pap Simon, who had foreclosed a mortgage on the Warhope estate. At first Texie and Jack talk sadly of Ken Colin, the girl's missing brother. Then Jack says that in ten days his servitude will be over, that he will ride out into the big world to seek his fortune. Both know what that will mean to them. Texie and Jack talk of the red lock of "Red Colin," inherited by Ken. And Jack says he's coming back as soon as he finds gold in California. Then arrives the new preacher, Rev. Caleb Hopkins. Pap Simon introduces the villagers to the new preacher, who was a college mate of Ken. At supper at the Colin home the preacher tells how the boy killed a gambler and disappeared. His father attributes Ken's fall from grace to his red lock of hair. Then Pap Simon has a sort of stroke, brought on by reading a letter from Ken, "somewhere in New York," who curses his father on his death bed. A postscript by another hand says he is dead. At the village store and post office Loge Belden, a newcomer, says he saw the new parson with his arm around Texie. Jack licks him, shoots a pistol from his hand and makes him say he was mistaken. The preacher and the villagers go fishing. Jack discovers the preacher carries a six-gun. A footprint on a concealed houseboat fits the preacher's boot. A drunken ruffian disturbs a village festival and stabs Jack in the shoulder. The preacher makes him leave.

The morning was far gone when the woodsman finished his task at the feed-pens.

As he stood leaning against the fence, the events of the day before crossed his mind—the heelprints on the dusty deck of the concealed houseboat; the ivory-handled six-gun; the spark of flint that had transformed the peering eyes of the preacher when he faced the desperado's knife. From this, his mind reverted to the words of Belden about what he had seen in the little park.

A face rose before him—a face compelling in its easy suavity—that, in spite of its studious severity, seemed to have a strange fascination for Texie. He knew she had let him walk home with her from the festival—a privilege that meant more in the Flatwoods than anywhere else in the world. A deep breath came up out of his breast; his hand gripped the fence rail hard.

But many an insistent task lay waiting. The thought roused him. As he raised his arm to put on his hat, the sweat got at the cut in his shoulder and stung him.

He had intended to haul in some shock corn from the bottoms. He frowned toward the wagon; plucked the blouse loose about his shoulder; finally went up into the woods to inspect a string of rail fence that would have to be repaired before the stock cattle could be turned out of the lower lots into the upland pasture.

He had spent some time readjusting fallen rails and straightening crooked panels when a tiny spot of color in a corner of the fence caught his eye. For some reason it arrested his instant attention. In a moment he was down on his knees parting the weeds and tangled brambles where a yellow orchid had just unfolded the mysteries of its enchanted slipper to the sun.

He rose to his feet after a time, but stood gazing down at the flower—a spot of gold in its mean setting.

Stopping a few minutes later to ease his shoulder a bit, he happened to glance over the fence into the woods. The act was purely involuntary, but a sight met his eyes that instantly drove every other consideration out of his mind—from behind a log a man was glowering at him.

He ducked out of sight in a flash, and the woodsman stooped to his task—carelessly; without so much as the flick of an eye to betray that he had seen anything at all—but he had caught a distinct view of a slouch hat, a rough flannel shirt, open at the collar, a glare of dark eyes that smoldered in a face dark and scowling and covered with a stubble of black beard—the desperado of the festival.

Texie's startled whisper, as she had fastened the bandages about his shoulder the evening before, flashed across his thought. The face behind the log and the face of his memory rose to his mind as distinct as a reflection in Whispering spring. Unbelievable though it was—against all reason in the light of that terrible letter—he saw the resemblance she had fancied—vague, half intangible, but none the less a resemblance.

With the tail of his eye on the log, the woodsman went on with his work, apparently absorbed in it, really with no other thought than to put as great a length of fence row as possible between himself and that scowling face, and in as short a time as was prudent.

The moment he thought himself out of sight, he took out a rail of the fence, crawled through the opening and, with every caution known to woodcraft, crept back through the underbrush toward the log. The broken outline of it at last came into view through a clump of hazel. He raised his head ever so little and lay listening. Not a false note disturbed the soft purr of nature; the pulse of the woods beat normal. He dropped his head; crawled up to the log. The leaves were flattened and still warm, but the man was gone.

He searched the moss and leaves until he found the trail—the scrape of a boot in a spot of moist ground at the foot of an oak. After that it was easy. There were two sets of tracks. To his surprise one set led back toward the cliffs above the homestead. He followed it. At a point along the bluffs that commanded the nearest view of the cabin under the crimson rambler the mussed leaves and broken weeds beneath a clump of bushes at the very brink of the rocks showed where the renegade had concealed himself. Three half-burned matches, with which he had probably lighted his pipe, indicated that he had remained some time.

Jack glanced down at the tiny cabin, the barn-lot, turned and followed the trail back under the trees.

Past the log it led, away to the north, down the face of the wooded bluff and into the narrow road that threaded Eagle hollow. He followed it within sight of the rude hovel at the head of the hollow into which Loge Belden and his sister had lately moved; stopped; studied the place critically for a moment; finally turned, climbed the bluff and, with an uncomfortable feeling of hidden eyes upon him, returned to his task at the fence.

The forenoon was gone by the time he finished it. As he trudged back, the corner where he had found the yellow orchid drew his eye irresistibly.

Raking away the dead leaves he dug it up, being careful to leave enough soil about the roots to prevent their withering, and carried it in his hands out through the trees and up among the tumbled ramparts of Black rock.

In the tiny flower bed at the foot of the sandstone pinnacle where the three names were carved, he hollowed out a place in the rich leaf-mold and set the orchid with the others—all of them doubtless having come there at different times in the same way; rose to his feet and stood deeply pondering, as his gaze rested on the three names carved in the rock. That baffling resemblance, in spite of him, would creep back into his thought.

The bold frankness of the man's face settled to a deeper thoughtfulness; he looked down at the new orchid among the old, fresh and piquant as when he dug it out of the fence corner; glanced toward the red-roofed cottage, and set his feet to the rough path that led down to the fallow yard.

CHAPTER VIII

The Fairy's Secret.

The furnishings of the cabin under the crimson rambler would have been a revelation to a stranger entering the door for the first time. A soft-toned rug from the Orient covered three-fourths of the rough floor, stopping just short of the cook stove, which, with its array of utensils, occupied the other fourth. The bed was high posted and canopied, dressed in the finest linen and hung with faded tapestry. The chairs were handsomely upholstered, while a center table of hand-carved rosewood stood in the mid-section of the floor.

Along the south wall an American flag of silk hung draped, and under its lopped-up center two pictures—the beautiful face of a woman; and in the companion frame, the fine, upstanding figure of a soldier in the uniform of a colonel of Mounted Rangers—the man and the woman who had dreamed the dream that never came true.

The woodsman had finished his task at the barn and feedpens that evening and returned to the cabin, where, deeply thoughtful he was half mechanically building a fire in the cook stove when his quick ear caught the sound of a light step coming along the path from the orchard. He laid down the kindling and turned toward the door.

The light step had stopped, and Texie stood outlined in the doorway, her eyes dancing alive over the thought of having taken the alert woodsman by surprise, the round wonder of her throat and cheeks touched to a softer blush by the waning sunlight that slipped in under the crimson rambler.

The man dragged off his hat. The girl glanced over the cabin; lifted her eyes.

"Jack, you're the best housekeeper in the Flatwoods."

The floor creaked with the weight of him as he came to the door. He had to stoop to pass under the lintel, and his massive shoulders spread almost from jamb to jamb.

"It ain't me," he said in his slow way. "There's a wonderful fairy about these hills som'er's that slips in when I'm off in the fields, and no matter

"Why Don't Y'u Try Some Day t'—Trap Your—Fairy?"

how upside down I've left things, she jist touches 'em with them small hands fairies has got, 'r mebbe says 'r sings some wonderful charm to 'em, and when I come back, there they are, all spick and span. Some folks says ther' ain't no fairies, but I know ther' is—one, anyhow."

The girl's expressive face was alive and eager.

"Why don't y'u try some day t'—trap your—fairy?"

The heart of the big woodsman rose to his eyes. For a transcendent moment the man in him, sprung from generations of soldiers and gentlemen, supremely dominated the bound boy. He drank in the wonder of her hair, the plump soft mystery of her throat and bosom, and his hands instinctively reached toward her.

"I'd give the world—!"

He stopped; the transcendent moment passed. He dropped his eyes and crushed his hat rim in his powerful fingers.

The girl bent her head and a deep thoughtfulness filmed the brown of her eyes.

"Jack—!"

He felt the slight tremor in her voice and half guessed what was coming.

"That face las' night—it ha'nts me."

Involuntarily he glanced up at the high brink of the cliff, where, under a clump of bushes, lay some mussed leaves and a pinch of pipe ashes.

"Don't let it," was his slow answer. "There's the pilot of the Obenchain, now, looks a pow'rful sight like Lark Sharp, and they ain't a mite of kin in the world."

She pondered the answer and seemed much impressed, even relieved, as he fancied.

"How's Pap Simon t'day?"

"Por father! He ain't hardly left the house sence that—night. He's wrote and wrote, and looked at papers in 'is safe I didn't know 'e had, and this afternoon he had Zeke Polick up with his notary public seal." A shadow flitted across her face. She laced her smooth fingers; gripped them. "That—terrible letter! He's read it and read it. Pore Ken—!"

The man reached his arm up over the door; absently felt a spray of rose vine, its buds swollen big with the mystery that was soon to be revealed. The girl glanced at the hand among the rosebuds and slowly turned to the frank and thoughtful face.

"And make my father's—and mother's—dream come true."

An Early Start.

The Groom—I was never so rattled in all my life.

The Bride—And you acted so cool and collected. Oh, Jack, how could you begin deceiving me even at the altar?

SEEK TO IMPORT ILLITERATE LABOR

A few selfish American business interests are seeking to import an "illiterate labor class" as virtual slaves, Garland W. Powell, director of Americanism of the American Legion, charged in Atlanta, Ga. Powell's declaration was made during the course of an address before an illiteracy conference called by the Legion for the state of Georgia.

The Legion man read a letter from a New York commercial organization which stated that the board wanted this country to admit illiterate immigrants. "If we exclude all illiterates, we would be without labor," the letter said.

Powell said these people seek to establish a condition of industrial slavery. He declared that they attempted to explain away their attitude by saying that without illiterates the nation would be without labor, when the fact really is that they desire illiterates so that they can have unintelligent, unthinking labor. Powell further charged that such interests were seeking to increase immigration so that they might enjoy the swollen profits that otherwise would in some measure go to intelligent labor. He added that such a move would lower the standards of education and living.

The letter to which he referred said, in part:

"We notice . . . the slogan in the first page of your leaflet which reads as follows: 'No Illiteracy by 1927.' It is not quite clear what this slogan means. If it means that no illiterates are to be admitted into the United States as immigrants, it raises a serious question and the board would not approve such stoppage. The labor class is one that we do not raise in the United States; it must be imported. If we exclude all illiterates, we would be without labor."

This idea, according to Mr. Powell, means that a large section of business believes that America does not believe in the dignity of labor. It believes that America must go on and on, importing "the scum and riff-raff of Europe, until the majority of our people is composed of scum and riff-raff."

These things, he declared, are absolutely opposed by the American Legion. He argued that under present immigration laws of America, foreign nations make sure that the emigrants leaving their shores are of a low type of humanity, almost impossible of assimilation here.

Agree on Site for New War Memorial in Boston

Site for a World war memorial in Boston, to be built from surplus funds from the state bonus has been agreed on by veterans' societies. This has ended long discussion by members of the American Legion and other organizations extending over nearly two years.

A contention of certain veterans was that the funds be redistributed proportionately to the towns from whence the money came. About $2,000,000 remains in the fund, and it has been voted by representatives of the societies that the money shall be expended on a state shrine, in no way devoted to utilitarian purposes. The location settled on, according to the recent conference, is to be next to the state house, bounded by Mt. Vernon and Beacon streets from north to south and by the state house and Joy street from east to west.

Eight members of the Legion committee acted on the proposal, and voted in favor of the project.

Community Homes to Be Built in California

Construction of American Legion homes in eight different communities in Contra Costa county, California, will be started this spring. According to Morgan Keaton, department adjutant of the organization, the appropriation of $240,000 will be necessary for this work and approximately $13,000 will be allocated to each community.

Under the California law, recently upheld by the State Supreme court, a county is given authority to set aside such funds for erection of a community home for use of veterans, once all the money is paid into the county treasury. The act was passed in 1921. The erection of the homes is under direction of the county boards of supervisors and groups of veterans in each county.

Dig Through Snow to Visit Veteran Patients

Heavy snowstorms completely isolated the Sunnyrest sanitarium for disabled ex-service men near Racine, Wis. As members of the Legion's sick committee from the Racine post had previously announced that they would visit the sanitarium on a certain date, they set out through the snow to fill the engagement in order that the patients might have the little items of personal comfort prepared by the Legion. Two of the men, Ell Hannon and Lester Bowman, were forced to shovel snow more than half a mile in order to get their car through, but they arrived at the time set, and brought first news of the outside world to the veteran patients in several days.

"Uneasy Lies the Head"

I'd rather have a good digestion than a throne; and so, I imagine, would the king and his eldest son. Few people realize that his majesty suffers from chronic indigestion, and how an earth he manages to smile as much as he does passes my comprehension. The prince of Wales inherits his father's complaint, and is the despair of his hosts and hostesses because he practically lives on eggs and farinaceous fodder. His most solid dish is chicken—and even that has to be chopped up very finely for him. Yet he manages as a rule to appear in the pink of condition, and his natural nervousness and fidgetiness (he can hardly keep still for five minutes together) are admirably camouflaged in public.—London Mail.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES

What the Iowa Legislators Are Doing at Special Session For Code Revision

A permit fee of $100 will be charged for water power sites of the state in addition to an annual inspection fee of $25 under the terms of the mill dams and water power improvement bill passed by the Iowa house. The bill which seeks to encourage the development of the water power resources of the state, also provides that the state executive council may assess an annual license fee in the nature of an occupational tax on the different power improvements of the state in proportion to their size and earning capacity. Proponents of the measure in urging its adoption claimed that fixing the tax will force corporations now in control of power plant sites either to develop them or relinquish them to other interests that will. The bill was passed after a two hour debate, in the course of which several amendments were added to the bill as originally drawn.

Representative Edson of Buena Visto county, chairman of the house highways committee, recently prepared some figures on the relative costs of paving and graveling highways and maintaining the two types of surfacing. Edson's figures are estimates of twenty-year cost of paving compared with graveling. Setting the construction cost of paving at $30,000 per mile and of graveling at $5,000 per mile, annual maintenance of paving at $150 per mile and of graveling at $600 per mile, and annual interest at 5 per cent on paving at $1,500 and gravel at $250, the figures show cost of paving in a twenty-year period of $63,000 and of graveling of $22,000. The saving on gravel at the end of twenty years, Edson's totals indicate, would be sufficient to pave a mile of road and leave a surplus of $10,000.

The Iowa house indulged in a little horseplay at the expense of speaker J. H. Anderson of Winnebago county. The speaker was interested in a legalizing act affecting his county and, when a storm of bitter protest against the bill appeared, he took the floor in defense of the measure. The act merely corrects an error made by the county board, but during debate it was described as rivalling the oil scandal in its iniquity. Anderson didn't see the joke until on roll call, with the bill apparently snowed under, all representatives suddenly switched their votes and passed it unanimously.

Speaker Anderson has appointed as conferees on the budget bill Representatives Moen of Lyon, Harrison of Pottawattamie, Hauge of Polk and Quirk of Sac. These men will meet with Senators Smith of Madison, Banta of Delaware, Scott of Marshall, and Shaff of Clinton to work out a bill which will pass both houses, if possible. The four senators are supporters of the Smith amendments, and it is believed at least two of the house committee are not unalterably opposed to it. Three members from each house must agree to a conference report.

The special session differs from the regular session in that action must be taken on each code bill. In a regular session scores of measures die in the hands of a sifting committee the closing weeks of the session. But if the special session fails to act on a single code revision bill, revision will be incomplete to that extent and would mean the printing of a new revised code with dead matter in it or with obsolete laws therein which have been repealed but carried on the state law books because of no opportunity to take them off.

The bill amending the Iowa road laws to permit counties to vote on issuing bonds for graveling their portions of the primary and secondary road systems, which are senate passed Wednesday will meet stiff opposition in the house, it was indicated recently. The house does not object so much to submitting the question to voters whether bonds shall be issued for graveling their roads, as to other features of the senate bill which gives the highway commission more authority than the house is willing to accord it.

The senate passed the codification measures pertaining to qualification of public school teachers, leaving the present law in all but two particulars. Senator Smith of Madison tacked an amendment to the bill requiring all county superintendents to hold state certificates. Under the present law, county superintendents were eligible to office after fifteen years of teaching experience. Senator Fulton of Jefferson amended the bill to require teach of the constitution of the United States in public schools.

The state fair bill, to which the senate added an amendment changing the method of electing district directors from vote by all the delegates to the annual meeting to vote for district delegates in separate district caucuses, was reported out of conference committee with recommendation that the senate recede from its amendments. If this report were adopted, the present law would be retained.

Lieut. Gov. John Hammill appointed the senate conference committee on the budget bill, which will work with a similar committee from the house to be named by Speaker Anderson, on a bill satisfactory to both houses, if possble.

Prospects of a statewide budget being enacted during this session of the Iowa legislature brigtened with the announcement of the house conference committee which is believed to favor expansion of the bills now in controversy, to make the final measure apply to all political subdivision of the states.

Agitation for a gasoline tax law at this special session of the legislature is growing and a bill seems certain to get before one house or the other before the session adjourns. A bill, providing for a tax of 2 cents per gallon, to be levied on gasoline at the point of removal from tank cars in the state, has been drawn by the code commissioners at the request of numerous senators and representatives. The bill provides for distribution of the receipts of the tax as follows: One third to the primary system in each county in the proportion its primary road mileage bears to the total primary road mileage and two-thirds to the county roads on the same distributive ratio of secondary county road mileage to total secondary mileage in the state. The money would be expended on secondary roads equally between county and township systems.

Amendments to the motor vehicle bill were the enactment of a boulevard stop requirement, elimination of the provision against blowing traction engine whistles on the highway, insertion of a requirement that all drivers come to a full stop when entering a highway from an alley or private drive and prohibition of parking before the entrance to a hotel. The truck license fee of $15 was made to apply to trucks weighing from one-half ton to one ton instead of from on to two tons.

J. C. Mabry, member of the Iowa code commission resigned and announced that he would sail for Europe for a three months' trip May 1st. The house held a short session to express appreciation for the work which Mabry has done in preparing code bills for enactment. He made a short speech declaring that his work was completed since all the bills which he personally had a hand in preparing had either been passed by both houses or reported out of committees.

Steps to expedite completion of the code were taken in the Iowa senate when a banket call of the senate for the remainder of the special session was filed. The call, requiring the attendance of all members, will be effective Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock and continue in force, unless raised by vote of the senate, until adjournment. The house is likely to adopt a similar practice next week.

The senate also repealed the provision of the law that teachers with fifteen years' experience may qualify as county superintendents, without having a state certificate. This section of the law was inserted by the thirty-eighth general assembly in order to legalize the election of one county superintendent. County superintendents in the future must have a state certificate to qualify.

The pools and trust bill which caused so much concern among business interests because of amendments introduced to the original bill and which has been entirely rewritten, is still pending in the house. This has never come on the floor of either house or senate for debate and is the sort of a measure which is liable to consume considerable time when it does come up.

The state board of control will probably start making automobile plates as soon as equipment can be obtained. It has been suggested that the abandoned machinery for plate making at Michigan City, Ind., might be purchased by the Iowa board of control. If the state begins making auto number plates, the motor vehicle department would be required to purchase them.

The big effort of the closing days of the session will be to get together on those measures now in conference. This will of necessity mean much waiting on the legislature as a whole with comparatively little to do. At the same time the members must be on hand to take care of these matters as they are reported out.

The taxation bill which the senate passed with a provision therein providing that bank stock will be assessed not according to its book value but as other property is assessed, is due for consideration. This arrangement leaves it to the local assessor to say what the valuation shall be and there is some objection to it.

There is a considerable group in the house which is against bond issues in any form and will not support a measure which makes such issues possible. Whether or not there will be enough votes in the house to defeat the provisions authorizing bonding for gravel surfacing is a question.

An amendment to the bill codifying the board of educational examiners law requiring all applicants for teachers' certificates to show proficiency in the principles of government and the history of the constitution was adopted in the senate.

The checkered career of the marriage bill in the special session is made still more so by the inability of the conference committee of the house and senate to agree. The committee has so reported, and a new committee will have to be named.

The house, without a dissenting vote, adopted the joint resolution legalizing new contracts by the state board of control for convict labor with outside concerns from July 1st to July 1st, 1927. The resolution now goes to the senate.

Exemption of the insurance commissioner from the law which permits removal from office by a hearing in district court was again insisted upon and the matter will go to a joint conference committee.

Recent bills passed by the Senate: Municipal corporations—Special charter cities. Insurance other than life. To legalize transfer of $510,278.76 from state general fund to board of control support fund. Judiciary committee No. 1. Bonds for performance of public improvement contracts. Judiciary committee. Taxation. County road, bridge and culvert system.

K. H. S. NINE TO PLAY SWALEDALE HERE; TOMORROW

SWALEDALE vs. KLEMME HERE FRIDAY

Schedule for Season Announced, Kanawha Here Picnic Day

TO GO TO TOURNAMENT NEXT WEEK

With a possibility of Stokesbary and Busch back in the line-up the Klemme Shamrocks will open up on Swaledale with a team that will make them work for their few scores Klemme's team has shown some real stuff in their practice the past week Much batting practice is being had. Patet seems to be the real slugger of the squad. He has pounded the pill into very corner of the diamond with apparent ease.

The same battery that was to have been used with Crystal Lake will probably be used on Swaledale tomorrow.

A system of a different captain each week is being used with the team. The captain is appointed for one week by Coach Tregilgus, for spirit and work in practice. The one who is to be captain for the season will be determined by the one who is captain the most times.

Following is th schedule for the season:

April 25 (tomorrow) Swaledale here
May 2 County Tournament at Kanawha.
May 9 Kanawha there
May 16 Swaledale there
May 23 Kanawha here

Be out on the Ball diamond Friday afternoon and boost for the Shamrocks.They're going to od their best for Klemme High but they need your support.

GIRLS RECEIVE "K'S"

Last week the Times carried an article which told about the Boys of the school receiving "K's" as reward for athletic prowness.

It is no more han right that the girls of our school should hav ea similar publicity.

Six girls reveived the "K" which puts thm among the noted of the school. The requirements to get a "K" in girls athletics is to play at least half of the games of the season The girls played eleven games last season. The following are the ones who made the requirements.

Dolores Koerner, Cap't, Elvira Stille, Neota Ridder, Maurine Hake, Bernice Tanner, Merle Blank. Three of them graduate this year two go out next year and Elvira Stille has two more years. Three cheers for the girls.

Crystal Lake Failed to Come

Were you disappointed last Friday? We were. We were all prepared to give Crystal Lake a good trouncing when they failed to appear They reported afterward that they did not have enough eligible playe to come.

HOWDY FOLKS!

Here we are again. Back from six weeks vacation. During this period Maurine Hake and her staff have written thes chool notes. But now we are back into the editorial chair We will endeavor to furnish you with all the scandal of our schools until it closes. We would appreciate the co-operation of our fellw-students in our endeavor to make thes chool column interesting.

If the column pleases you tell us. If it doesn't, forget abut it.

Coach Has an Accident

Coach Tregilgus had a serious accident during the week end

When he came to school Monday morning, he did not look natural. He appeared sickly, he was pale and his face was barren. The little black patch under his nose had entirely disappeared. As human beings are curious, we inquired the reason of all the facial change. He explained that was out riding on the pavement east of Garner and he was in an accident and when he fell, he lit on his face and scraped it. However, we believe it is due to an event which happened on Saturday afternoon; for what we saw was enough to make even coach shave off his mustache.

Tree is Planted in Park by Public Speaking Class

The school observed Arbor week las Tuesday. The Public Speaking class furnished a tree which was planted in the north section of the park. The tree was christened Stacey in honor of our principle. It was an apple tree.

Miss Flessner spent the week end at her home in Palmer, Iowa. In order to make train connections she was absent from school duties for a day and a half. Miss Anna Griewe filled the vacancy satisfactorily.

GRADE EGGS NOW

Farmers Getting Better Prices By Grading Eggs

Last week the merchants who buy eggs and other farm produce commenced to grade all of the eggs which they purchased, with the result that nearly all of the farmers who sold eggs in Hampton last Sathas been received when the ggs had been recvived when the eggs were sold in one lot. Of course there were some exceptions to this general result, but the few who did not benefit by th change were those who were careless in handling the eggs or who were raising chickens which lay only small ggs.

Under the present system of grading eggs, the clean ,smooth eggs of fair size are considered as No. 1, while small, extremely large, dirty washed or checked eggs are calssed as No. 2. Those who are careful in handling eggs they sell and who bring them to market already graded are in hearty accord with the plan of grading eggs and Hampton merchants are anxious for all eggs producers tog rade eggs before bringing them in, that is place all No. 1 eggs in one crate and No. 2 eggs in another crate, or in separate parts of the same crate.

Choice Eggs Four Cents Higher

Last Saturday the Hampton egg buyers paid twenty cents per dozen for No. 1 eggs and sixteen cents per dozen for No. 2 eggs and one busjness house which kept an account of the amount paid out and the amount which would have been paid out under the old method found at the end of the day the egg producers had received over $18 more from that store in one day under the grading system than they would have received under the ungraded system.—Hampton Chronicle.

The thing too many people save for a rainy day is a grouch.

OBITUARY AUGUST SCHLAWIN

August Ferdinand Rudolph Schlawin was born August 10, 1847, at Karzin, Germany. In his early youth he received the sacrament of Holy Baptism and after being duly instructed in God's Word and the fundamentals of the Christian religion, he was, by confirmation, received into the full membership of the Lutheran church.

On December 11, 1871, he was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Ruhnow. This union was blessed with four sons and three daughters; Bernhard who died in infancy, William, Otto, Rheinholdt, Emma, Augusta and Ida. The latter two have also preceded their father in death.

The deceased and family came to Amrica in May, 1890, making their home at Garner, Hancock County, Iowa. Mr. Schlawin later moved on a farm near Garner until he retired in 1912, when the aged couple moved to Klemme to spend the declining years of their life. Soon after Mr. Schlawin came to this country he joined the Reformed church at Garner. Later he became a member of the Ell town Reformed church until he joined the membership of the Klemme congregation in 1912.

For several years Mr. Schlawin's health has not been very good. Heart trouble and dropsy being the chief ailments, causing him great suffering during the last weeks and months of his life. Being well prepared and ready to depart upon his Master's call, he was relieved of his sufferings on Good Friday, April 18, 1924, at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

He leaves to mourn: the aged widow, three sons, one daughter Mrs. Louis Griffen, one sister Mrs. H. Lemke, one brother in Germany, twenty-eight grand children, two great grand children and many relatives and friends. His age was 76 years, 8 months and 8 days.

Much could be said of his character, his Christian life and his interest in the church and Kingdom of God, but we are not permitted to enlarge upon these subjects.

—Rev. A. A. Depping.

RADIO AND MAH JONG SETS TO BE TAXED , TAX MAKERS DECIDE

WASHINGTON,— Radio and mah jong addicts will have to pay something for their priveledge.

Senate tax makers have cut taxes on automobiles and candy, but put 10 per cent levies on radio and mah jong sets. All radio sets costing $15 or more—which means most of those that are sold—will bear 10 per cent tax under the provisions inserted by the senate finance committee. All mah jong sets worth $5 or more must pay 10 per cent. It will just be added to the price, because the manufacturer or importer is to pay it.

"The committee approved the house reduction of automobile prices including the elimination of the 3 per cent tax on trucks, the chassis of which is priced below $1,000 and the 50 per cent reduction on accessories, etc. In addition the senate tax makers approved repeal of the tax on truck bodies sold separately at $200 or less.

By repealing tax on candy the committee estimated that it saved the candy buyers $13,000.00—but that means that somebody else has to put that $13,000.00 into the treasury.

The tax bill positively will be finished by tomorrow night, Senator Smoot said again today and will be reported to the senate early next week.

ACTIVITIES OF HANCOCK COUNTY FARM BUREAU

SHEPPARD-TOWNER CLINICS

Many enrollments have already been made for the Sheppard-Towner Clinics for mothers and their babies being put on by the Hancock County Farm Bureau and the State University co-operating April 29th to May 3rd inclusive. Dr. J. F. Gherkin and Dr. Mary Heard will be the physicians. They are both very prominent in their line of work, and the people of this county are very fortunate to get their services. Miss Carrie Campbell will be the nurse in charge of the clinics with the help of the local women.

These clinics are absolutly free to any one in the county caring to make us of them, whether they live in the town or in the country. Any one wishing to attend the clinics should get in touch with the local chairman in charge of the place where they care to go. This should be done at once as the registrations are coming in quite rapidly, and it is possible to take care of only thirty case in one day.

The following schedule shows the dates and places where the clinics will be held, and the local chairman in charge:—

April 29—Britt High School Building, Mrs. Axel Trulson ,Britt, Chairman.
April 30—Crystal Lake Consoljdated School, Miss Alberta Matson, Britt, Chairman.
May 1—Corwith Consolidated school Mrs. Fred Oxley, Corwith, Chairman.
May 2—Goodell M. E. Church, Mrs. Geo. Luick, Goodell, Chairman.
May 3—Garner. High School Building, Mrs. E. J. Terwilliger, Garner, Chairman.

MILLINERY SCHOOL

Arrangements have been completed for the millinery school to be held at Garner April 28, 29, 30. The school will be for the eight townships on the east side, namely; Madison, Ellington, Concord, Garfield, Liberty, Ell, Avery and Twin Lake. Each township will be permitted to send two representatives to take the course of instruction, and they in turn will give it to a leader from each school district in their township, who will demonstrate the work in their particular district.

There will be three complete days of this work, beginning at 10:00 A. M. and lasting until 4:00 P. M.Every one attending this school will be required to make a hat under the instruction of Miss Allie M. Smith. who has charge of the course. The school will be held at Zeiger's Hall. Mrs. W. J. Elling, County Chairman, has made arrangements with the Leibenstein store at Garner so that shapes, straw, etc, can be purchased there.

SEED CORN VARIETY TEST

Two seed corn vriety test plots will be conducted again this year. These plots will be operated the same as in the past two years, and those interested should send in samples consisting of about twelve to fifteen ears, shelled, for each plot. The corn will be put on a plot that is as uniform as possible and will be given the best of care. In the fall the yield per acre will be determined by husking a certain portion of each sample and testing for moisture.

T. B. TESTING

The testing for Tuberculosis has practically been completed in Ellington and Bingham Townships. There are only a few herds that have not been tested. The test is being applied in Crystal Township at this time, and Britt, Orthel, and Boone will be taken up next in the order named. Every farmer is given an opportunity to test and it is found that the majority of those who did not sign he petitions are willing to sign at this time. At the rate the new signers are coming in, there will probably be 75 per cent signed by July 1st, and as soon as that percent is reached, it will be necessary for every herd in the county to be tested.

In Ell Township there were 2014 cattle tested with 78 reactors; in Bingham Township there were 1158 cattle tested with 42 reactors; in Ellington Township there were 4668 cattle tested with 56 reactors, which makes a total of 7840 head tested with 176 reactors, or 2.2 per cent. 349 herds have been tested.

For the benefit of some who do not clarly undrstand the method of procedure, the following explanation is given: When 51 per cent of the cattle owners signed the petitions that were circulated last fall, the county was declared an area for testing, with the idea of cleaning up Tuberculosis. When 75 per cent have signed the petitions, it becomes necessary for everyone to test. The vetrinarian is employed, who in this case is Dr. E. G. Dunn, who spends his entire time in the county. At the time of starting the test, he farmer on he particular farm and the veterinarian appraise the cattle. In case there are any reactors, the farmer must dispose of them and receive what they bring on the market. He will then receive from the tuberculosis fund two-thirds of the difference between the salvage price and the appraised price, after 5 per cent of the appraisal price of the entire herd has been deducted. There is absolutely no charge of any kind for doing the work. It is free to any cattle owner in the county.

Extra help will probably be hired in the near future and it is hoped to complete the first test by the first of the year. When the tests have been compleed, and the re-tests on the infected herds, and it is found that the percentage of Tuberculosis is less than one-half of one per cent, all hogs raised in this county and shipped on to the market will bring 10 cents per hundred more.

MOLDY CORN HURTS HATCHING

Birds May Even Look Well and Lay Heavily

Poultrymen who are feeding moldy corn this spring should not be surprised if their hatching record is not up to its usual standard, according to Wm. H. Lapp, poultry extension specialist of Iowa State College. The birds may look well and lay eavily but if the eggs do not hatch properly it would be well to examine all corn being fed them.

"The amount of mould may be small Mr. Lapp says, "but a little may affect the hatchability of the eggs. If the mold is more pronounced, the chickens are likely to develope bowel trouble. Corn that has been preserved with salt is a dangerous feed for poultry. Chickens need some salt, but as much as they get from corn so cribbed will produce apoplexy and high blood pressure. Old corn is best for baby chicks Every ear should be examined for any indication of mold and extra caution should be taken to make sure that all corn that is fed is entirely free from mold. A dead chicken is poor property."

KANAWHA MAY PAVE MAIN STREET SOON

A move is on foot in Kanawha to pave Main Street. The streets have veritable seas of mud, and realizing that something should be done to at least place them on a par with the surrounding country roads, a petition was circulated among the Main street property owners the first of last week and was so liberally signed that the town council has acted favorably upon the matter by passing a resolution of necessity. The matter will come up for final decision May 5, and prospects are very favorable for paving. The petition and resolution call for the paving of four block and the graveling of side streets on both sides for one block back.

One real nice thing about phonographs and player pianos is you never have to sit around and beg them to play.

"A GOOD BOY"

SYNOPSIS.—On the banks of the Wabash stand Texie Colin and Jack Warhope, young and very much in love. Texie is the only daughter of old Pap Simon, rich man and money-lender. Jack is the orphan bound boy of Pap Simon, who had foreclosed a mortgage on the Warhope estate. At first Texie and Jack talk sadly of Ken Colin, the girl's missing brother. Then Jack says that in ten days his servitude will be over, that he will ride out into the big world to seek his fortune. Both know what that will mean to them. Texie and Jack talk of the red lock of "Red Colin," inherited by Ken. And Jack says he's coming back as soon as he finds gold in California. Then arrives the new preacher, Rev. Caleb Hopkins. Pap Simon introduces the villagers to the new preacher, who was a college mate of Ken. At supper at the Colin home the preacher tells how the boy killed a gambler and disappeared. His father attributes Ken's fall from grace to his red lock of hair. Then Pap Simon has a sort of stroke, brought on by reading a letter from Ken, "somewhere in New York," who curses his father on his death bed. A postscript by another hand says he is dead. At the village store and post office Loge Belden, a newcomer, says he saw the new parson with his arm around Texie. Jack licks him, shoots a pistol from his hand and makes him say he was mistaken. The preacher and the villagers go fishing. Jack discovers the preacher carries a six-gun. A footprint on a concealed houseboat fits the preacher's boot. A drunken ruffian disturbs a village festival and stabs Jack in the shoulder. The preacher makes him leave. Jack trails the man to Belden's cabin.

"That's why I came—Daddy wants t' see y'u."

"Me?"

"He wants y'u t' come over a minute."

"Y'u didn't tell 'im nothin' about that—that—face?"

The girl's eyes flinched at the question.

"No—only that you got—hurt."

She drew a step nearer, laid her fingers lightly upon the sleeve of his blouse.

"How is y'ur shoulder?"

He fumbled the side of his open collar.

"Aw, it ain't nothin'."

The smile came back and brought the dimples.

"Jack—"

He stole a quick look at the side of her upturned face and waited.

"I b'en s' pinin' hungry all day somehow f'r the rocks and woods—they're all waked up and wonderful now—and—"

She paused. The man drank in the exquisite profile of her fresh young face, her lips parted, her eyes softly retrospective with the smile that nestled in them.

"I 'lowed mebbe y'u wouldn't mind takin' me up there, bein' y'ur shoulder ain't—well."

"Wouldn't mind takin' y'u—!" The man seemed to grope for a word big enough to finish the thought. "W'y—I'd—I'd—we'll be startin' the minute we can run over and see what Pap Simon wants—b'fore, if y'u say so."

"No, I reckon we better go t' father first, he's been that fussed and restless sence—"

She turned and took a thoughtful step toward the path that led across the orchard to the red-roofed cottage.

The man followed, suddenly stopped, raised a quick glance up to the wild and tumbled pinnacles of the cliff, and hurried back to the cabin. The girl followed him as far as the door, where she stood mildly wondering to see him take down the beautifully modeled revolver—the gift of her father—from where it hung on a peg behind the cook stove, carefully examine it and buckle it on under his blouse.

Jack Warhope was startled at the change the three days had wrought in the banker. The lines of his craggy face had noticeably deepened.

Texie ran to him and knelt by the chair. He laid a great gaunt hand on her head, and after a time looked up at the woodsman, standing so tall and strong in the floor that he seemed almost out of place in so small a room.

"I'm hearin' they clawed y'u up las' night."

The woodsman grinned; the old man went on:

"Didn't hurt y'u, did they—much?"

"A cat scratch."

The old man's fingers strayed over the girl's hair.

"Jack."

"Yes, sir."

"You've b'en a good boy and you've worked hard." The woodsman shifted to his other foot and glanced down at the bright hair of the girl. The old banker studied him, slowly. "I never noticed it b'fore how much y'u look—and act—like y'ur father."

"Size and looks and—actions, you're—like him," the old man went on, "Of all the men I ever knowed, I think he was the noblest, and—the finest gentleman. A soldier every inch, but no business man. That's why—"

He stopped abruptly, took his hand from his daughter's head and dropped it to her shoulder. His deep-set eyes strayed away—perhaps into the past, with its memories.

He looked up after a time, in his quick penetrating way.

"How's the cattle?"

The question was so at variance with the thoughts in the woodsman's mind that he was slow in answering.

"Fine, sir."

"About ready t' market?"

"Most any day, now. Three drovers have b'en t' see 'em a'ready."

"Sell 'em—as soon as y'u please. What'll they bring?'

"If the market holds, they ough' t' top five thousan'."

"Five thousan'—thats a heap o' money."

The bony fingers drummed hard upon the chair-arm. The old man fidgeted in his seat in a way that seemed to indicate that the interview was over. The girl rose.

"Father, we're goin' up in the woods t' see the sun set—Jack and me—"

A statement that was half question. The old man did not look up. They were at the door of the dining-room, the woodsman standing aside to let the girl pass, when the banker turned in his chair.

"Jack."

The girl stopped; the man turned back.

"Texie tells me you're leavin' us as soon as you're twenty-one."

"I'm aimin' to, sir."

"And that'll be—?"

"The twentieth—seven more days."

"Seven days—!" The old man frowned; rasped his hand over the dry stubble on his bony chin. "Well, seven days is—seven days," he muttered. "Hit ain't b'cause I've be'n hard on y'u, is it?"

"No, sir, it ain't that. You've be'n s' good to me that it makes it hard t' go, but I got t' do somethin' f'r m'self—now."

The old man bent his brows thoughtfully; nodded toward his daughter in the door of the dining-room.

"She says you're calc'latin' t' jine a wagon train f'r California."

"Yes, sir, that's what I'm aimin' t' do, if you're still minded t' give me Graylock when my time's out.

"I'm aimin' t' pick up enough—gold out there t' come back and buy the homestead, if you'll sell it t' me, and make my father's—and mother's—dream come true."

The old man dropped his eyes and drew his hand across his shaggy brows.

"The day you're—twenty-one"—his voice was strained, and he seemed to weigh each word before letting it fall—"we'll have a long talk, you and me, b'fore y'u jine that wagon train—"

"We'll Have a Long Talk, You and Me, B'fore Y'u Jine That Wagon Train."

He stooped forward, picked up a bundle of papers from the floor and began sorting them over.

The others passed out through the kitchen, where Mrs. Curry was busy about the cook stove.

The witchery of the coming sunset was astir among the splintered peaks and pinnacles of the bold headland. The woodsman took off his hat, swept his eyes over the far-spread landscape, drank deep the wonder of it, slowly turned to his companion.

He allowed himself to revel for a delicious moment in the rich completeness of her, as she stood lightly poised on the rock.

His arm unconsciously stole toward her; but he drew it back and pointed to the tiny flower bed at the foot of the upstanding pinnacle. The girl followed the motion, softly clapped her hands and stood looking down at the yellow orchid, its golden slipper still as plump and unwilted as before it had been transplanted.

"I found it this morning back in the woods."

His voice was strained and heavy out of all proportion to what might have been expected in uttering a statement so simple. The girl breathed fast. The man stooped, plucked the blossom from the stem and held it toward her; she took it and with slow fingers fastened it in her belt.

"I reckon we wasn't nothin' but jist crazy kids," the man went on, "but y'u know how the first bluebird and the first robin and the first lady slipper was alw'ys—big days to us—"

He was venturing his words forth as if each one had to feel its way across his lips, like a hunter picking his way over the dangerous bog at the head of Mud Haul.

"But lady slipper day," he faltered on, "was alw'ys the biggest. Y'u know, we alw'ys kinda fig'r'd on doin' somethin' extra that day, and when it come this year I be'n plannin' I'd—I'd—"

He paused, breathed hard, struggled for the next words—the hardest in the language to say; stole a glance at the girl's face; looked away. The stark skeleton of the unfinished farm-house unexpectedly — mayhap unluckily — came under his eyes; the transfiguring emotion slowly died in his face; the bound boy again dominated the man.

He heard the girl's deep breath; felt her hand thrill upon his arm; accepted it for what it was—the spontaneous communion of comradeship, a relation on which he dared not presume—dimly read in the serious eyes, as they strayed over his face, the tingling mystery, the far-flung vision that nestled there.

Very thoughtful she seemed, and for the most part silent—the all-sufficient silence that sometimes falls between comrades—as he led her down the bluffs, on the Eagle hollow side, around by the post office, and to the yard gate at the red-roofed cottage.

The Rev. Caleb Hopkins, with a book under his arm, was just coming across the little park from the study at the parsonage. He dropped down on the rustic seat at Whispering spring, opened the book and humped himself over it, apparently oblivious to all that went on about him.

The woodsman studied him a moment, frowned, and turned his eyes back to the girl. Swept by a sudden impulse that he could not control—an impulse that called for no word—he lifted her hand from the gate latch; held it for a delicious instant in both his own; dropped it and turned away.

Half-way up the road to the big elm at the homestead he looked back. The tall figure of the young preacher had risen from the rustic seat at Whispering spring, and through the pensive twilight the girl was crossing the yard toward him.

CHAPTER IX

Bats and Beetles.

In the luminous evening that followed Uncle Nick sat smoking a quiet pipe on the porch of his modest cabin at the upper edge of the village, almost exactly opposite the point where the Eagle Hollow road crossed the flat, unbanistered bridge and turned up the east bank of the branch to disappear between the jaws of the hollow.

Through the open door came the clink of the supper dishes as Aunt Liza put them away. A throng of bats, nocturnal hunters all, darted in and out among the fruit trees, white with bloom; the drone of a thousand beetles, the hum of a myriad gauzy wings, throbbed the silence into a sort of drowsy rhythm—a scene tranquil and serene.

The old man was just setting off to keep his tacitly understood appointment with the embryo scientists, soldiers and statesmen who assembled nightly around the barrels and boxes of Zeke Polick's store, when the front gate clicked. He stopped and stood mildly wondering to see the tall and lanky form of Al Counterman, the one-eyed fisherman, coming up through the trees.

He threw up his hand, the fisherman threw up his. Two grins met and passed in the twilight.

"Fine day," said the fisherman.

"Couldn't make one no better, if I had the tools."

The fisherman seldom—almost never—came into that part of the village. With the sound horse sense that eighty years of hard knocks had pounded into him, Uncle Nick knew that something unusual had brought him. Counterman knew that he knew. He absently traced the flight of the bats with his puckered eye and shifted from one foot to the other.

"Little out o' y'ur range, hain't y'u?"

The fisherman sat down on the porch, spit out into the yard, and threw away his cud, as if clearing his mouth for action. Al rarely threw away his cud. When he did it meant something.

"Whar's Aunt Liza?"

"Back in the kitchen. Why?"

The other did not answer, but sat listening to the clink of the dishes. He finally lifted his battered hat, ran his fingers up through his hair and motioned his aged friend to sit beside him.

"Seen Big Jack t'day?"

"See'd 'im this evenin' late come down off'n Black Rock"—he tossed up his hand toward the high battlement of stone that frowned down upon them from across the mouth of the hollow—"him an' Texie. They crossed the branch at the bridge thar, passed the gate an' went on down through town—t' the post office, I 'low."

The fisherman put his hat back on.

"I'm skeer'd it's dern little good it'll do 'im. As I come along up the crick, I happened t' glance down in ol' Sime's orchi'd, an' thar she set with the new parson at Whisperin' spring."

The old man lowered his eyes and sat patting his boot upon the gravel of the small gutter worn by the drip from the porch eaves.

"Beats the devil the headway the parson's a-makin' with 'er," he muttered. "Must know some trick other men ain't on to."

"But I do know he's Black Bogus: yes, sir, Black Bogus."

Pays Dues for Needy

Mayor William W. Campbell of Schenectady, N. Y., gave his unqualified endorsement to the American Legion when he recently forwarded money for dues of six needy veterans in the organization. A letter accompanying the money, said:

"There must be many service men here whose sympathies are entirely with the Legion movement, but who are restrained from joining by lack of funds. I trust that my small offer may spur some others who can afford it to aid these men to places in Legion membership. We all know that the Legion is a militant force for betterment in Schenectady as in every other American community, and anything we can do to promote its strength is a direct aid to good government."

Former Mayors George R. Lunn and O. F. Allen had previously given their endorsement to the organization.

EXPECT 45,000 TO ATTEND CONVENTION

In speaking of possible attendance at the national convention of the American Legion in St. Paul, Minn., in 1924, National Adjutant Russell G. Creviston told the Minnesotans that 45,000 are likely to visit the convention city. Mr. Creviston based his statement on the fact that St. Paul is practically in the heart of the Legion's stronghold of membership, and because of the proximity of the greater proportion of membership, he anticipates much larger delegations from the Middle West, in addition to the usual delegations from greater distances.

Proceeding on this estimate, plans for the sixth annual convention are proceeding rapidly. Local entertainment affairs are in charge of Justice Royal A. Stone, a member of the Minnesota Supreme court and an active Legionnaire. On Justice Stone's staff of helpers are found Mayors Nelson and Leach, of the Twin Cities, Lieut. Gov. Louis Collins, and other prominent Legionnaires in Minnesota.

Arrangements for the entertainment naturally fall into the hands of the local committee, but much of those for transportation, housing and delegations must be the part of the national organization. As a consequence, several divisions at national headquarters are busy perfecting preliminary arrangements.

Granting of one fare for the round trip by all rail lines has been practically accepted, and railway officials are busy working out schedules of sale dates. This will permit of the moving of much larger delegations to the convention city, and it is estimated that no less than fifty trains will speed to the Gopher state capital before the middle of September. When the Legion movement passes through Chicago, Kansas City, or Omaha, any line operating service from these "gateways" can handle the special equipment or special train from any line or lines selected as the initial line. In other words, no one line has any advantage over another.

Plans for trains and train equipment are in the hands of department adjutants of the Legion, and the officials are to supply necessary identification certificates. The reduced fare applies to the members of the Legion, members of the Legion Auxiliary and widows of deceased members, to whom the certificates are issued.

All hotel reservations are in the hands of the national organization or department adjutants and no requests for individual reservations will be honored unless so made. Order or preference of delegations, in housing, parade and seating, is determined by action of the national executive committee at the May meeting.

Legion Aids in Having Prison Plant Abandoned

Abandonment of the present prison plant of South Carolina has been recommended by a joint committee from the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary. Among the ills found by the committee in the present prison are the inadequacies of the buildings to care for the prisoners, the impossibility of securing criminal classification and gradation under the present conditions, and entirely inadequate hospital facilities.

The present plant of the state has been operated at no cost to the commonwealth because of manufactured production of inmates, and it is the contention of the Legion's committee that the state should not profit at the expense of bodily comfort and moral welfare of prisoners confined in the institution. The penitentiary turned in a profit of $40,000 during the preceding year, declares the Legion's investigators. No comment on administration of system was made by the Legion committees.

Home for Convalescents Is Soon to Be Opened

The fourth home for convalescent veterans to be opened by the American Legion in New Jersey, will soon be ready to receive patients. The new home, which is located at Millville, will serve veterans of Atlantic, Cumberland and Cape May counties. The homes are designed to serve men who have been discharged from government hospitals, but whose condition is such that they may not immediately return to civil life. The project is financed by the Legion.

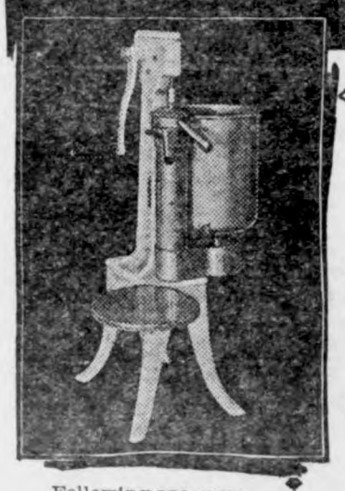
30 Days' Free Trial Offer
12 Months to Pay



An Amazing Free Trial Offer

A plan has just been formulated whereby American farmers can try out on their farms the very latest model of the great SHARPLES Separator plant. This free trial plan, in the fewest words, is this:

You simply ask us to loan you a SHARPLES Allsteel Cream Separator for a free trial. You send no money and make no deposits. This SHARPLES Allsteel Separator will be sent to your express office, all charges prepaid. You try it for thirty days and we await your decision. The SHARPLES Allsteel Cream Separator that will be sent you is the last work of our Separator engineers and experts. It is of all-steel construction—sturdy and strong. It has a capacity of over six hundred (600) pounds of milk per hour; has the famous Tubular Suspended Bowl, Automatic Variable Feed at Any Speed; is distinguished for its advanced and modern construction features; for its compact, handsome appearance and for its phenomenal separating capacity, and the ease of turning it is almost unbelievable

Big Allowance Given on Old Separators

Send immediately for the details of this free trial offer and the twelve-months-to-pay plan.

THE SHARPLES SEPARATOR COMPANY
West Chester, Pa.

Following are some of the opinions expressed by various professors and teachers in noted agricultural schools regarding the SHARPLES Allsteel Cream Separator that we are lending to farmers on Free Trial.

At Kansas University—"Well, I like that; it is so easy to turn and clean," and Prof. ——— said "that is the biggest little separator I ever saw."

At Nebraska University — "That is some separator; I can recommend that to any one," while the Profs. ——— said, "It was the greatest separator they had ever seen."

At Missouri University—"That separator will crown the separator business in Missouri when people learn how easy it turns and what it does."

At Ohio University—"If we had not run it ourselves and tested it they would not believe it; sure have a wonderful machine."

At Ames — "You have made a big improvement in separators and are using the right methods, and want one as soon as possible."

Again at Illinois, Wisconsin, Purdue and other State Universities the Professors and authorities call the Allsteel Separator Wonderful.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

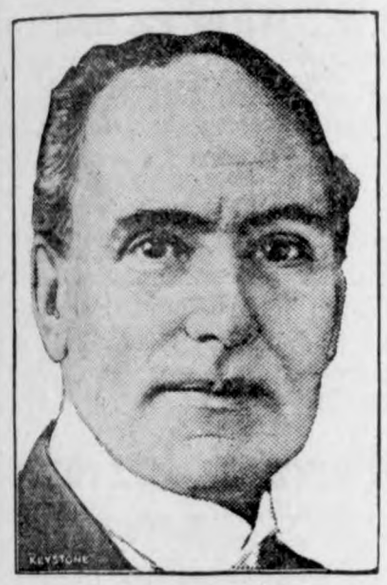
LaFollette at the Height of His Power

United States Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin is reported at this writing as convalescent from an attack of pneumonia. This dread disease is mighty uncertain, so both the friends and enemies of the Wisconsin senator were worried—even those who regard him as a "political nuisance."

No man in American politics has had a stormier career than LaFollette. Once the "Lonely Man of the Senate," disowned by his party, ostracized by his colleagues, condemned for his opposition to America's participation in the war, his expulsion from the senate demanded and his political downfall predicted, LaFollette today is the leader of a faction, a radical bloc, of which the power in congress has been proved beyond question.

Moreover, at this writing, a question asked all over the country is, "Will LaFollette head a third party?" Hitherto LaFollette has refused to go outside the Republican breastworks, no matter how much disturbance he might be making within the walls. He was too practical for that. But conditions seem to be different this year from anything in the past. Anyway, LaFollette, in all his forty years and more of public life has never been more powerful than he is at present. And the years are not making him less radical. For example, he would amend the Constitution so that congress could re-enact a law and make it effective after the Supreme court has declared it unconstitutional—which would upset our whole system of government.

Is Religious Dancing a Pagan Pageant?



Dr. William Norman Guthrie, rector of St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, New York city, is a local center around which one of the Modernist-fundamentalist storms is raging. While there are doubtless wheels within wheels to the controversy, the cause of the open break appears to have been "religious dance pageant, setting forth the wonder and glory of the Incarnation." At any rate, Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, bishop of New York, has decreed that the church be deprived of Episcopal visitations and ministration as the result of the religious dance. Apparently Dr. Guthrie's wardens and vestry stand with him, inasmuch as it is announced that the rector had planned two more "pagan" pageants and one eurythmic ritual. A group of clergymen in the New York diocese made the following comment on the bishop's action:

"Bishop Manning is our father in God, and it would ill become us to criticize what he has done. In making an interpretation as to the legality or illegality of holding a religious pageant in a church, he was acting not only within his constitutional rights, but in fulfillment of his consecration vow. He chose the stricter course and penalized the parish for disobedience to his judgment. Whether he is correct in his interpretation of the law can be determined only after Dr. Guthrie has been tried by a court of his peers, from whose verdict there is an appeal to the Court of Review, composed of clergy and laity drawn from the dioceses of the Eastern United States."

"Poor Man vs. Rich Man" in Colorado

Morrison Shafroth, son of the late former United States Senator John F. Shafroth of Colorado, has announced his candidacy for the short term senatorship. Mr. Shafroth, a Democrat, has a campaign issue that is causing much discussion in the Centennial State—his opposition to the election of wealthy men to the senate. He says, in part:

"The party, or the individual, who relies on winning by buying up the sources of publicity, by purchasing from his opponent's camp, workers and officers, by buying voters under the pretence of hiring workers, in short—by engaging in all the nefarious practices by which great sums of money are supposed to win elections, will find that a new era is dawning in Colorado. I believe that the voters of all parties will rise up at the coming election and strike down the individual, or the party, that attempts to buy its way into power." Of course this issue of "poor man vs. rich man" has raised the question, "Is Mr. Shafroth a poor man?" and also the question, "What is a poor man?"

Mr. Shafroth was born in Denver in 1888 and was graduated in 1910 from the University of Michigan. He is a lawyer and served as a captain of field artillery in the A. E. F.

Henderson and the Air Mail Service

There are indications that the air mail service is to be extended and amplified. Col. Paul Henderson, second assistant postmaster general in charge of the airplane service, predicts great things for the service. He believes it will not be long before all important commercial and industrial centers of the United States will be connected with lighted air ways. Over these, he says, mail, express and other important movements will be made at night. Among the night routes he suggests in addition to the Chicago-New York run are Chicago-New Orleans, Chicago-Boston, Chicago-Philadelphia, Chicago-Washington, Chicago-Atlanta and Chicago-Denver.

Colonel Henderson left a place in a big contracting and construction concern to enter the Post Office department. Now he is an enthusiast on the subject of airplane mail service, having done considerable flying in search of first-hand information. He was born in Denver, but grew up in Chicago. In the war he saw service as a major of ordnance. He is now lieutenant colonel of reserves. Mrs. Henderson is a daughter of the veteran Illinois congressman, Martin B. Madden, chairman of the appropriations committee of the house.

One of the features of the air mail service is the flying by night. It is believed that this can be made as safe as daylight flying through the use of enormous lights. Imagine lights of 5,000,000 candle power placed at intervals of 25 miles.

Many Women Employed in the Mines of India

Romantic fancies of the zenana as protecting all the women of India are shattered by a bulletin recently published by the government of that country.

Women form about one-quarter of the average daily workers in the jute mills and about one-fifth in the cotton mills. In the coal mining industry the proportion of women to men underground is about two to three.

The average woman worker in a jute mill receives a weekly wage of Rs. 2-8. In the cotton mills the rate of wages is lower on the whole and the women who are employed on the less skilled and lower paid processes tend to leave during the period while jute presses are running. They become migratory workers.

The management of the India cotton mills usually retains two or three weeks' wages in arrears, while in the jute mills they usually keep one week's wages.

In the coal mines a woman's pay for a day's work varies from 8 to 12 annas and it is stated that they usually spend from five to eight hours down in the mine, their work being mainly the carrying of coal to the containers or tubs.

In the jute mills, except in the immediate neighborhood of Calcutta, a multiple-shift system was the rule, and the actual number of hours worked daily by women varied from nine to eleven hours.

In some mills where the hand-sewing department was partitioned off from the factory, women were working twelve hours a day on piecework as finishers to earn a daily average wage of from 5 to 6 annas.

All cotton mills work a one-shift day, the woman worker having an eleven-hour day with a midday interval during which she usually returns to her own home. It is said by the report that the women are not able to maintain themselves on an adequate diet under five annas a day.

Right Thing in Literature

A classic is a work which gives pleasure to the minority which is intensely and permanently interested in literature. . . . It survives because it is a source of pleasure, and because the passionate few can no more neglect it than a bee can neglect a flower. The passionate few do not read "the right things" because they are right. That is to put the cart before the horse. "The right things" are the right things solely because the passionate few like reading them. Hence—and I now arrive at my point—the one primary essential to literary taste is a hot interest in literature. If you have that, all the rest will come. It matters nothing that at present you fail to find pleasure in certain classics. The driving impulse of your interest will force you to acquire experience, and experience will teach you the means of pleasure. —Arnold Bennett, in "Literary Taste, How to Form It."

Where Science Fails

Prof. Simon Newcomb tells of the following incident having occurred during a recent visit paid by several young Western women to the Washington observatory: "I had done my best," said the eminent astronomer, "to answer with credit to the government and to myself the running fire of questions which my fair callers propounded. I think I had named even the remotest constellations for them and was congratulating myself upon the outcome when one of the younger members of the party interjected: "But, as it has never been proved that stars are inhabited, how do the astronomers ever find out their names?"

New Sewing-Up Thread Used

A surgeon who suffered an accident and had a horsehair handy has, with the aid of a scientist in Wisconsin, invented a treated silk that will be even better, it is maintained. In the past horsehair silver wire, silk worm gut and celluloid thread have been used, with horsehair being the most favored because it stuck less to the flesh and was less painful on extraction. The new suture is made by treating fine silk thread chemically so that tissue cells will not grow to it. Prof. Louis Kahlenberg of the University of Wisconsin has perfected the treatment.

Empty

"Mamma, I've got a stomachache," said six-year-old Nellie.

"That's because your stomach's empty. You'd feel better if you had something in it. You have been without your lunch."

That afternoon the pastor called, and in conversation complained of a severe headache.

"That's because it's empty," said Nellie. "You'd feel better if you had something in it."

A Good Sign

"Good day, Mrs. Brown. How is your husband this morning?" asked one countrywoman of another whose husband was ill.

"Well, I think he's a bit better," was the reply. "He sat up for an hour yesterday, and had a little appetite. He ate a couple of chops, a veal and 'am pie, two helpings of apple pudding and a snack o' cheese. I think by tomorrow he'll be able to swallow something substantial."

How It Started

"At any rate, Mrs. Murphy, no one can say I'm two-faced."

"Faith, no, Mrs. Jones. Sure, an' if yer were, you'd leave that 'un at 'ome."—Melbourne Punch.

Origin of Safety Pin

The first safety pins were long, slender pins of bronze, characteristic of Italy. Evidently some one one day conceived the idea of bending the body of these pins after putting the pin through the garment, so as to hold it more securely. Later an improvement was made by having a disk formation in the bend of the pin, containing several twists of fine wire, which acted as a spring and held the pin in place. The original bow pin is said to have been found in graves dating back to the Tenth century B. C. There have been many evolutions of the material used and the shape and style of the safety pin, but it is interesting to note that the primitive and simplest form is the one which has survived and is used at the present time.

"IF ANYONE WANTS TO KNOW ABOUT TANLAC LET THEM SEE ME"

Says Joseph Baker of Memphis in Praising World's Greatest Tonic—Tells of Recovery.

"If anybody wants to find out about Tanlac, just let them see me," is the hearty suggestion of Joseph H. Baker, 550 North Third St., Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. Baker went overseas with the famous Thirtieth Division during the World War and participated in the St. Mihiel, Valley of Wovres and Argonne drives, having been cited for bravery in action in the Argonne. He is now a popular member of the Memphis Fire Department.

"When I came back from over there," said he, "I was in a mighty bad fix. I had been gassed and after getting home I got down with pneumonia. This left me 'all in,' without appetite, down in weight, liver out of fix, and suffering from constipation, biliousness and headaches without end.

"Tanlac put me to eating as never before, shot my weight up fifteen pounds and made a strong, well man of me—and I feel fine even to this day. I can't say enough for Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

STAYING HOME FROM WORK MEANS MONEY LOST

Many Women Know This by Experience

Let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Help You As It Helped These Women

Mrs. McDole's Experience

Ludington, Michigan.—"I suffered every month and was very irregular, had headaches all the time, was thin and pale, with no appetite. I had taken all kinds of medicines, and every doctor told me I would have to face an operation before I would be well again. I was doing factory work, and I had to stay at home so much that I was getting discouraged. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did so with good results. I am now feeling fine. I have advised all my girl friends, who have such troubles as I had, to take your wonderful medicine."—Mrs. THRESSA MCDOLE, 426 S. Rath Ave., Ludington, Mich.

Los Angeles, California.—"I was in such a condition that I was scarcely able to walk, even to do my housework. I had no energy, was depressed and often wished to die. I am a chef, but was totally unable to do any cooking. A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I have taken it with success. After the fourth bottle I felt much better, and after the tenth I never felt better in my life, as it resulted in a complete recovery. I certainly recommend it to all I hear complaining and you can use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. MARY SULLIVAN, 923 E. 46th Street, Los Angeles, California.

Greatly Relieved

Jersey City, N. J.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for cramps and fainting spells. I do office work, and have been in this condition four or five years, having to stay at home from work a day or two at a time, quite frequently. I have taken about ten bottles of it, and have been greatly relieved. I recommend it myself and you may print these facts with my full address."—LOUISE SCHOENFELDER, 112 Woodlawn Ave., Jersey City, N. J.

No matter what your work is, a great deal depends upon your health. It is discouraging to be obliged to stay at home frequently on account of sickness.

Your trouble may be caused by some female weakness, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought relief to many women just as these letters state. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Evil Association

"The evidence must have been pretty strong against you."

"I don't believe the evidence was what convicted me," answered Bill the Burg. "I think it was bad company. The judge took a dislike to me for havin' such a bum lawyer."—Washington Star.

Too Personal

First Counsel—Your lordship, I am opposed by an unmitigated scoundrel.

Second Counsel—My learned friend is such a notorious liar—

Judge (sharply)—The counsel will kindly confine their remarks to such matters as are in dispute.

ONE OUT OF EVERY TEN FARMS ARE NOW ELECTRIFIED

About one out of every ten farms in Iowa is electrified, according to Arthur H. Huntington of the Iowa Railway and Light Company, Cedar Rapids. He declares that no other agricultural state can show such a wide distribution of facilities for electrical service and but few more thickly settled manufacturing states are in the same class.

Mr. Huntington is a member of a committee which is cooperating with the Farm Bureau federation, the departments of agriculture, commerce and labor and interior departments, the Society of Agricultural Engineers and manufacturers in an effort to find out how the farmers can use electricity energy profitably.

This committee is conducting experiments on farms in various parts of the country to determine the actual cost of equipment and services.

Industrial History Is Shown in Magazine "Ads"

If one would get a bird's-eye view of America's industrial development and, in a sense, her social evolution as well, says the Christian Science Monitor, he can do no better than make a study of the advertising in long-out-of-date magazines.

It is an absorbing bit of research. Go to a library, or into your own dusty files and get copies of two or three of the older leading magazines of the country for the years, say, of 1890, 1893, 1898, 1900, 1906 and 1914. In the advertising columns you may trace the evolution of the American country house and all its furnishings. You will see the bicycle begin and end. There will pass in review before you a whole cycle in the art of printing.

This stage, set for the motorcar, will portray in a complete drama its entrance, its transformation, its triumphant domination of the scene. Many a gigantic 10,000-candle-power advertising appropriation of today can be seen slowly, cautiously feeling its way along a twilight road; first guessed by faint auroral flashes sent out from quarter-page displays.

The pages themselves will increase in steady arithmetical progression, parallel with the growth of the average American bank deposit. No treatise or text book could present more graphically the phenomenal industrial metamorphosis of the United States and the alterations in national tastes, desires and wealth.

French Now Sending Autograph Telegrams

It is now possible to send autograph telegrams as the result of the perfection of a device for that purpose by M. Belin, a French inventor. This transmitting machine is being installed in all the French telegraph and post offices.

The sender of a telegraph message writes the telegram on a revolving cylinder, and through a series of novel mechanical devices it is received by the addressee in the original writing of the sender.

Over the surface of the paper on the revolving cylinder runs a needle, which in its movements breaks and restores an electric current. Special ink is used in writing this telegram, so that the words are in slight relief above the surface of the paper.

The delicate needle strikes the obstacle made by the letters, is jerked upward and interrupts the electric circuit.

These interruptions are all registered at the receiving end, and the result is that by the inverse process the exact pattern of the written telegram is reproduced and this "tele-autograph" is delivered to the addressee.

Sea Sand for Fertilizer

In Cornwall, England, sea sand is used very largely for fertilizer and for dressing the soil of the farms. This is because the sea sand from places nearby contains a large percentage of calcium carbonate derived from the shells of the sea mollusks. The winds carry the sand inland for some distance and pile it up in dunes. Its low price makes it preferred now to lime, although for years it was considered valueless.

Hydromotor Bicycle

A motor bicycle which can run on land or water, designed by an Italian, has been tried out successfully. It is equipped with pontoons which keep it afloat and with a rudder which is controlled from the handlebars. The pontoons are filled with air similar to the life-saving crafts used at the beaches, so that they cannot be submerged. The bicycle is equipped with a small engine of two horsepower, but the designer is developing one of higher power.

New Fields for Railways

A great enterprise of the early future will be building railways in South America, Asia and Africa. In each of those continents are now vast areas of rich land that can be exploited only when the railways come. In the United States there are on the average 83 miles of railway to every 1,000 square miles. In Europe there are only 62 miles of railway to every 1,000 square miles, in South America only seven, in Asia only four, and in Africa only three.—Youth's Companion.

Safeguarding the Crossing

One traction company in New Jersey, realizing the danger to the motoring public of grade crossings, has evolved a sign system of warning at each crossing. Suspended across the road and directly above each crossing is a large board with several electric lights. This board bears the following message: "Danger! Look Out for Locomotive! Stop When Lighted!"

American Bee Stands Well

Australia has prohibited the importation of adult bees to prevent the introduction of serious diseases of adult bees, such as the Isle of Wight disease. An exception is made of the United States, this being the only country from which importations are permitted.—Department of Agriculture Bulletin.

'THATS DIFFERENT"

negroes just arriving at the iliary, who had not been as- to their quarters, struck up rvation. One says:

it you in for"?

kin in a store."

much did they give you?" nty year. What you in for?'

in' a man."

much did dey give you?" ee days."

ee days? Dats funny. I gets years for stalin' an' you gets ee days for killin' a man. nny. -How come dat?

t' I don't see nothin' funny at. I'se gwine to be hung on d day!"

FOR PRECAUTION

The tailor measured him calling out the dimensions to a clerk with a book. After the measuring the tailor said:

"Married or single, sir?"

"Married", replied thec ustomer.

"One pocket concealed in the lining of the vest," the tailor bade hte clerk.

POOR THING

A man walked into a resaurant, and inquired of the attentive young waitress: "Madam, have you frog legs?"

To which she replied: "No, sir, it's rheumatism makes me walk this way.

FRENCH COURTESY

The charming wife of a French diplomat had never thoroughly mastered the English language. She was urging an American naval officer to attend a dinner, the invitation to which he had already declined. The lady insisted that he must go, but the young officer said he could not possibly do so, as he had "burned his bridges behind him."

The lady misunderstood the word. "That will be allright," she exclaimed. "I lend you a pair of my husband's.

IN OTHER WORDS, NO TRESPASSING"

On a farm in the South was posted this sign:

"Trespasser's will be persekuted to the full extent of 2 mean mongral dorgs which ain't never been overly soshibil with strangers and 1 dubbel barlet shot-gun which ain't loaded with no sofy pillers. Dam, if It ain't tired from this hel raisin on my property.

PRINTER WAS PEEVED

A certain printer in a far-off city got slightly peeved at a letter from a doctor who wanted bids on several thousand letterheads, different sies different grades and different colors, and wanted the printing form held standing.

So Sam took his typewriter in hand and wrote:

"Am in the market for bids on one operation for appendicitis. One, two or five inch incision— with or without nurse. If appendix is found to be sound, want quotation to include putting same back and cancelling rder. If removed, sucessful bidder is expected to hold incision open for about sixty days, as I expect to be in them arket fr an operation for gallstones at that time and want to save the extra cost of cutting."

THE KNOCKER

The knocker is a curious cuss;
He never sarts to whine
Or fling his envious shafts at us
Until our work is fine.
It's only men with skill to do
Real work he tries to block;
And so, congratulations to
The man the knckers knock.

Judge Summerville, after a hard day in his divorce mill, was waxing cynical about mariage. "I'ts the old story of the 'Wed in haste and repent as soon as possible.' " He sighed, "and though it sounds very trite and sophisticated, I can not but admire a young couple I know, who escaped matrimorny as follows:

"Edith, can you cook?"

"No, Lionel. Can you afford to keep an automobile.

"No, dear.

DISCOURAGED

An actress who had retired from the stage and bought a little house in the country, decided to start a poultry farm.

She bought a hen and a setting of thirteen eggs.

As she had no knowledge of poultry, she wrote to a poultry journal, asking how long the eggs would take to hatch out. The paper replied:

"Three weeks for chickens and four for ducks."

Some weeks later she wrote again to the paper:

"Many thanks for you advice. However, at the end of three weeks there were no chickens hatched out, and as I did not want ducks, I took the hen off."

Somtimes a man finds a girl after his own heart only to find later that she really was after his pocketbook.

An optomist is one who while shoveling snow is happy because he doesn't have to mow thel awn.

Everything has its use. Plant flowers in the empty scuttle.

THE PARENTIAL DUTIES

We are busy people, devoted to business. We work hard every day to make ends meet, and, then even after ends have met, we generally keep on working from habit, or from some vague form of ambition or another.

We say we are fond of children. We are fond of them, but very careless. We see them after office hours at meal times, on holidays; we amuse ourselves with them, get them to show off a little, ask them whether they have been regular in their school attendance. If they answer in the affirmative, and we find them reasonably proficient in their studies we are satisfied; we discharge our minds from furthur responsibility. Not one father in a hundred, and shall we add mothers, watch where their children are out of school. The exceptional parent knows.

As to the children of the others, nominally they have fathers and mothers, but in reality they are orphans Their home is on the street. The parents are to blame. No school can absolve parents from their responsibilities. The plea of lack of time is a false plea; it is not so much the length of time you spend with your children, but the use you put that time to. The discipline, the trajning, the inspiration of home admit of no substitute. It does not mend matters to say you are fond of your children, and, in proof of it, to fondle them, give them toys and candy picture books, circus tickets, etc.; or to scold them violently and sometimes unjustly when they happen to jar your nerves, or get in your way An ape can slobber ever its offspring and give it nuts or cuff it, as whim may dictate.

Selfishness is at the bottom of our failure to give proper attention to our children. We want to have them around us when we are in the humor and to have them look nice, appear well and act properly, but we do not wish to be bothered with the task of inculating thes ame; that we devolve up on the public school. We would would not allow our mst cnfidential emplyee to engineer the most critical deal for us; but we have no hesitation in permitting a school teacher, or even a household domestic, perhaps to us practically unknown, underpaid, tired to death, averse to his or her occupation posibly, and sometimes incompetent, to determine the line upon which our own flesh and blood is to take his or her departure in life; lines whose direction and grading will practically determine his future. The outcome is not apparent until the symptoms, kept hidden by the boy's con njving, appear in later life. Parents themselves sometimes have a bitter lesson to learn before they learn what parental duty is.— Sheldon Mail.

BUYS LICENSE PLATES

Des Moines— The executive council last week let the contract for next year's automobile license plates at a price of 6 4-5 cents per plate, the Adams Stamp and Statjonery Company was the sucessful bidder. Fifty thousand more plates are to be made this year than last. They will cost approximately $95,200. This is a saving over last year's contract of approximately $25,000 notwithstanding the increase in the number of plates. The contract calls for 700,000 pairs..

THE GREATEST WORD IN THE LANGUAGE

What would be your answer if you were asked this question?

What is the greatest word in the English language?

The devout might say "heaven"
The devoted husband might say "wife" and the loving wife might say "husband"
Youth might say "love"
Age might say "rest".
Children might say "mother".
The worker might say "leasure".
The giddy might say "pleasure."

But what is the greatest word in English?

Edward W. Bok, former editor of the Ladies' Home Journal says that it is "service".

And perhaps, Mr. Bok is right at that.

SEVEN CHICAGO FIREMEN KILLED

Blast Causes Four-Story Wall to Topple on Fire Fighters.

Chicago.—Seven firemen and an unidentified civilian were killed and fifteen others were injured, some so seriously that they may die, when a blazing wall of a four-story stone-front building at 1359 Blue Island avenue collapsed.

The known dead: Capt. John Brennan, Lieut. Frank Frosch, Thomas Kelley, Sam T. Warren, Michael Devine, Frank Leavy, Edward Kersting and an unidentified civilian.

The firemen killed or injured were trapped on the fire escape of the structure, on ladders against its front or upon a water tower which had been playing streams on the flaming roof.

The civilians injured and the unidentified man killed were spectators of the fire.

Tons of masonry swept down upon the fire fighters and the watchers so suddenly that none had opportunity to reach safety.

Police and firemen dug frantically in the smoldering ruins all through the night, removing the dead and searching for others possibly still buried there. It is thought, however, that all of the victims have been taken out.

From the standpoint of casualties in the fire department it was the worst disaster which has visited Chicago since the stockyards fire in December, 1910, in which Fire Chief "Jim" Horan and twenty of his men lost their lives.

Yuma Repels 700 Tourists in War on Cattle Germs

Yuma, Ariz.—Quarantine guards on duty here to enforce the state's embargo against California vehicular traffic to prevent the spread of the foot and mouth disease repelled an attempt to break the blockade. The vanguard of more than 700 motorists from California barred from entry under the embargo swept past some of the guards on the Colorado river bridge, but retreated when a cordon was formed on the Yuma side and fire hose brought up to play streams of water on the mob.

Surgeon's Knife Bares Heart of Girl, Cures Her

Baltimore, Md.—An operation on the human heart apparently successful in every way, and in which the organ was actually bared by the surgeon's knife, was described at the meeting of the American surgical association here by Dr. Eliot C. Cutler of Harvard Medical school, who performed it. He told of having inserted his finger in an orifice in the heart to cure a valvular disease and that the patient is still living, eleven months later, and improved.

Real Crown Is Offered to U. S. Tin-Plate King

London. William B. Leeds, millionaire son of the late Princess Christopher of Greece by her first husband, the American "tin-plate king," may become king of Albania. Young Leeds, whose wife was the Princess Xenia, is reported by the London Daily Graphic to have been offered the Albanian throne. It is believed he has already decided to turn down the offer.

Countess to Be Strangled for "Murder by Sorcery"

Prague, Czechoslovakia. — Found guilty of having, by arts and guiles savoring of witchcraft, induced her young cousin to murder her husband and commit suicide, the beautiful Countess Hilda Hanika has been sentenced to be strangled to death in the public square at Brunn. After the announcement of the verdict a mob stormed the courtroom seeking to lynch the "sorceress."

Senate Passes Immigration Bill by 62 to 6 Vote

Washington.—With but six votes in the negative, the senate passed the immigration bill. The vote was 62 to 6 and it was reached after discussion that lasted more than seven hours. Passage of the immigration bill paved the way for the soldier bonus measure, which at once was made the unfinished business.

JAP NEWSPAPERS CALL LAW INSULT

Press of Tokyo Bitter at United States.

Tokyo.—The newspaper Yomiuri, Shimbun, usually one of the mildest of Tokyo newspapers, says editorially:

"Congress insulted the Japanese nation in the most public manner. Japan will not hesitate to respond to the challenge. She will remember the insult and take the first opportunity for retaliation."

Japan must prepare for whatever may come, even war, says the Yorozu Chcho, an afternoon jingo newspaper. It declares editorially that the action of the American congress in passing the exclusion legislation amounts to a challenge to Japan.

The Kokumin demands the immediate resignation of the ministry.

Numerous public bodies, including the Associated Chamber of Commerce of Japan, the American-Japan society and the Japan Economic society, have called urgent meetings.

Officials do not deny the probability of unpleasant popular reaction, and it is fully expected that the opposition will make all possible political capital from the government's immigration defeat. The action of congress comes as a blow in the heat of an election campaign throughout Japan.

Means Bares New Rum Deal by Daugherty

Washington.—Harry M. Daugherty was named in charges of crookedness again, when Gaston B. Means, former agent of the Department of Justice, returned to the witness stand before a senate committee. Means testified that Jess W. Smith, on the night before he committed suicide, asked him to return $200,000 to a New York whisky ring.

"Didn't Smith tell you he had made a division with the attorney general and the attorney general wouldn't return it?" Senator Wheeler asked. "He did," Means replied.

St. Paul Bandits Get $35,000 Armour Pay Roll

St. Paul.—Three bandits held up two postal employees in South St. Paul and escaped with a $35,000 currency pay roll for Armour & Co.'s plant here. The robbery took place at the Chicago Great Western railway station just after the south-bound train had unloaded five mail sacks, one of which contained the Armour pay roll. The bandits drove up in an automobile, forced the postal men to surrender the bags and then escaped in their car.

Living Body Blown Up by Gas From Hog Bite

Red Wing, Minn.—Rasmus Johnson, fifty-five, a farmer, died in a hospital here from what physicians term gas bacillus or gas poisoning. Johnson, whose case is declared one of the strangest on record here, literally blew up. He was bitten on the thumb by one of his hogs. The member became infected and he came here for treatment.

Japanese Are Building Many Small Warships

London.—Since the Washington armament treaty was signed, Great Britain has laid down only one submarine, as compared with six light cruisers, seventeen destroyers and thirteen submarines by Japan. This information was given in the house of commons by Charles Ammon, parliamentary secretary to the admiralty.

5 BILLIONS OF FAKE OIL STOCK

W. W. Tarbell Tells Senate Committee a Story of Manipulations.

Washington.—W. W. Tarbell, veteran oil operator and brother of Ida Tarbell, historian of Standard Oil, told the senatorial Teapot Dome investigators that there were floated in this country in 1921 and 1922 a total of $6,000,000,000 par value of oil stocks and that over 90 per cent of these flotations were, as he put it, "fakes."

"You are an oil expert?" asked Senator Spencer (Rep., Mo.).

"I am an experienced oil man," Mr. Tarbell replied.

Out of the abundance of his experience he then gave the senators this astounding survey of oil stock manipulation, first commenting on the alleged 90 per cent bogus in the six billion flotation.

"Whether these figures can be confirmed or not," he said, "we know they are not far wrong; further, that no one of these wrecks is listed with the total of $4,000,000,000 of par value oil stocks on the New York stock and curb exchanges, which average in the market quotations considerably above par.

"Now, as to the bogus stocks, the shares which represent them are hidden away in the broken trunks and bureau drawers of men and women who labor—their values to them only a sickening memory."

The witness continued with a sensational narrative of Mammoth Oil manipulations, referring to Harry Sinclair as "a prince of manipulators."

"Mammoth Oil was thrown into the market through the curb October 9, 1922, by an advertisement offering it at at $40, and the first transaction was at $43.

"It was in the hands of a master manipulator, and, ranging from a high of $43 to a low of $17, the net result was seven stockholders, consisting of three individuals, three corporations and the stock syndicate. The general public had no stock interest, except in so far as 3,300 shares of short contracts may be interested.

"It is the street rumor that these short interests were forced to settle at $140 per share, which means that if you had sold 100 shares at $40, you would have stood a loss of $10,000.

"Sinclair has been quoted as remarking, 'I am a gambler; that is why they follow me.' The 'investors' who followed him were not only shorn of their money, but had not even a share of stock to line their trunks with."

Flies 2,300 Miles in 3 Days, 6 Hours; Record

Mitchel Field, N. Y.—A new air record was made when Lieut. Homer E. Chandler ended a flight of 2,300 miles at Mitchel Feld, setting the elapsed time of flight over the eastern division of the model airways. He made the journey in three days, six hours. The best former record was five days, made by Lieut. M. L. Elliott.

"I'm a Klansman," Says Judge, Clearing Walton

Oklahoma City, Okla.—In freeing J. C. Walton, deposed governor of Oklahome, from charges of misusing public funds Judge A. S. Wells said: "I base my opinion solely upon the laws of Oklahoma and I hope that J. C. Walton will be fair enough to say that he got a square deal from at least one klansman."

Senate Votes for Two Per Cent Alien Quota

Washington.—As the result of a series of roll calls and prolonged debate, the senate amended the immigration bill so as to provide for admittance of aliens at the rate of 2 per cent on the basis of the 1890 census. The Johnson bill, lately passed by the house, makes the same limitation on immigration.

World Flight Chief Rescued Off Alaska

Cordova, Alaska.—Major Frederick L. Martin, commander of the army world airplane flight, was rescued in Portage bay by the United States destroyer Hull. Major Martin had been missing 24 hours, and it was feared that he might have perished. Major Martin, piloting the plane Seattle in company with Sergeant Alva Harvey, was forced to land in the bay during a terrific snow and wind storm which overtook the flyers as they were winging from Seward to Chignik.

Tear Gas Foils Yeggs Within an Inch of Loot

Sorento, Ill.—Tear bombs are taking all the joy out of safe blowing. Yeggmen who drilled through the vault doors of the Sorento National bank, and were within an inch of making a rich haul, suddenly took out their handkerchiefs and left the bank with smarting eyes. Three weeks ago the bank vaults were equipped with a protection system which releases tear gases when the locks meet with tampering.

U. S. Indicts Forbes and Two Others at Baltimore

Baltimore, Md.—Indictments charging conspiracy to defraud the government were returned by a federal grand jury here against Charles R. Forbes, former director of the veterans' bureau; Charles R. O'Leary, former assistant director of the bureau and chief of the supply division, and Nathan Thomson, president of the Thomson & Kelly company of Boston.

U. S. Navy Will Buy Oil and Save Reserve Supply

Washington. — The United States navy will buy its oil in the open market, meanwhile accumulating a vast reserve in the ground against the time when America's supply will be exhausted. This was urged in a statement by the President's special commission to study and provide an adequate reserve for national defense.

There are so many bobbed heads at Audubon and so few that bear long haid that a local drug store has advanced its service into the beauty parlor business.

Plans for the third annual bible conference at Riverview park in Cedar Falls the first week in August are being perfected.

Iowa residents will be interested to know that the corn crop now is imperiled by the "borer" insect, just as cotton by the boll weevil.

Mayor A. C. Conaway has reiterated his declaration of a year ago that the celebration of the Fourth of July in Marshalltown this year must be safe and sane.

A certificate of merit to the Iowa high school student winning state honors in the annual good roads essay contest will be awarded by the Highway Education Board.

"Citizenship' is the May topic for rural organizations in Iowa, helps for which have been developed by the rural organization section, extension service, Iowa State College.

Sweet clover is coming to be a popular pasture crop in many sections of the state and especially in western Iowa, where sweet clover is grown more than any other pasture crop.

An enrollment of 1,200 delegates from Marshall county alone will be sought by the executive committee for the State Sunday school convention at Marshalltown May 6th, 7th and 8th.

A contract for 700,000 pairs of automobile license plates for 1925 has been let by the executive council at a cost of six and four-fifths cents per plate, totaling approximately $95,200.

There are fewer tax delinquents this year than usual, despite the talk of hard times among farmers. Fully 90 per cent of the first half of the year's taxes were paid before taxes became delinquent.

The Retail Merchants Bureau of Des Moines is endeavoring to secure the establishment in schools of a course of training in retail salesmanship. Just recently a course in real estate training was instituted at the State University of Iowa.

The ruling of Judge Fuller in district court in Adams county, concerning the validity of the Iowa county tuberculosis testing law, has created much interest and discussion in the farming districts of Iowa. Judge Fuller held that it is illegal for the county board of supervisors to levy the tax necessary to have T. B. testing done unless the question has first been submitted to a vote of the county.

More students are being enrolled yearly at the Iowa State College of Agriculture at Ames. Other agricultural schools make similar reports. Most of these students, practically all, come from families of farmers. If their fathers were despondent and saw no future in farming, they would certainly have discouraged their sons from following in their footsteps and would have urged them to study for another career. The large agricultural school enrollments also mean another thing. It is proof that farmers are realizing more and more that the educated and technically trained men succeed best on land as in other fields of endeavor. Farmers are no longer unschooled tillers of the soil. They are applying scientific methods to agriculture.

"A man may be highly educated in regard to information and facts, but he may be incriminal. A man should be taught morality and the ethics of living with other people. Land is worth $400 an acre in Iowa and is worth four cents in Africa. This is due to the difference in the degree of civilization, and the difference in the degree of civilization results from a different regard for the ethics of living with one another. If everybody in Iowa should cease to have any regard for anybody else and be for himself alone, land would soon be worth what it is in Africa." This was the statement of Dr. W. J. Brown of Cincinnati in an address at Des Moines. Dr. Brown is in Iowa conducting a drive to raise $5,000,000 for the Presbyterian schools in the state. The four Presbyterian colleges in Iowa are Buena Vista college at Storm Lake, Coe College at Cedar Rapids, Parsons college at Fairfield and Lenox college a Hoptkinotn.

It should be a matter of pride in this state that Iowa is a pioneer in the state park movement. Thirteen state parks already have been established in Iowa and formal plans have been made for several additional parks.

With the opening of spring farm work employment conditions in Iowa have shown slight gains according to a report issued by the United States Departmen of Labor. Gains were also registered in leading indusrties in the state with indicatitions of greater improvements during the coming months, the report says.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES

What the Iowa Legislators Are Doing at Special Session For Code Revision

W. R. C. Kendrick, Iowa insurance commissioner, is completely exonerated of all charges made against him in the report of the special Iowa insurance investigating committee. The committee report states that after examining all evidence and witnesses presented by both Senator Charles S. Browne of Jackson county and the department, the committee finds that Commissioner Kendrick instea dof being criticised is to be commended for his enforcement of all insurance laws. The committtee also finds that the commissioner is acting in the best interest of policyholders The committee recommends thirteen changes in the insurance laws which, it developed during the inquiry, appear necessary. However, the committee recommended that a committee from the senate be appointed to investigate insurance laws of both Iowa and other states and to make a report to the forty-first general assembly on new inseurance legislation. This means that the special session will not take up any additional insurance legislation.

Agitation for a gasoline tax law at this special session of the legislature is growing and a bill seems certain to get before one house or the other before the session adjourns. A bill, providing for a tax of 2 cents per gallon, to be levied on gasoline at the point of removal from tank cars in the state, has been drawn by the code commissioners at the request of numerous senators and representatives. The bill provides for distribution of the receipts of the tax as follows: One-third to the primary system in each county in the proportion its primary road mileage bears to the total primary road mileage and two-thirds to the county roads on the same distributive ratio of secondary county road mileage to total secondary mileage in the state. The money would be expended on secondary roads equally between county and township systems.

Miss May E. Francis, state superintendent of public instruction flung the doors of her office open wide to members of the legislature who caused the introduction of a resolution in the House for an investigation of her department. In a letter addressed to the speaker of the House, Joe Anderson, she urged upon him to foster the probe of allege dmalfeasance, bribery, and other offenses which formed the basis of the request for an investigation. Miss Francis told the United Press that she had turned the matter over to her attorney, A. W. Byers, Des Moines. "I want the House to go through with the investigation," she said.

Motor vehicles would not be required to leave tail and head lights burning while cars are parked on the public highways if the senate recedes from its amendment to that effect, refused by the house. The measure brought out a reoccurrence of a fight in the house as that body did not want the compulsory light measure. The senate, however, adopted it and the issue must now be worked out in a conference committee together with other objections to the motor vehicle bill which the house has. Representative McClune, Mthaska county, led the fight against the compulsory light measure.

As a result of the failure of the house drainage committee to concur in all amendments to the drainage bill as passed by the senate, the bill will doubtlessly go to conference as it was believed that the lower body would uphold the opinions of its committee. The committee completed its work and all of the amendments affected are, however, of no great importance and it was thought therefore that there will be little difficulty in the house and the senate coming to an agreement.

A commission of two members from the house and two from the senate have reported to their respective bodies following the return from Mount Pleasant where an investigation was made into the advisability of purchasing the Willits farm for the use of the state hospital at Mount Pleasant. Two members of the commission believe the land is worth $225 per acre, one member considered it worth $200 and one $175.

Some of the bills passed by the senate recently were: To authorize purchase of the Willits farm at Mount Pleasant by the state for the board of control. Appropriations committee at request of Brookhart. Animal industry. Animal industry committee. To legalize establishment of county area tuberculosis eradication plan. Agriculture committee.

After arguing for two days on the highway bill, members of the Iowa house of representative again deferred action to give opportunity for re drafting several sections into a compromise measure.

Compulsory physical connection by every telephone company with other companies is proposed in an amendment to the transmission lines franchises bill in the senate.

The proposal to permit counties to submit to the voters the question of issuing bonds for gravelling their primary and secondary roads, which was approved by the senate, is having hard going in the house. After debating several modifications of the senate plan for half a day the house adjourned without final action on the main issue in order to permit committees to report more bills.

A marriage law containing an eugenics clause which is believed to meet with approval on both sides of the general assembly was laid before the law makers in the form of a conference report on the bill previously passed by both the senate and house, but which contained numerous features over which the senators and representatives differed. The conference report eliminates entirely the provision that both parties to a marriage must submit to physical examination and proposes instead, that both parties be required to file, with the marriage license clerk, an affidavit declaring themselves free, to the best of their knowledge, from venereal diseases. The affidavits must be filed five days before the issuance of the license, but where it is desired to shorten that time, resort may be had to the courts and the court are empowered to waive the five day requirement where it is shown no doubt surrounds the statements of the affidavit. The bill also forbids the marriage of idiots or imbeciles. All six members of the conference committee, signed the conference report.

The budget bill now being considered by a conference committee in the Iowa legislature has reached an impasse, according to members of the committee who expressed a fear that the measure reported out might not pass in either house. The committee itself cannot agree on many of the compromises yet necessary before the bill can be reported out. The enforcement machinery set up by the house bill and that proposed by the Smith amendment have been set aside in favor of one man acting under the governor as director of the budget. The appeal from tax levies is also stricken and the committee, it is reported, cannot agree on the appeal from contracts. Senate members of the committee are said to be sticking for the appeal feature applying to contracts and the house members will not give in. These changes would leave the bill with hardly a vestige of its semblance as passed by either house.

Senaor Holdoegel requested the code commissioners to draft a gasoline tax bill and wrote Governor Kendall to learn whether he would veto it or what kind of a bill, if passed, he would sign. "Reduced to its last analysis," the governor replied, "the measure simply advances the cost of gasoline to every motor user 2 cents per gallon. The process by which this is accomplished may be denominated a 'license', a 'levy' or a 'privilege 'or whatever substitute may be preferred to escape the disagreeable fact that it is a sales tax upon oil employed for the propulsion of automobiles. Such a tax is offensive to me in any event, but especially so at the present juncture, when the people of the state and country are overwhelmed with the common burdens of government."

An investigation of serious complaints from many sources in the state that Miss May E. Francis, state superintendent of public instruction, has made rulings on the qualifications of teachers and accerditing of schools not in accordance with law or precedent was proposed in a resolution introduced in the house of the Iowa legislature. The resolution proposes that the investigation be conducted by the house judiciary committee. The committee, if the resolution were adopted, would be authorized to subpoena witnesses and compel the production of any documentary evidence it might deem necessary. The resolution was signed by Representatives Yenter of Johnson, Held of Plymouth, Gallagher of Iowa, Bradley of Poweshiek, and Healy of Hancock.

Action by the senate wiped out the differences between the two houses on another measure—that relating to the powers of county attorneys. The senate had adopted an amendment interpreted by some members as giving county attorneys powers of a grand jury in the matter of issuing subpoenaes and collecting evidence during the adjournment period of the grand jury. The conference committee added the stipulation that such subpoenaes might be issued only upon authorization of a court, and the senate accepted the report, 28 to 14.

Establishment of a rural credits system by the state, was postponed for at least four year when the Iowa Senate voted to table the motion to amend the constitution so that the state might lend money on Iowa farms. The amendment, before it can take effect, must pass two sessions of the legislature and then receive a majority vote of the people. It was introduced on April 18, 1923, the first day of the special session. While technically the proposal is still alive, it appears from the 33 to 16 votes, that it will be practically impossible to get it off the table for further consideration this year.

The senate refused to concur with the house in several amendments to the taxation bill, the principal one of which was the amendment requiring assessors to take into account the productive capacity of property in fixing its actual value. A similar amendment was defeated in the senate when the bill was on its passage there.

Among the bills passed by the house recently were: Municipal corporations. To appropriate $10,000 to extend heating plant at Ames. To amend constitution on redistricting of state.

Gasoline tax agitation received somewhat of a setback in a letter received by Senator Holdoegel of Calhoun county from Governor Kendall, in which the governor stated his "conclusion that the entire matter would better be deferred until the general assembly convenes next January, at which time conditions may have somewhat improved."

Reading the Palm

"What," demanded the skeptic, "can you tell by looking at a person's hand?" "You can tell a good deal," said the palmist. "If a woman wears a platinum circlet on the third finger of her left hand she is just married. If she wears a plain gold band the marriage dates further back. If she wears a diamond ring on this finger she's engaged. If she's engaged she's probably in love. That's all women want to know about—love and marriage. Yes, by looking at a person's hand you can tell a good deal and surmise a whole lot more."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

When Marvin Barr came home from work at the depot last Thursday evening he found smoke rolling out from the house. The fire alarm was turned in and the fire truck appeared on the job in a jiffy. The smoke was so dense that no flame could be seen at first until water was forced into the basement and it was found that the first floor underneath was afire and creeping up a wall. The flames did not do so much damage as the dense smoke which ruined nearly everything in the house. It is ncessary to refinish the entire house inside and much of the furniture will need refinishing. Mrs. Barr was uptown late in the afternoon and at the time of her leaving the house she did not notice any smoke. It is thought the fire originated from an electric wire.

WHY NEWSPAPER MEN NEVER GET RICH

"Dear Editor:— "I am sending you the enclosed statement, which I hope you will give space in your valuable paper. As there is no fund to pay printing charges, I am relying on your generosity." that's as far aswe read. We get 'em in every mail. They come from private institutions, state institutions, the post office department, and even from the government—from poor old Uncle Sam. Just why there is no provision made to pay for advertising? The president gets his, the secretary gets his, and the assistants and office boys all draw a salary. Just why should the publisher donate his labor. He won't unless he is achump.

"But it is for the public good!" Sure it is. It is for the public good that he preacher sands in his pulpit each Sunday morning and tells you how you should live. It is for the public good that the teacher imparts knowlegde to your children. It is for the public good that the doctor relieves the suffering. But they are not giving their labor. They all have a sated schedule of prices. And the newspaper man sells his space and disseminates knowledge on the same basis. Either that or he goes broke. — Exchange.

The following recently appeared in a newspeaper's advertising columns:

"If Wilbur Blank, who deserted his wife and babe twenty years ago, will return, said babe will knock his block off."

CKED BY HORSE, SERIOUSLY INJURED

as Unconscious Five Days After Accident

Will Abbas, a young man who is rking for Alvin Hoefker on a farm ar Klemme, was seriously injured st week Tuesday when he was cked in the head by a horse and skull fractured.

Mr. Hoefker and Abbas were un- tching four horses from a plow in barn-yard. Abbas was told to d the lines a minute while Hoef- r looked after the harness in nt. Hoefker took a few steps ward the barn when he heard Mrs. efker scream and turning about w young Abbas lying on the ound ground behind the horses. e horses were not wild but some- ing frightened one and it must ve kicked young Abbas as he was ouched over. When the doctor was led it was found that he was cut d bruised about the chin, fore- ead and had a scalp wound, also e leg was badly cut. Thursdy he d not regained consciousness and was taken to the Maon City hos- tal where the X-Ray revealed a ght skull fracture. Abbas did not me to until Sunday and from that me on has gained rapidly. Alvin efker was over to see him yester- ay and reported that the doctor id he could come home Saturday. Mr. Abbas' parents live at Kana- ha and they have been with him.

Nose Dive Not Serious With Enough Altitude

What is known as a "nose dive" is the evolution an obsolete plane makes when out of control, when it has lost flying speed. This is not always done intentionally by the pilot, although it is a favorite stunt performance of exhibition pilots. In a nose dive a plane is falling out of control because the elevators, ailerons and rudder are in such a position with respect to the slip-stream that they are inoperative.

This condition, however, is easily overcome, provided the pilot has sufficient altitude, for with ease he can regain a renewed grip of his controls on the slip-stream and regain his normal flying position. However, with obsolete planes the pilot is often forgetful near the ground, or his controls are not as sensitive as they should be, and he unfortunately fails to recognize the fact that he is losing his vitesse. A plane stalls at the beginning of a nose dive and hits the ground before the pilot is able to recover. Most accidents, as you have probably observed, are what might be termed "100-foot accidents," and in almost every case where the pilot had an altitude of over 300 feet, he would recover before hitting the ground, perhaps lighting with only minor breakages, if any.—Maj. W. G. Schauffler, in Advertising Magazine.

Commercial Wax Obtained From Numerous Sources

The list of things for which wax is used is long and constantly increasing. In the main, commercial wax is obtained from plants, from mineral oils, such as petroleum, and from bees. But there are some other sources. Many plants have a thin film of waxy material that covers the leaves and seems to protect them from too rapid evaporation.

The paraffin of commerce, so widely used, is obtained from petroleum, shale oil and lignite, says the Detroit News. Today petroleum is the chief source, although only certain kinds of oil produce marketable quantities.

In obtaining paraffin from petroleum a freezing mixture is applied, which reduces the temperature of the oil sufficiently to separate it into crystals. Ozocerite is an interesting wax, found in a solid state in beds of coal or associated bituminous deposits. It is related to paraffin and when pure is of similar color and texture.

Beeswax is a wax of very high quality. The comb is carefully saved and shipped by the beekeepers to the market. Spermacetti is a white wax of crystalline structure obtained as a solid precipitate from the head oil of the sperm and bottlenose whales, and to a lesser degree from sharks and dolphin oils.

Not What She Thought

Little Tommy Truffle had made a discovery and, being of a very generous disposition, was eager to share it with others.

"I is—" he began.

Teacher swooped down at once, that superior smile, so irritating to the sensitive mind of youth, upon her lips.

"'I am,' not 'I is,'" she corrected.

Tommy looked a little pained; almost, perhaps, a little doubtful. But he was an obedient little boy.

"I am the ninth letter of the alphabet," he announced.

New Use for Cigarettes

Mexicans working in a lead mine in Chihuahua have found a new use for cigarettes. The mine consists of a series of caves along the sides and bottoms of which lead and silver ore in paying quantities is found. The miners have noticed that smoke from their cigarettes is sucked through cracks in the rocks at certain points. By drilling in the wake of the smoke, they break through into another cave. This method of tracing ore has been followed through a series of caves and still the smoke passes out at the end of the last cave discovered, indicating that there are other caves ahead.

Lights to Test the Dye

Of foreign origin a new machine called a fadeometer is used for testing the fastness of dyes. Violet carbon arc lights are used, 40 samples being tested at one time if necessary. Half the sample is exposed to the light, and the other half protected by a metal shade, so that after test an exact comparison can be made. Special carbon rods, impregnated with a secret chemical formula, give the light of this arc fading qualities exactly similar to daylight, although greatly intensified.

Has Odd Leap-Year Watch

John J. Kingsley of Boston, a jeweler, has what is known as a leap-year watch. It contains a wheel, very tiny in proportions, that makes a complete circuit only once in four years, although it is "running" constantly. This leap-year wheel is one of more than 3,000 parts in the rare timepiece. At midnight on the 28th day of every leap year, February, the figures "29" flash on the dial. This watch also strikes the hour regularly. The cost of making it was $10,000.

Movies of Undersea Ruins

Motion pictures of undersea ruins of dead cities along the north African coast were recently taken by archaeologists in airplanes. The films have been declared to be more satisfactory than anything that could have been obtained from the surface of the sea. By this means the course of a sea wall submerged to a depth of 5,000 fathoms was accurately traced.

WONDERFUL FEATS OF FLIES

If Human Beings Had the Quickness of Muscular Movement of Insects They Would Be Great Athletes.

When a man walks four miles in an hour, he takes about 1,760 paces in 15 minutes, or nearly 120 a minute.

If this walk were quickened to a run, a thousand paces would be taken in five minutes, or 200 a minute. Sprinting, the rate might be raised to nearly 300 paces a minute.

But if the human being could move his legs as fast as the ordinary house fly moves his wings, the pace would rise from 300 paces per minute to 19,000, and the ground would simply be dashed over. Supposing that you stride a yard in walking, you would cover 19,000 yards, or more than 11 miles, in a minute.

If we had the quickness of muscular movement possessed by the fly we should indeed be wonderful athletes. This insect is able to move its wings at the rate of 330 beats to the second. He is busier in wing beat than the bee, for the latter has a wing beat of only 190 to the second.

When we study these figures of wing power we find that the fly is a creature to be respected and envied. He leads the world in actual muscular energy, and is relatively a giant in strength.

A man or a horse does well enough if he pulls his own weight. A beetle thinks nothing of his own weight. He wants it multiplied several times over before he feels that he has got a pulling job really worthy of his powers.

Slip of the Pen.

"Bill!" the poet gasped, staggering to his friend's room.

"Why, what's wrong?" the friend inquired, grasping hold of the tottering man.

"Wrong!" the poet muttered. "Ye gods! I wrote a poem about my little boy. I began the first verse with these lines: 'My son! My pigmy counterpart.'"

"Yes, yes?"

The poet drew a long breath as he took a newspaper from his pocket.

"Read!" he cried suddenly. "See what the criminal compositor did to my opening line."

And the friend struggled unsuccessfully to stifle his mirth as he read aloud: "My son, my pig, my counterpart!"—Judge.

Ancient Adding Machines.

That the ancient Inca civilization in Peru possessed an adding and calculating machine has been revealed in the recent discovery by excavators of a knotted cord, or "quipu," in the ruins of a prehistoric tomb. The cord is 16 yards long and contains 100 knots. Divided into ten unequal sections, these knots represent the odd numbers from 1 to 19. The sections are of different colors, including red, brown, yellow, blue and green, and are separated by silver beads, which represent the even numbers from 2 to 20. By using this simple way of counting, based on the decimal system, rapid calculations can be made.

The Morning After.

Two farmers had been enjoying a festive evening. They had a drive of five miles before them and it was a very dark night, but the horse knew the way. Side by side they sat and went along at a spanking pace. At length they swung around a sharp turn in a most alarming manner, missing an obstruction by an inch or two.

"Gently, George; gently round the corner, old man," murmured Bill.

"What! Haven't you got the reins, either?" he said.

Temporary Relief.

The grand promoter had him cornered and was eying him solemnly.

"Listen, my friend."

"Uh?"

"Why don't you provide something for a rainy day?"

The prospect, with a feeble attempt at humor, responded: "I have $5 saved up for an umbrella."

"Temporary relief," thundered the grand promoter. "That would buy 10,000 shares of my mining stock."

GROW NEW TUBER IN SOUTH

Thousands of Southern Farmers Are Now Raising the Dasheen With Success.

An article of food that the Department of Agriculture has introduced is the dasheen. In fact, the department grew the first specimens in this country and since then has made a systematic search for better varieties in many parts of the world. Work on the improvement of those found suitable to the South is being carried on by the government's plant hunters and propagators. A nematode disease attacked the potato-like tubers and a method of destroying the pest was successfully worked out.

All of the operations—planting, cultivating, harvesting, storing, packing and cooking—have been carried out with a marked degree of success, and now the growers in the West Indies, the new tuber's native home, come to Washington for the latest information on producing and handling the crop, rather a nice tribute to the men in Uncle Sam's employ.

It is a good crop in parts of the South where fall potatoes are a failure. Although the distribution of improved dasheens began only a few years ago, already more than two thousand southern farmers are growing them, largely for home use, although last year several carloads were shipped to northern markets.—Washington Star.

Peanut Oil in China.

Peanut oil is one of the prime necessities of the Chinese in South China and means as much to them as olive oil to the Spaniard and as lard to the American. It is the cooking oil and foodstuff of the race. The United States consul reports from Hongkong that both imports and exports of the oil are steadily increasing. During the first quarter of 1923 imports reached the high total of $738,796, and exports $571,920. Large stocks of peanut oil are always maintained in Hongkong. Most of the local oil is crushed from nuts grown in the colony, in South China and in North China. Exports are shipped chiefly to nearby markets in South China, the Straits Settlements, the United States, Indo-China, Siam, the Philippines and Canada.

Toad Spurts Blood.

The so-called "horn-toad" of our Southwest, which is really a small lizard, has a habit of "spitting blood," as the boys of that region will tell one. But Prof. Vernon Baily, chief field naturalist of the United States Department of Agriculture's biological survey, says the blood comes really, not from the creature's mouth, but from its eyes. The Mexicans call them "sacred toads," because they weep tears of blood. The weeping, however, is more like shooting, or squirting, a fine stream or spray, sometimes to a distance of several feet.

Order of Merit.

Twenty-one years ago the Order of Merit was founded by King Edward, carrying with it the right to add "O. M." to a recipient's name. The order is limited to 24 members, exclusive of foreign honorary members. Military members include the Earl of Ypres and Earl Haig, while among the civil members are Lord Morley, Thomas Hardy, Sir George Trevelyan—all octogenarians—Sir J. M. Barrie, Lord Haldane, Lord Balfour, and Mr. Lloyd George. The ribbon is blue and crimson.

Wanted to Be Sure.

The tramcar was full and the old lady tired and feeble. Quickly a young man offered his seat.

One minute," she said. "Do I look eccentric?"

"No, madam."

"Or as if I am likely to go straight home and alter my will in your favor?"

"Such a thing never occurred to me," stammered the young man, while the other passengers stared and giggled.

"Then I'll take your seat," said the old lady. "But I don't want any misunderstanding."

Magnificent, for the Dentist.

A friend of ours went to a dentist and asked him to take a look at his teeth. The dentist did so and seemed full of admiration.

"What do you think of them?" asked the patient.

"Magnificent! Magnificent!" was all the dentist said.

"Then you don't find anything to do to them?"

"To do to them? Why, there are four to be pulled, six to be filled and a bridge to make," said the dentist.

Silent Admiration.

A clergyman with a large nose was invited to tea with a woman who had a talkative child, whom his mother warned severely not to pass any rude remarks during the meal.

The boy's eyes were fixed on the clergyman so long that the mother frowned upon the child, whereupon he shouted:

"It's all right, mother; I'm not going to say anything. I'm only looking at it!"

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Last Sunday the W. F. M. S. had the right of way. The attendance at this meeting was good if we consider the rainy weather and the muddy roads. The annual Thank offering was raised. Some were not there to contribute. Such may still do so and thereby help swell the offering.

This was the first of the specials announced before. Our next special will be the specjal service of next Sunday in both the Klemme as well as th Liberty church. This will be Communion Sunday and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered in both churches. All are urgently invited to be present at these service as they are provided for your good. The time of these services is as follows:

Klemme
Regular preaching service at 10 a.m.
Sunday school at 11 a. m.
Sermon and Holy Sacrament 8 p.m.

Liberty
Sunday school at 10 a. m.
Sermon and Holy Sacrament 11 a.m.

On May 11 is Mother's Day. This should be an outstanding day to every man, woman and child. On this day we especially remember what our mothers have meant or mean to us. A specjal service is planned for the occasion. Plan to be there. All mothers having no other church home or affiliation are especially invited to attend this service. Definite announcement next week.

COOLIDGE SEEKS JAP COMPROMISE

President Works on Plan That Will Be Acceptable to Tokyo.

Washington.—The first intimation of Presdient Coolidge's attitude on the Japanese immigration question developed when it was announced officially at the White House that the President is at work on a compromise plan which would be acceptable alike to the exclusionists and the Japanese.

The President has held several conferences the last few days with Secretary Hughes and Senator Colt, both of whom are antagonistic to the Johnson immigration bill insofar as it abrogates the existing "gentlemen's agreement" with the Japanese government.

It is plain that the way of the President in ironing out the difficulty will be beset with obstacles on all sides. The plan of the President is to so adjust the matter that the imperial government will not consider itself affronted. This will be difficult, because of the overwhelming vote in both houses of congress for the Johnson bill as it now stands.

Progress in effecting a compromise will be accomplished slowly, if at all.

It is believed that President Coolidge will endeavor to obtain reconsideration of the exclusion clause. If that move fails, it is possible that he may veto the bill.

The Japanese are pulling every possible wire in the United States to prevent passage of the exclusion measure. Their object, at whatever sacrifice, is to avoid what they term the humiliation of being barred from the United States by statute.

One plan is that the gentlemen's agreement should be changed so that Japan will not grant passports to the United States except to those who wish to travel and study.

Chekaists Shoot 3,000 Prisoners; Dig Own Graves

Berlin.—Taking them in groups of 20, cheka soldiers compelled 3,000 prisoners, captured during the recent uprising in the Amur district of Siberia, to dig their own graves and then, lining them up in front of the pits, shot them down with machine guns. Several of the revolutionaries, badly wounded and left for dead, escaped and brought the news to the outside world.

American Banks Reopen Channel to German Gold

New York.—Completion of the first step by which American financial resources will be made available for German rehabilitation was revealed in the announcement that a group of representative American banking interests had placed at the disposal of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht's gold rediscount bank a credit of $5,000,000, an amount which may be increased later as required.

Illinois Bandits Take $63,000 From Bank Clerk

Granite City, Ill.—Bandits held up and robbed T. D. Gradinaroff, assistant cashier of the Granite City National bank, of $63,000 in currency which he had just received at the post office from the St. Louis Federal Reserve bank. Several shots were fired by Gradinaroff and the bandits, but no one was wounded.

United States Revenue Increase Is $226,709,192

Washington.—Internal revenue receipts for the nine months from July 1, 1923, to March 31, 1924, showed an increase of $226,709,192.89 over collections for the corresponding period of 1922-23, the Treasury department announced. The totals of receipts were, respectively, $2,146,803,265.65 and $1,920,094,072.76.

Mexican Land Owners Slain by Agrarians

Mexico City.—Bands of armed agrarians are terrorizing the Chicontepec district of the state of Vera Cruz. Twenty-five land owners have been assassinated by agrarians, who charge all the land owners in the region with complicity in the recent rebellion, according to a commission of Chicontepec residents arriving in Mexico City to demand protection.

Bluejacket Reported Killed in Honduras

San Salvador.—Several American bluejackets have been killed in Honduras, according to advices received here. An attache of the American legation in Tegucigalpa is said to have proceeded to La Libertad, Salvador, a cable station, to communicate with the government at Washington.

Passenger Service Reduced

South Bend, Ind.—The Michigan Central railway has discontinued passenger service between South Bend and Niles. The trains have been unprofitable since electric service between the two cities has been increased.

Coolidge Appoints Democrat

Washington.—Roland M. Baker was, nominated by President Coolidge as postmaster at Boston. He is the present postmaster and is a Democrat, first appointed by President Wilson.

FRANK W. ALDRICH

Frank W. Aldrich, banker of Bloomington, Ill., who will go before the next legislature and ask for the adoption of a bill which will convert the state into one gigantic game preserve and prevent the killing of any wild bird or wild animal. Mr. Aldrich contends that 95 per cent of the population of the state would prefer that all such animals be permitted to live, and that the other five per cent, the sportsmen, must give up their inclination to hunt in Illinois.

INSURANCE BONUS BILL PASSES SENATE

Final Vote, 67 to 17, Comes After Hot Debate.

Washington.—Following the defeat of the Copeland cash option amendment by a vote of 47 to 38, the senate passed the soldier bonus bill based on the endowment insurance certificate plan. On the final roll call the vote was 67 to 17. Eight Republicans and nine Democrats voted against the measure.

The bill as passed by the senate closely resembles the house bill. There will be an early agreement in conference and the measure will soon go to President Coolidge for acceptance or rejection. Opinion is divided whether the President will sign the bill or veto it. Should he veto it, the bonus leaders declare there are votes in sight at both ends of the capitol to enact the measure over the veto.

Final disposition of the bill in the senate was effected after a storm of speechmaking in which Democratic senators denounced the insurance measure as a subterfuge and declared their purpose, once the bill is enacted, to seek to bring about passage of a cash bonus proposition.

They renewed their charges that part of the Republican senators had agreed not to vote to override the veto of a cash option bill and thus had created a situation which made it impossible to support the cash option amendment without endangering bonus legislation.

Senator Simmons, ranking Democrat on the finance committee, assailed the bill as "a gold brick."

Inherits $2,000,000; Fears He Owes More

Chicago.—Suit was started here to determine whether a $2,000,000 legacy to Col. Robert H. Morse is an asseet or a liability. The will disposing of the $22,000,000 estate of his father, Charles H. Morse, seems to provide that Col. Morse shall pay the federal and state taxes, plus the attorney's fees, which amount to $900,000 more than the legacy itself. The suit is to have the will construed.

Col. H. H. Rogers Sails, but Not to See His Daughter

New York.—Col. H. H. Rogers, father of Millicent Rogers, who was married to Count Salm von Hoogstraeten a few months ago, sailed for England on the Berengaria. Colonel Rogers, asked if he would see his daughter, replied: "My daughter is in Paris. I do not plan to go out of England. My purpose is to place my son in Oxford."

Revolt in Two Cuban Provinces, Havana Rport

Havana.—Local papers print a report of a revolution in Camaguey and Oriente provinces. They assert that Gen. Calos Garcia y Velez, president of the Veterans and Patriots association, who was last heard of as in the United States, has landed in Oriente and taken charge of the revolution.

England and Belgium Accept the Dawes Plan

Paris.—England, Belgium and France notified the interallied reparations commission they accepted the Dawes plan as a basis for discussion and settlement of the reparations problem. Italy's acceptance is expected.

Murderess Commits Suicide

Detroit, Mich. — Wanda Elaine Stopa, who slew Henry Manning, caretaker at the home of her alleged lover at Chicago, killed herself in the Hotel Statler here by taking cyanide in sugared water.

Denver Has Heavy Snow

Denver, Colo.—Six inches of snow was on the streets following an all-night storm. At times the storm reached the proportions of a blizzard. Street railway service was halted.

MEANS' DIARIES OF SPYING GONE

Vital Evidence in Daugherty Case Is Taken by a Forged Order.

Washington.—Gaston B. Means, the international investigator whom William J. Burns praised as the "greatest detective in the world," frankly admitted to the Brookhart committee that he had been duped.

Fake officers, carrying a letter bearing the forged signature of Senator Brookhart, called on Mr. Means and calmly carted away the volumes of written evidence which was to have been the food and drink of the committee for another two weeks.

It was this mass of papers which was to have substantiated the mass of verbal testimony which Means had offered at intervals since midwinter. Included in the missing record was the 23-volume dairy of Mr. Means himself. Somewhere on the pages of these mysterious books was the story of how Means had "gotten the low down" on Secretary Mellon.

Members of the committee reluctantly confessed when they heard the news of the disappearance that the backbone of the Means testimony had been fractured. if not completely broken.

The documents were spirited away several days ago. The fact that there was something wrong about the transaction developed when the clerk of the Brookhart committee reminded Mr. Means to bring his records with him when he made his appearance before the committee.

"I turned those records over on your order of March 31—the committee has all the records," Means told C. H. Rankin, the committee's clerk.

Means went home. In half an hour he returned with the letter itself. It read:

"You are hereby commanded to deliver to the senate committee on investigation of the Department of Justice all your records, files, diaries, reports, copies of reports, and all papers in your possession in connection with the Department of Justice, to be impounded."

The letter was signed, "Smith W. Brookhart, chairman."

Buddhist Prays for U. S. Envoy in Tokyo Embassy

Tokyo.—Buddhist prayers for the welfare of Cyrus E. Woods, American ambassador to Japan, and for success for his efforts to maintain friendship between the two nations were offered up in the American embassy by Senjiro Honda, one of the leaders of the Nichihen sect of Buddhism. Clad in gorgeous priestly robes, Honda was the most picturesque of a score of prominent Japanese who called on Mr. Woods to discuss the United States exclusion legislation.

Bands of German Reds Burn Silesian Homes

Berlin.—Revenging themselves for the high cost of living caused by the peasants on big estates charging double the peace time prices for foods, bands of communists are again burning houses in Silesia. These communists are organized under the name of the "Red Rooster." The latest outbreaks occurred near former Crown Prince Frederick Wilhelm's estate at Oels.

165,000 Women Sign Pleas for World Court

Washington.—Petitions signed by 130,000 Minnesota women favoring American participation in the world court were presented in the senate by Senator Shipstead, Farmer-Labor, Minnesota. Chairman Lodge of the foreign relations committee also put in a petition presented to him by 35,000 Iowa women dealing with the same subject.

Bill to Raise Congress Pay to $10,000 a Year

Washington.—Increase in salaries of senators and congressmen from $7,500 to $10,000 a year is proposed in a bill introduced in the house by Representative Cellar, Democrat of New York. The increased salaries would be paid to members of the next congress, to be elected in November, and the hold-over senators.

Widow Gets 1 Ct. Damage From Moonshine Seller

Milwaukee, Wis.—The first case in Milwaukee abainst a saloon-keeper for damages as a result of a death caused by moonshine liquor brought a verdict of one cent damages for a widow, Mrs. Katherine Baumdicker, who sued John Nett for $20,000 because of liquor alleged to have been sold to her husband.

$1,000,000 Blaze in Oakland

Oakland, Cal.—Damage estimated at $1,000,000 was done by a fire which virtually destroyed the plants of the Union Construction company, the General Metal company and the Pacific Coast Engine company.

Warned of Fever Menace

Manila.—Dr. Victor G. Huisor, Far East representative of the Rockefeller Foundation, has issued a warning to health authorities here to take especial precautions against yellow fever.

Thaw Pens Maze of Words About His Trial to Judge

Philadelphia, Pa.—In a rambling signed statement Harry Thaw voiced objection to his return to the state asylum under guard, although the trial jury had pronounced him of sound mind. The statement reads:

"Here is a small detail that yesterday if Dr. 'Rabbit' Fuller won he should have allowed me to return with my attendant, Mr. Connolly, as I am certain either Drs. Awen Copp or Bond. But he paraded with two other attendants, and that was the limit, consequently I am sending the inclosed letter to my lawyers, and in doing so I am sending this to you, for you can show that that rabbit lie was simple malace as you can see."

Sovietism Backs Senate Foes, Says Daugherty

Columbus, O.—Harry M. Daugherty told an audience of friends and neighbors here that he had given up his cabinet post rather than "contribute to a treasonable cause." Files of the Department of Justice, he said, contained "absolute proof of the plans, purposes and hellish designs of the communist internationale." Bear in mind," he added, "that the files which I refused to deliver to the Wheeler investigating committee at the time my resignation was requested were demanded by Brookhart and Wheeler, two United States senators who spent last summer in Russia with their soviet friends."

Coolidge Now Has 713 Votes; Needs but 556

Washington.—President Coolidge won 119 delegates in the Pennsylvania and New Jersey primaries and the Delaware convention Tuesday. Pennsylvania gave him 79, New Jersey 31 and Delaware 9. Wednesday Oklahoma gave him 25. This gives the President to date a total of 713 delegates, with only 556 needed to nominate.

London.—Adb El Krim, leader of the rebel Moors, appealed to Prince Minister MacDonald to invite Spain to cease war, and has offered to send an ambassador to discuss conditions.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES

The compromise budget bill was swept through the house by a vote of 63 to 35 after a three and one-half hour debate. Practically every member of the house agreed on the passage of the sections relating to the budgeting of state funds, but representatives Berry of Monroe, Rassler of Pocahontas and Criswell of Boone fought the adoption of the committee report for over three hours. The conference report on the budget bill was not amendable. The importance attached to the bill and the comparative speed with which the compromise measure passed the house is taken as an indication that the bill will be passed by the senate. If the bill is passed by the senate the first budget report for the state will be submitted to the forty-first assembly when it convenes next November. The bill, as it was passed by thme house provides for one director of the budget, a state budget system, board of appeal, and a local budget system to apply to all municipalities.

The scheme of collecting the laws to be published in the new code has virtually been decided upon. It is now proposed to gather up the sections of the compiled code, which have not been modified by the special session and dovetail the sections modified in the code revision bills with them and publish the whole volume as the new code. This session has dealt with only about a third of the sections of the compiled code, which was a compilation of the existing laws deemed unnecessary to revise.

Iowa will go under the budget method of control of public finances both state and local within the year as the result of the final adoption in the legislature of the compromise budget bill, drafted by the conference committee of the two houses. The provisions of the bill are very similar to those of the federal budget law. The house passed the bill by a vote of 63 to 35 and the senate followed suit by approving it by a vote of 29 to 15.

The eugenics marriage bill met defeat when the senate adopted the third conference committee report on the measure, which eliminates all reference to the subject from the marriage and incest bill. The house previously had adopted the same report. The measure now goes to the governor in virtually the same form in which it was submitted by the code commission.

The budget bill as passed by the House creates the office of director of the budget, who will be nominated by the governor and appointed by the senate to serve a six-year term. If the present bill passes the senate, the first director of the budget will be appointed prior to July 1, 1924. He will serve until July 1, 1927. The duties of director of the budget include the preparation of a state budget, consideration and recommndation of local budgets, and investigation of state departments.

State sale of gasoline, proposed by Representative Ontjes of Grundy county was lightly treated in the house and Ontjes amendment was defeated by a vote of 8 to 70. The Ontjes proposal was a modification of the South Dakota plan. It provided for the sale by the executive council of gasoline, fuel oil and coal whenever the council deemed unfair discrimination was being made or pools and trusts maintained.

Consideration of a bill to compel a showing of necessity in the application to railroad commissioners for the establishment of bus lines, was refused by the lower house of the state legislature when the bill failed by a wide margin to gain the necessary two-thirds majority to permit its introduction. The existing law requires bus companies to show only that the bus lines they wish to establish will be convenience to the public.

Thirty-two bills remain to be acted on before recess. Of these eleven are not code revision bills. They are mainly legalizing acts. The twenty-one remaining code revision bills must be disposed of to complete code revision. Ten of these bills interlock with each other and each must be passed in the revision order of things. Six bills, all of which are affected by the budget bill, cannot be acted on until the budget bill is passed.

This code revising session will doubtless be Iowa's last. It is intended to be, for the present session has passed a law providing for the publication of a new code every four years and for keeping up the revision from session to session. In every odd numbered session hereafter session laws will be printed and in every even numbered session a new code, embodying the previous sessions laws will be published.

The house concurred with the senate in passing the verbose and technical bill on future estates.

An act to legalize the special election held at Valley Junction when voters authorized a bond issue for $20,000 for the purpose of extending the waterworks system, passed the house of representatives.

The senate insurance investigation disclosed the laxity of Iowa insurance laws and makes its imperative that they be tightened so that the speculative element in the floating and operation of insurance companies may be reduced to a minimum.

WHO'S WHO—and WHEREFORE

Pershing Writing a Book on World War

Gen. John J. Pershing is writing a book on the World war. It will not be published until after he retires. That being the case, perhaps he intends to talk plainly. Anyway, he returned, the other day, from a six-months' visit to Europe, with material for his book, and was saluted with 17 guns as he passed Governor's Island on the United States liner George Washington.

His book will be published after he retires, in September. Meantime, the general refuses to say whether it will be an impersonal history of the part America played in the war, or his personal experience as commanding general of the American Expeditionary Forces.

While he was in Europe during the past months General Pershing had conversations with Marshals Joffre and Foch and revisited the battlefields. He says everything is being reclaimed so rapidly that the traces of war will soon be obliterated in many places. The general good humoredly refused to estimate how soon there will be another war in Europe or to guess whether Grover Cleveland Bergdoll will have returned to America by that time.

General Pershing took occasion personally to investigate the complaints about the upkeep of cemeteries of the A. E. F. in Europe. He declares the cemeteries are being satisfactorily attended to and will be in good condition by Memorial day. "Trees will not grow overnight," he said. Only the cemetery at Romagne is behind the others, the general says, and that is because the roadbuilding there is not yet finished.

Barry Tells Stories of Capital Life

Observing visitors to the capitol note at the right hand and a little in front of the vice president as he presides over the United States senate a smallish, neatly groomed, mustached man, with penetrating eyes. He is the senatorial sergeant-at-arms, and while he is sitting there on the dais he officially represents "the power and dignity of the United States senate"—although there are people nowadays who think it has little of either.

As senate page, as newspaper correspondent, and as sergeant-at-arms this man has been nearly half a century on the Washington scene. His name is David S. Barry, and he came as a boy from the Michigan town of Monroe, near Detroit. He must be about sixty-five years old. He looks like a man who could tell a lot—if he would.

Well, Mr. Barry has written a book, "Forty Years at Washington." He has told many interesting things, though by no means all he could tell.

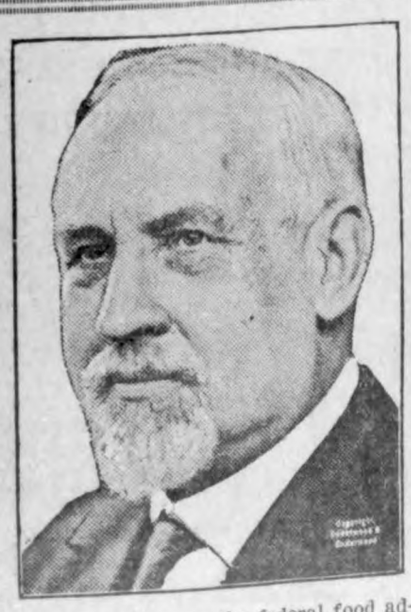
Mr. Barry was correspondent of the New York Sun and numerous other papers, and his memoirs cover the period from Hayes to Harding. He devotes a brilliant chapter to the Hayes-Tilden controversy, one that threatened for awhile to plunge the country into another civil war.

Columbia Dean Takes Daugherty's Place

Harlan Fiske Stone of New York is the new attorney general of the United States, succeeding Harry M. Daugherty, resigned. The President selected Mr. Stone because he has known him for thirty years and has confidence in him; because he regards the New York man as possessing the desired qualities of thorough legal knowledge and administrative capacity, and because he looks upon the Columbia dean as a "$100,000 man willing for patriotic reasons to accept a $12,000 job." Mr. Stone received his degree at Amherst one year later than the President. At college he played football and was class orator. Nowadays he's an enthusiastic fisherman. He is a Republican, but has never been active in politics. His family consists of his wife and two sons, one an instructor at Harvard university and the other a student at the same school.

Mr. Stone is a native of Chesterfield, N. H. He was admitted to the bar in New York city in 1898 and the following year he undertook his work as instructor of law at Columbia. He has been on leave of absence from Columbia for a year and his resignation as dean of the law school became effective upon his confirmation by the senate. Ever since his admission to the bar Mr. Stone has had an active law practice, with much success. He is also a director of a railroad company and of several other corporations.

Ladd, Chairman of Senate Oil Sleuths



Senator Edwin Freemont Ladd of North Dakota has been the chairman of the senate committee investigating the oil leases since the resignation of Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin, because of ill health. His well-fed and comfortable look is a good advertisement of his ability as a chemist, agriculturalist and food expert. For a Republican from North Dakota, with a Non-partisan endorsement, he looks surprisingly mild—mild enough to offset the fierceness of his fellow-member, Senator Walsh of Montana.

Senator Ladd was born in Maine in 1859 and was educated at the University of Maine. He arrived in North Dakota by way of New York in 1890, becoming professor of chemistry at the agricultural college and chemist of the experiment station at Fargo. In 1916 he became president of the college. He has been food commissioner for the state and head of the regulatory department for twenty years or more. He was the federal food administrator for the state during the World war. Moreover, for five years he edited and published the Sanitary Home and the North Dakota Farmer.

Fire Fighters Perish in Chicago Blaze

At least seven firemen and one civilian were killed and a score were injured in Chicago when an explosion in a burning building caused a wall to fall, burying the men. Above are seen firemen searching for the bodies of their comrades, and Father Ed A. Jones, who made his way into the ruins to administer the last rites of the church to the dying.

Fire-Fighting Railway Train

Probably the first fire-fighting railroad train in regular service is this, put into service by the Southern Pacific railroad. It is kept in constant readiness to rush to the scenes of the severe forest fires which so often sweep the high Sierras of California. The locomotive, geared for pumping, draws tank cars holding enough water for an hour's continuous work.

Brought Joy to Home. Mrs. Price's Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Scootac, Pa.—"I never felt like working, and when I would try to do any work standing on my feet, I would just drag around all day long. At times I would have terrible pains and would be in bed three or four days. I was in this condition about a year when I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the papers. I had heard different women say it was good for women's troubles, and my aunt thought it would help me as it had helped her. So I took the Vegetable Compound and it brought things right, and I was in good shape before I became a mother again. I believe it helps at birth, too, as with both my other babies I suffered a great deal more than with this one. I thank you a thousand times for the good your medicine has done me. It has surely made our home a happy one."—Mrs. Robert Price, Scootac, via Lockhaven, Pa.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, 98 out of every 100 report they were benefited by its use.

FISHING LICSNSE IS NEXT BOTH ER

Cherokee Times— County Auditor Dailey has a new diversion. When not otherwise engaged he is called upon to answer queries as to the various applications of the statute which will impose a license of $1.00 per year for the occupation, pastime or pretense of fishing.

The auditor understands that minors under a certain age, and all women will be excused from any payment of a license fee. He does not understand why the legislature should have cast such a sarcastic reflection against the ability of women to catch fish, or why, when a family is in need of fish the man is expected to be excused from his laboor and the wife must fare fore for food.

He is abie to inform all anxious inquiries that a fishing party composed of father, mother and six children is entitled to operate seven fishing outfits, but there is nothing in the law to forbid him baiting the hooks and stringing the catch. With good luck for the other members of the party the father shuld have profitable employment. There is no license for digging worms or seining minnows. Moreover, there is nothing the law authorizing fish and game wardens to ascertain whether a person engaged in fishing, and by manner of dress purporting to be a woman is really a male in masquer ading.

It costs less to paint than to repair

A coat of good paint on your barns and other outbuildings costs you a lot less than the repairs you'll have to make if you don't paint in time. Don't let the weather get a chance at your barn—don't let it get bare and dingy looking. Paint now—with Lowe Brothers Barn Paint. It covers and hides better than ordinary paints. That makes it cost less at first. And it holds its color and wears longer too. That makes it cost less in the end.

Lowe Brothers BARN PAINT

We sell Lowe Brothers Paints, Varnishes, Stains, and Enamels. But we do more than that—we place our long experience in the paint business at your service, to help you, no matter what your needs are. Don't hesitate to ask.

"How I Suffered with my Stomach and Catarrh of the Head"

Took Four bottles of PE-RU-NA and now cannot praise it enough

Miss Emelie A. Haberkorn, 2251 Gravois Ave., St. Louis, Mo., writes: "For over two years I was troubled with internal catarrh. I read a Pe-nu-na booklet and began taking the treatment. Tongue cannot describe how I suffered with my stomach and the catarrh in my head. I began to feel better as soon as I had used four bottles and now I cannot praise it enough. I now enjoy as good health as ever and would not think of doing without Pe-ru-na."

Dr. Hartman's famous remedy has become the standby in thousands of American homes for the relief of coughs, colds, catarrh and every catarrhal disease.

Insist upon genuine Pe-ru-na and enjoy satisfaction.

Tablets or liquid and sold everywhere.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

He lifted his face after a moment and chuckled complaisantly.

"Big Jack," he went on, "couldn't kill him with a nigger maul. Didn't 'e fetch that chuckle head a groanin' lick? Lord! Leetle too high, though," he commented in the nice criticism of a man who, in his day, was known to have been the most dangerous rough-and-tumble fighter on the border.

He paused, and his face assumed the same puzzled expression it had worn at the festival the evening before.

"I reckon hit couldn't 'a' be'n, an' it's jist as well not t' say nothin' about it," he went on, "but I thought that feller favored that scape-gal'us of ol' Sime's—Ken Colin—what 'e would 'a' be'n by now. I noticed it when 'e flared up off'n the floor thar with the knife."

Counterman leaned nearer.

"That's jist what I mosey'd up t' talk about." He lowered his voice. "That wus Black Bogus."

Uncle Nick straightened.

"No!"

"Hit were."

The old man swore, took out his pipe again, stared at it and put it back in his pocket.

"Black Bogus—hit couldn't—w'y, ther's fifty sheriffs a-lookin' f'r him."

"Yes, an' them same fifty sheriffs ain't none too dern'd anxious t' find 'im. He's a bad man with a six-gun.

"That's Jist What I Mosey'd Up t' Talk About." He Lowered His Voice. "That Was Black Bogus."

He may be Ken Colin—that I don't know—but I do know he's Black Bogus. I run afoul of 'im three year back, down Vincennes way. It wus when—"

The fisherman stopped, breathed hard, passed his hand up over his sunken eye socket and sat staring out into the gathering night. The aged hunter studied him covertly. More than once he had thought of asking for the story of that lost eye, but the innate delicacy of the born woodsman had restrained him.

"Calc'late you wus some su'prised when 'e swarmed in?"

Counterman turned; felt along the edge of the porch floor with his hands.

"I 'low I werdn't no worse su'prised than he'd 'a' be'n if he 'a' saw me. But I happened t' be back in the corner b'hind the crowd—an' it's a good thing I were. I dasn't come face t' face with Black Bogus. He tricked me once; he won't trick me no more"—the old hunter saw the weather-stained fist of the fisherman grip tight; heard his lanky jaws clamp together; watched him instinctively hitch the holster of his long-barreled six-gun to an easier position at his hip—"an' I've already got enough blood on my hands over—"

He stopped abruptly and again sat staring into the night.

The man was a mystery. He had come to Buckeye as the driftwood comes—nobody knew from where. He paid his way, asked no questions, answered none. In the silence that fell Uncle Nick sat pondering him—what his life story might have been.

The fisherman roused himself after a moment and went on.

"What crosses my path is, how 'e come t' be there, p'tic'lar how 'e happened t' come out s' bold—'specially if 'e is the man you think 'e is. It ain't his way. He never would 'a' done it if it hadn't 'a' be'n f'r Zeke Polick's squir'l whisky." He straightened, glanced around at his aged friend, and had the light been sufficient, the old man might have seen that the twinkle, never long absent from the doubly capable eye, had returned. "Big Jack an' the parson shore did show 'im a good time—while 'e lasted."

Uncle Nick grinned.

"That parson—lord! I ain't b'en t' church in fifty year, but I'm calc'latin' on goin' next Sund'y. If that parson can outface the devil the way he outfaced that hulkin' chuckle-head, he ain't no bad man t' hitch up with."

"I'm only hopin'," Counterman went on, "Big Jack—an' the parson, too, f'r that matter—has seen the last o' Black Bogus. I'm hopin' but I'm doubtin'."

"I ain't, nary a doubt," Uncle Nick chuckled. "Your Black Bogus"—the puzzled expression touched his face again—"got a bellyful las' night. He ain't honein' f'r no more, I'm bettin' m' bottom dollar 'e ain't."

"I dunno," Counterman pursued. "He's a bad lot. Ther' ain't a worse man the length o' the Wabash. An' then there's Loge Belden they say moved in the ol' cabin up Eagle holler last week with 'is sister.

"Cordwood—huh—he ain't no more a wood chopper than I be. He's a river man. Come f'om the K'ntucky mountains in the first place, an' use'n t' be a pearl fisher till they run 'im off'n the river. I never knowed Loge, that is, what y'u might say pers'n'ly. I never see'd 'im till 'e tangled with Big Jack in the post office t' other evenin', but I knowed 'is sister, not the one that's with 'im now but the—other one—the one that's—dead—"

The fisherman bent his head and his voice fell low, finally stopped.

"Black Bogus is an old pal o' Loge's," he went on after a time. "Wouldn't wonder he's harborin' up thar, an' if 'e is, why is 'e? An' what are they both—'r either one of 'em—doin' up hyur in the Flatwoods? Hit looks t' me"—he bent toward his companion—"they've got the'r eye on ol' Sime Colin."

Uncle Nick sat thoughtfully fumbling his chin.

"That'd leave Ken out," he mused. "He wouldn't 'a' fell that low. Anyhow, ther's lots o' folks that looks like other folks." Counterman thought a moment before he spoke again.

"Black Bogus' game is counterf'itin', but he's got the guts f'r anything; an' Loge's or'n'ry enough f'r any dirt. Ther' ain't nothin' I'd put a-past 'im. He's done time twice't a'ready, an' would be doin' it right now if it werdn't f'r 'is sister. Thar's one good gal—as different f'om Loge as the devil f'om Sund'y. Hit's Loge's one good p'int—he thinks a heap of 'is sister."

"Well," commented Uncle Nick with his slow drawl, as the other paused, "hit might be the makin' of ol' Sime if somebody could manage t' pry a dollar 'r two off'n him, an' as f'r Big Jack, I 'low ther' ain't none of 'em honein' f'r more truck with him."

He chuckled complaisantly, possibly fancying that he had put a particularly neat and unanswerable finish to the argument.

"That ain't it," Counterman pursued, "Black Bogus an' Loge are both the kind that strikes in the dark."

"Thunder!"

Uncle Nick's shoulder jerked away from the porch post, and the fisherman caught the glitter of his deep-set eyes in the twilight.

"They cayn't come nothin' like that on the boy 'r I'll strike the warpath m'self. Dunno but what I'll peel an eye on that cabin up the crick."

The old ranger sat erect and restless, drumming with his fingers on the porch floor and looking away across the narrow mouth of Eagle hollow to where Black rock poked his tumbled ramparts up against the eastern sky.

The clatter in the kitchen ceased, Aunt Liza's still sprightly, vastly positive step came across the cabin floor, and a moment later the creak of her rocking chair joined the droning chorus of the beetles.

"Wonder what Big Jack thinks o' the way the parson's a-cuttin' around 'is gal?" Counterman mused. "An' her the best prize in the Flatwoods, even if she didn't have a cent."

Uncle Nick fumbled out his pipe, knocked it on the edge of the porch floor, and filled and lit it.

"I knowed 'is father, Col. David Warhope, when 'e first come t' the Flatwoods up'rds of eighteen years back, an' I knowed 'is grandfather, Old Col. David Warhope. I fit Tecumseh an' the Prophet under the gran'father. The homestead wus a present t' him f'om Gen. Andrew Jackson. Ol' Colonel David an' young Colonel David, they wus both fine, upstandin' men, soldiers every inch, an' Big Jack's like 'em. Hit's too bad the homestead had t' be lost t' ol' Sime, an' the boy bound out to 'im. But even so, he'd make a heap sight more fittin' man f'r a Flatwoods gal than that hump-backed, squinty-eyed parson. Beats the devil the headway he's a-makin' with 'er. I wouldn't 'a' thought—"

"No good'll come of it," broke in the acid tones of Aunt Liza. "Didn't y'u see 'is carryin's on with 'er at the sociable las' night? Big Jack ain't go'n' t' be a bound boy f'rever. She'll rue the day she draps a fine lad like him an' takes up with a furriner."

"Aw, Liza," drawled Uncle Nick, "the parson ain't no furriner he's a college pr'fessor."

"Don't talk to me," snapped the tart voice. "I reckon I know what I see with m' own eyes. Mind what I tell y'u, she'll rue it, an' so'll Sime Colin a-lettin' 'im harbor around like that, don't keer if 'e did go t' school with Ken.

"I bet y'u if 'er mother wus livin' ther' wouldn't be no sich goins-on. I dunno what ol' Sime can be thinkin' about—nothin' but money hoardin' an' lan' grabbin', I reckon. If I had a gal, I'd no more think o' lettin' 'er be harbored up with a teetotal furriner that-a-way—huh—I'd no more think o' lettin' 'er than I'd think o' takin' wings and flyin' t' Ingland. There ain't no sense—"

"Aw, don't be too hard on the parson," interrupted Uncle Nick with a chuckle, "I reckon 'e won't eat 'er."

"Huh!" snorted the voice, in ultimate contempt. "What d' you know about raisin' gals? Cayn't see an inch ahead o' y'ur nose. Hyur we set, in our old age, bar'ly able t' keep soul an' body t'gether, when we might 'a' tuck our pick an' choice—an' me a dingin' it into y'u f'om daylight t' dark jist how it'd be, too."

"Oh, well, Liza" the old man rejoined, in tones more serious, "don't throw it up to a man b'cayse 'is foresight ain't as good as 'is hindsight. You might 'a' done worse. I hain't never be'n in jail yit, an' you hain't never be'n in the porehouse."

The dim figure rocked a while in silence.

"Gals is gittin' e'en a'most too high falutin' these days," she resumed, though in a milder voice. "Bound 'r free, Big Jack's a-plenty good enough f'r Texie Colin, the best breath she ever drawed, with all 'er money an' good looks.

"Use'n t' be a gal could git along with one beau, but now'days—huh—they ain't sadisfied 'less'n they've got two 'r three a-traipsin' after 'em. Things is comin' to a purty pass—that's what I say—to a purty pass. If a gal ain't sadisfied with one beau at a time, how in the name o' sense can y'u expect 'er t' be sadisfied with one husban' at a time?—now there's the business of it, I-jeeminy!"

The air of hard finality with which the grim lips were pursed up and twisted around toward the right ear, the crisp positiveness with which the words were uttered, almost made the twilight seem to crackle, like stiff parchment being folded after the reading of some weighty mandate.

Counterman dropped an arm across his knee and sat very still, as if afraid the slightest sound might touch off again that hair-trigger tongue; Uncle Nick looked away toward Black Rock; the bats darted about in the dim half light, intrepidly threading the bewildering labyrinth of fruit trees; a cricket at the corner of the porch tried to match the creak of Aunt Liza's rocking chair.

CHAPTER X

Warning of the Frogs.

While the cricket carried on his squeaking contest with Aunt Liza's rocking chair, Jack Warhope, in the tiny cabin at the homestead, sat reading by the candle on the small center table—studying would be a truer word, for the book was Professor Asa Gray's celebrated "Manual of Botany."

The breath of the trees came down over the cliff, caught and rustled the pliant sprays of the crimson rambler, then the countryside settled still; the words of the book blurred, dimmed, faded away, and from the transfigured page there looked out at him a face with laughing eyes.

A trim slim figure flitting with unconscious grace across the lawn to where a tall, suave, profoundly bowing man awaited by the rustic seat under the great maple at Whispering spring, crossed his mind—and the face was gone.

He laid the book aside; blew out the candle; turned his chair and sat staring into the fire, still faintly alive and fast waning, behind the open hearth of the cook stove. A stick burned in two, fell into the coals and stirred out a tiny shower of sparks. A bright little blaze flared up, danced over the walls and timbers of the cabin, glinted upon the sword and spurs hanging under the companion pictures beneath the draped flag.

WHAT HE SAVED FROM THE FIRE

By ESTHER HARRINGTON

(©, 1924, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

SAMUEL, alighting from a suburban train, smiled at his pretty wife on the platform.

"I'm so glad the train was on time tonight," she cried cheerily. "I've just the nicest supper keeping hot on the back of the stove, and June has been so irresistible I wanted you two to have time to play a while after supper."

"Sounds great!" exclaimed Sam, beaming. "Nothing like this home and family stuff after a hard day's work."

"I wanted some ice cream to go with the cake," explained Mrs. Emerson, "so I came down to meet you, and we'll stop at the corner store to get the cream."

Samuel affectionately tucked his wife's hand into the crook of his arm. He told her of the day's affairs in town as they walked home. Gayly they made their purchase at the dainty kitchen, then turned into the shady street on which stood their bungalow.

A hum of excitement stirred the quiet atmosphere. A crowd was gathering farther down the street and shouts could be heard. Smoke hung lazily in the air. At sight of the smoke, which came from the direction of their home, a feeling of alarm passed over the couple, and they quickened their steps. Mrs. Emerson nervously gripped her husband's arm. She felt his muscle stiffen and then, as if in an outburst of uncontrollable temper, he roughly flung her from him.

Before she could follow, almost before she realized that their own little bungalow was on fire, Samuel was racing madly, fear and terror seeming to urge him to greater speed.

Smoke poured thickest from the side of the house—from the little kitchen. Violently pushing aside the curious neighbors, Samuel reached the side door and whipped out his key.

A big, broad-shouldered man vigorously tried to pull Samuel away from the burning building, but he reckoned without a strength caused by absolute fear. Infuriated by this moment's delay, Sam struck the man with a force that knocked the well-intended person out of his way. With the door unlocked and half opened, Sam paused. Had he suddenly come to his senses? Was he afraid? Or did he pause to get a supply of fresh air? In another second, deaf to the warning cries of the crowd, he plunged into the dense smoke of the kitchen.

"Sheer crazy!" ejaculated an interested bystander. If that know-nothin' individual comes out of that house alive he won't have saved a thing, 'less it be a necktie or some cooking utensil."

"Yeh," agreed his companion. "Out of his mind. Don't believe he'll come out, though. That room is smoking like a furnace."

The crowd saw thick smoke creep over the roof of the kitchen. They shivered with nervous excitement as they heard the sinister hissing of the water from the fire engine. They waited breathlessly for the return of the man who was risking his life. Would he never come out? Blazing red, a thread of flame shot through the low roof. A beam started to give way. It fell in amidst a shower of bright sparks. The crowd shuddered.

Someone shouted—a wild, triumphant shout. There, at the front of the house, in the open doorway, stood Sam, leaning wearily against the wooden frame, his head hanging, his eyes full of tears. In his arms he carried an ordinary clothes basket.

"There, didn't I tell you he was sheer crazy?" cried the interested bystander. "Didn't I tell you he'd save nothing valuable? Nothing but the family wash. Sheer crazy. Well, lucky he saved his skin.

Struggling with his strange burden, Samuel struggled onto the little porch. Sympathetic friends rushed to steady him, and when he fell forward, dazed by smoke, they roughly snatched the basket from him, dropping it carelessly on the ground. With more tender hands they carried him to a neighbor's house, where the doctor was already caring for his prostrate wife.

The fire was soon quenched, the crowd dispersed and the firemen prepared to leave. The interested bystander maintained his position on the curb until only a few morbidly curious persons remained. With a sad shake of his head he turned and walked down the street.

Suddenly he halted, as if he recalled some forgotten errand, then went back to his first position. He cautiously crossed the tiny lawn until near the front porch. In a corner between the porch and house, entirely forgotten, lay the clothes basket Samuel had brought from the burning house.

The bystander peered at this curiously, then leaned forward to lift the covering, when, to his astonishment, the white flannel blanket moved fitfully and a distinct, though muffled, cry came from underneath. Quickly the man removed the coverlet. There lay a tiny child, waving his small fists in the air.

The bystander was amazed, but he quickly understood the situation. Tenderly picking up the baby in his unique bed, he carried the child to the neighbor's house, arriving just in time to hand the child over to its father as he regained consciousness.

"Not so crazy after all," muttered the bystander, as he went down the street toward his own home and family.

Happy Childhood Days

"Did people ever pat you on the head and make remarks about your being a bright boy?"

"Oh, yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "They said I might be president some day. In fact, those happy childhood hours brought me about as pleasant, and also a reliable, a presidential boom as any I have ever enjoyed."—Washington Star.

"FORTY AND EIGHT" AIDS LEGION POSTS

The Forty and Eight—the "playground" of the American Legion, is proving a valuable adjunct to the parent organization in many instances. Certain problems arise in Legion posts or departmental organizations that the Legion may not always consistently handle. Then the Forty and Eight steps to bat and pinch-hits for the Legion, usually successfully.

This has been true of the organization practically since its formation by Joseph W. Breen, a Philadelphian, in 1921. Originally intended to express the joyousness of the veteran, the society has taken over many arduous duties to perform that the Legion has been unable to meet on account of its more cumbersome organization.

In recent months this has been seen in a national way. In addition to playing a prominent part in the child welfare program outlined by the Legion, the Forty and Eight is extending contact for the national officers of the Legion by personal visits to many sections that the organization leaders will be unable to reach during the year.

Robert J. Murphy, chef chemin de fer, or principal officer of the society, has had outlined for him a seven months' tour which takes him into practically every state. Murphy, with a Legion spirit born of association with organization affairs in Iowa, where interest is usually at flood tide, has responded cheerfully to the task and is meeting with a splendid reception wherever he has gone. Choosing as his subject "The Unpardonable Sin," which he says is just a way of telling the veterans that you can't take anything out of the Legion without putting something in, the Forty and Eight head is speaking before large groups of Legionnaires.

Following a trip through the Central West, after national headquarters of the society had been opened in Indianapolis, Murphy has been visiting Legionnaires on this extensive tour. He went into the South, covered ten states thoroughly, and in addition to boosting his own organization was the center of much real Legion activity. Next he journeys to New England and will wind up his tour and term of office with a long trip through the West, ending at St. Paul, the convention city, in the fall.

He has been closely associated with Legion affairs since his return from service. He organized a post in his home town, Nora Springs, Ia., and served as county commander of all posts there. He was named to the office in the Forty and Eight, and received national recognition at San Francisco because of his advancement of the society's aims.

During the war Murphy served as an instructor in the Officers' Training school at Camp Pike, Ark. He was discharged from service with the rank of a first lieutenant of infantry.

Give a Town a Bad Name—

"Where do we fight next, boss?" asked the ham-and-egg pug, who generally woke up kissing the canvas.

"Kokomo," replied his manager.

Compliments Veterans

Governor Austin Peay of Tennessee recently greeted National Commander John R. Quinn of the American Legion with the statement that responsibility of the World war veterans on the field of battle won the war, and that present responsibilities of the American Legion will win issues of that war in the forums of the people. He said:

"As time goes on people will cease to forget those who composed this mightiest army of all history. The people of this nation are not sufficiently grateful for these services.

"In you, I recognize the potential citizenship of our state. I want you to be interested in problems of government and realize responsibilities of our citizenship."

It's Easy to Pay For a Chevrolet

Everybody wants an automobile.
Everybody can pay for a Chevrolet.
Everybody can afford to own a Chevrolet.
You can buy a Chevrolet just as you buy any other important necessity. Not one family in a thousand pays cash in full for a home. They make a substantial down payment, then pay off the mortgage with what they used to pay for rent, plus other savings.
A Chevrolet can be bought just as you buy a stationary home. It earns its own way and you ride while you pay.
It is the best paying investment any family can make because it provides transportation, saves time, and makes all outdoors your playground, bringing health and happiness to the whole family.
There is a Chevrolet dealer near you. Ask him to show you the different models and explain how easy it is to get, use and pay for the one you want.

STILLE'S IMPLEMENT NEWS

Volume 2—Number 24. Thursday, May 1, 1924.

You're Invited To PLOWING DEMONSTRATION

We want you, as a reader of Stille's Implement News, to attend a tractor plowing demonstration, Tuesday afternoon, May 6th, at the Harry Gibbs farm, southeast of Klemme. You will have the opportunity to see the wonderful McCormick-Deering 10-20 Tractor at work plowing.

The McCormick-Deering 10-20 & 15-30 Tractors are the result of nearly 75 years of farm equipment manufactoring experience. The International Harvester Company is proud of these Tractors—we are proud of them and owners say they are the finest kind of a power plant on wheels.

How would you like to own a tractor with sufficient power to do the wrk you have for it to do—built with a crankshaft guaranteed not to break during the lifetime of the tractor and with crankshaft ball-bearings guaranteed not to wear or burn out for all time!

Wouldn't it be wonderful if the Golden Rule were like the crankshaft of the McCormick-Deering

Tractor—guaranteed not to break or bend for life?

Corn planting time is mighty close Don't you know that a poor Corn Planter, next to a hail storm, is the most disastrous thing you can have in your corn field? Ask us to show you the latest development in planters; the simplest and most accurate planter, the International No. 8.

In the beginning of corn cultivation they used a two-shovel cultivator because they could only see one side of the row at once.

A man said to us th other day that he could not operate a two row ebcause he could not look at two rows at once. He made us smile.

It's Time To Screen!

Now is the time of year to be looking after your Screen Windows and Doors and get them in shape at once before the flies begin to bother—keep the flies out.

We carry a full line of repairs for your Screen Doors and Windows and all accessories as follows:—

Black Enameled Screen Galvanized Screen
(In all widths you need)
Screen Enamel Paint Screen Frame Paint
Screen Door Springs, Hooks, Hinges, Screen Sets—in fact everything for screen doors.
Screen Window Hangers, Hooks, Buttons, etc.
Extension Screen Windows to fit any size window.
Handy Step Ladders, etc.

PLAN TO ATTEND THE SENIOR CLASS PLAY

SENIOR CLASS PLAY NEXT WEEK; MAY 15

Next Thursday Evening is the Date Set for Play "CLARENCE"..

The date for the Senior class play of our High School has been set for next Thursday evening, May 15th. The seniors have selected a fine play this year. It is one that almost every one of you have heard of. It is a great hit in the movies and an equally good play. It is one of Booth Tarkington's well known works, "Clarence." Tarkington is also the author of "The Man from Home," "Penrod," ""The Country Cousin", and many others.

In the play "Clarence" is one ofthe five million men of the American army. He is not distinguished, has no great accompolishment and never went over sea. As an entomologist he finds no job in the army for his work, so they put him at driving mules. When the play opens he is back in civil life and finds a position at the house of a wealthy New York man. Because "he's been in the army" he becomes a friend, philosopher and guide to the agitated and distracted family group.

Cora and Bobby Wheeler are portrait sketches warranted to appeal to every one.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

We look forward with great anticipation to next Sunday's services. It is Mother's Day, and we hope to make it such in every sense of the word. A place of honor is reserved for the mothers on this day, and the entire service will be devoted to honor our mothers or their memory. Of course all will wear the emblem in honor of mother—the pink carnation (or some other flwer will do) if she is still among us; the white flower if she is among the translated. All are invited to attend this service Sunday.

Sunday is also Epworth League anniversary Sunday. This being the Sunday closest to the real E. L. anniversary day, May 14.

We are planning an interesting program along this line for Sunday evening. We want all the young men and women out for this evening service as it is their evening in an especial way. However, everyone else is invited to be present.

VERY MUCH IN THE DARK

Percy and Freddy had been arriving at their office about an hour early every morning.

Their room was so located that the sun shon in very brightly, making sleeping impssible, so one Sunday evening they painted thej windows with black paint and then retired.

When they awake it was eight o'clock, so they literally scrambled for their office. Theb oss met them and said: "What's the idea—where have you been?"

The replied that it was 8:20 and they only had twenty minutes late. "Yes," answered the boss. "But where were you Monday and Tuesday?"

A kiss is about the only thing that will stop a woman's tongue.

IOWA SHOULD EAT CABBAGE

Radio Talks on Food Value to Be Given Over WOI—College to Distribute 100,000 Plants

Cabbage is no longer a humble vegetable but one of the most dignified of all foods, "says Prof Florence E. Busse, head of the instruction in foods at Iowa State College. "This change in our ideas about cabbage has come from a recent increase in our knowledge about it. The almost unequalled vitamin content of raw cabbage and all cold slaws and salad made therefrom makes us sure that people of Iowa can do nothing more likely to keep the doctor away and to promote health and long life than incrase greatly the use of uncooked cabbage."

Professor Busse is to give a radio talk on this subject at 12:45 noon on Wednesday, May 14, and on Saturday May 7, Prof C. L. Fltch, specialist in vegetables at Ames, is to speak from WOI on the production of cabbage which can be stored. Except during early summer, when leaf lettuce is abundant and good, there is no green vegetable which can be used raw, to be had at the price that very one can pay, except cabbage. in Iowa, if the seed be sown or the plants set early, cabbage gets too ripe to store, but if the see dbe sown in the latter part of May and the plants set about July 4, the crop can be stored all winter, to furnish Iowa with pep and vitamins.

The college is supplying home demonstrations agents and farm bureaus with seed for demonstration purpose and is to grow 100,000 plants for cabbage studies by Farm mureau women in the country neighborhoods. At the end of June these plants are to be distributed in cartons such as are used for baby chicks The assortment will include bright red cabbage to give color to salads, crinkly French sorts to make cury threads in the law, late varieties that will graw on sick land, and standard blue-green winter storing Hollander.

AT THE IDLE HOUR

Tonight (Thursday) we are again showing that great picture, "Day-Time Wives." A two reel comedy, "Ringer For Dad," is also on the program.

Saturday Night, May 10—we are showing Roy Stewart in "Pure Grit." This is a thrilling western picture that will be enjoyed by old and young alike. Don't miss it.

Saturday night's comedy is entitled "Feather Pushers." It's just a string of laughs

Two more reels of "Fighting Blood," also.

And don't forget to come early. The show starts at 8:00 P. M.

We have a new mtion picture machine now. Good pictures shown better.

We just want to tip you off, on May 21 and 22 will be the dates for "LIGHTS OUT." Watch for it.

Mrs. A. W. Gauger returned last Friday from Cedar Rapids, where she had been for a couple of weeks. The baby is still in the hospital there but is gaining rapidly and can be brought back to Klemme in a week or so. Rev. Gauger's niece is head nurse at the hospital where the baby is being treated.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Koerner drove over to Clear Lake Saturday morning to get their cottage in readiness for the summer. Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus have rented it until the first of July and are now located at the Lake. "Dad" Keraus is expecting to land some of the big ones as soon as the season opens.

It may not be generally known, but Klemme has a band. They have been rehearsing for some time. The band is entirely independent and is financed by the individual members. They expect to give a free concert in the park Sunday afternoon, May 25th, if we are correct. More will be said about the band later.

LEW LEWIS SERVES BOARD QUARTER CENTURY

LEW LEWIS RESIGNS AS SECRETARY OF SCHOOL BOARD AFTER NEARLY QUARTER CENTURY OF ACTIVE SERVICE

In Token Of His Loyal Service The Board Present Him With Gold Headed Cane

HIS RECORD WAS PERFECT

Missed Only One Or Two Meetings During Twenty Three Years Of Duty

A record that is not often equalled and a record of which anyone can justly feel proud is the nearly perfect record of Lew Lewis who has served the Klemme School Board as secretary for nearly a quarter of a century, or approximately twenty-three years.

On account of ill health the past year and the added burden of increasing school business, Lew Lewis deemed it advisable to resign position on the Klemme School Board. Mr. Lewis resigned at the last meeting and the board named Paul Grange to succeed him in office.

As a token of their sincere appreciation of the loyal service of Mr. Lewis, the members of the board—A. Wellemeyer, Pres.; F. A. Arnold, A. D. Gimer and Frank Kluckhohn (P. M. Griesemer being absent from town) met in a body at the Lewis home and called a "meeting" and appointed John Gruetzmacher the chairman, as he is now Treasurer and at the time Lewis was appointed secretary Mr. Gruetzmacher was then President. Mr. Gruetzmacher gave a nice talk and presented the gold headed cane to Mr. Lewis in behalf of the board and expressing that the board was greatly pleased with the long and faithful service Mr. Lewis had rendered and his almost perfect mark of attendance, in fact one board member says that he has not been able to find any record that Mr. Lewis has ever been absent and thus should be credited with a perfect record.

Mr. Lewis has enjoyed the work greatly and has always taken a keen interest in school affairs and he will be greatly missed as secretary.

He can well feel proud of the gold headed cane which he now possesses as it is an emblem of loyal service and given as a token of appreciation of that service rendered the entire community. We congratulate Mr. Lewis on his wonderful record.

BURN DEAD CHICKENS

Danger of Spreading Poultry Diseases Is Thereby Lessened.

Burning dead chickens is a good way to avoid poultry diseases, according to William H. Lapp, poultry expert, Iowa State College. Chickens are cannibalistic and eat any dead birds left round the place—an excellent way to spread disease. Burying carcasses allows worms and maggots to bring disease germs back up to the surface of the ground. Dogs cats and birds often eat flesh from carcaasses taken cut to the field and bring the disease back to the farmstead. Burning dead chickens in the furnace or brush heap avoids all these posibilities, and does away any unpleasant odors.

SUICIDES LAID TO "JAZZ ERA" SPIRIT

Placing the number of deaths by Suicide in the United States last year at between 15,000 and 16,000, Dr. Harry M. Warren, president of the Save-a Life league, in his annual report attributed the majority of efforts at self-destruction to the "jazz spirit of the times, and the faljure of many parents, teachers and clergymen to impress upon children the sancity of human life.

EMANCIPATION FOR CHINESE

"Be Progressive and Aggressive," Says the New Generation—Told to Imitate Columbus.

Today China is seeking a new moral code. It is not to be the work of any single philosopher or scholar, but of the new generation, which has studied abroad, or has made the culture of the whole world the object of its study at home.

The ethics of discontent and the strenuous life are to replace the reposeful teachings of Confucius. To quote from one of these younger writers:

"Be the seeds of a new life. Be the agents of a revolution. For the sake of this assert your freedom as men. Shake off your shackles. Ours is the age of emancipation—of civil, religious, and financial emancipation. Woman is being emancipated from the yoke of man.

"Be progressive and aggressive. We need men of action, men of enterprise, men of energy. Imitate Christopher Columbus instead of Tolstoi and Tagore. Our era is an era of positivism, of liberty, of equality."

Let me quote further the following passages from a textbook used in the grammar and secondary schools: "The first object of moral discipline is to distinguish good from evil; and then to judge the conduct of one's self and one's neighbor by this standard. We must have a standard.

"What is that standard? It is the ultimate object of human life. Whatever conforms with this is good. Whatever contradicts it is evil. What is the ultimate object of human life? Some say it is to satisfy our desires. Others say that it is to develop our reason. We say that it is to do constantly what our inmost self conceives as the ideal. To do this is to fulfill all our duty and to practice all the virtues."—Paris Le Correspondent.

Culture of the Maya.

What was the origin of the remarkable culture of the Maya and the Incas, who were the most advanced of all prehistoric Americans, no one knows with certainty. That it originated on the Asiatic side of the Pacific is possible. The architecture of the Mayas is so suggestive of the ruined architecture of Java that one is impressed with the feeling that the two cultures may have had the same origin. In that case the Mayas would have been among the latest comers from Asia, later than the ancestors of the American Indians and those of the dark-skinned Aztecs of Mexico.

Moths Ruin Beehive.

There are few more mischievous enemies to bees than the death's-head moth. It is the female's disreputable habit to sneak into a hive, and, not content with feeding on the honey, to lay her eggs there. When the larvae arrive there is good store of food for them, but the hive speedily becomes foul and unhealthful, and there is strenuous work for the angry apiarist. Happily, entrance is not as easily effected into the modern improved hive as into the old-fashioned one.

The World's Loss.

"Can anyone," the professor asked, addressing his students, "tell me what electricity is?" A student's hand went up and the youth was invited to expound. He floundered in his explanation, came to a stand, and said that he had known the day before, but had forgotten. "Gentlemen," remarked the professor dryly, "this is the saddest day of my life. You see before you the only man on earth who has ever known what electricity was, and he has forgotten."

A Fish Story.

It was an angling match. For four hours 20 competitors had sat upon the river bank and fished.

Then the weighers-in went round. Man after man had the same story, "No luck at all." Only one had caught a fish and that could not be found. He had mislaid it somehow.

It was not until he got home late that night and had some trouble in opening his door that he discovered it. It had slipped into the end of his latch key.

A Thriving Business.

"I used to think a florist had an uncertain business," remarked the rambler, as he stopped to poke some geraniums with his cane. "In fact, I supposed he was only called upon when there was a funeral or a wedding."

"We do much better that that," responded the florist. "We also officiate throughout courtships, on birthdays, at commencement exercises, on holidays, at dinner parties and after family quarrels."

In Wait for the Traveler.

"I understand you have no hold-up men in Crimson Gulch."

"You understand wrong," said Cactus Joe. "Only they're modernized. We've got a taxi stand and a gasoline station just like other towns."—Washington Star.

GETS LARGEST CREAM CHECK

Jessup, Iowa Man Is Repaid for 10 Years of Testing

Will Thompson of Jessup, Iowa, received the largest check ever paid for butterfat by the Jessup creamery when he received $463. 38 for the month of February, according to C. A. Iverson of the dairy manufacture department of Iowa State College and superintendent of official testing for Iowa.

"Mr. Thompson has been far sighted," said Professor Iverson, "and is today reaping the benefit of his constant application of the idea that it pays to test. During he last 10 years Mr. Thompon's name has appeared repeatedly among the list of Jersey breeders doing official testing.

"We often hear that it doesn't pay a small breeder to test, but Mr. Thompson has disproved this idea with the size of his cream checks. He has not only improved the sales value of his cattle, but has improved the producing ability of his herd under conditions that really count—Everyday farm conditions."

Had a nice little shower again last night—fine stuff for the fields and gardens.

A SHORT HISTORY OF FAMOUS EVENT IN HONOR OF OUR MOTHERS

Many Famous Authors Honor The Nation's Mothers in Verse

In 1908 Miss Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia originated the idea of setting aside one day of the year for doing homage to mothers. The day was observed locally at first and then generally, as the idea met with instant approval thruout the country, until in 1914 Congress designated the second Sunday of the fifth month as Mother's Day and called upon the President to request the observance of this day every year.

Should Wear A Flower

The carnation is the flower usually worn on Mother's Day and is also used for decorative purposes; and an idea seems to have spread to wear white carnations for mothers no longer with us, and red carnations for living mothers.

Special Services

Churches, schools, and other organizations have special service for this day of days and homes should pay special homage to those who have made real homes possible.

Many Famous Authors Pay Tribute To Mothers in Verse

The bravest battle that ever was fought—
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not—
It was fought by the mothers of men.
—Joaquin Miller.

A partnership with God is motherhood;
What strength, what purity, what self-control,
What love, what wisdom shall belong to her
Who helps God fashion an immortal soul.
—Anon.

Who ran to help me when I fell
And would some pretty story tell,
Or kiss the place to make it well?
My mother.
—Anne Taylor.

The bearing and the training of a child
Is woman's wisdom.
—Tennyson.

They say that man is mighty;
He governs land and sea;
He wields a mighty scepter
O'er lesser powers that be;
But a mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.
—William Ross Wallace.

What is home without a mother?
What are all the joys we meet?
When her loving smile no longer
Greets the coming of our feet?
—Alice Hawthorne.

If I were hanged on the highest hill,
Mother o'mine, Mother o'mine,
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother o'mine.
—Kipling.

Sure I love the dear silver that shines in your hajr,
And the brow that's all wrinkled and furrowed with care.
I kiss the dear fingers, so toil-worn for me,
Oh, God bless you and keep you, Mother Machree.
—Rida Johnson Young.

It is a wonderful thing, a mother; other folks can love you, but only your mother understands. She works for you, loves you, forgives you anything you may do, understands you, and then the only bad thing she ever does to you is to die and leave you.
—Baroness Von Hutton.

Famous Old Prison to Become Museum

Paris Jail Will Show Young Dangers of Criminal Life.

Paris.—The old "Conciergerie," the medieval prison on the island of the city in the heart of Paris, will be transformed into a "Museum of Justice and Police," where children of the primary and high schools may come to study the evolution of the methods of detecting crime and administering justice through the ages.

The somber walls of the prison, with its dark dungeons, still contain all the instruments of torture in use during feudal times to extract confessions from men charged with crimes or misdemeanors. Documents showing the plots, counter-plots and intrigues of the Renaissance, and the uprising and violence of the nation during the revolution have been preserved in its cellars.

To Show Horrors of Crime.

A bill has been introduced in the chamber of deputies by M. Petijean, requesting the government, in view of the great crime wave now sweeping France, murders, acts of violence and thefts, to gather these historical relics into a museum, so as to instill into the minds of youth a salubrious fear and horror of crime.

All the political upheavals and religious wars of the last thousand years have contributed to the history of and left their mark upon the old prison. Originally it formed a part of the palaces of the kings of France. It was rebuilt by Saint, and became a prison under Charles V, who in 1391 placed there in irons and chains a certain number of citizens of Nevers and the Nivernais, who had raised the standard of rebellion against his rule.

Scene of Great Massacre.

In the Fifteenth century the count of Armagnac, grand constable of France, six bishops, several members of parliament, and a number of women and children, were massacred there without mercy by the populace.

Count Louis de Berquin, a nobleman from Picardy, was burned alive there by order of Francis I.

Catherine de Medici had Count Montgomery put to death within the prison walls.

Ravaillac, the assassin of Henry IV, was tortured and quartered in the yard, which now serves as a stable for the horses of the Parisian mounted police.

Damiens, who attempted to slay Louis XV, and Cartouche, the famous highwayman, were guests of the prison under the last of the Bourbons.

Held Marie Antoinette.

During the revolution more than 1,200 prisoners were packed in the building when the mob broke down the doors and massacred the majority of them. It later became known as the "waiting room for the guillotine."

Marie Antoinette, Madame Elizabeth, the sister of Louis XVI, and Robespierre, awaited their trials in the Conciergerie.

The aspect of the building is forbidding, three high towers commanding the entire island. In the largest tower is found the "hall of tortures" so often described by writers.

Prisoner Starves to Death in Jail

London. — The correspondent of the Daily Mail at The Hague reports a case which strikingly illustrates the infrequency of arrests in some parts of Holland. A man arrested about the end of March in a little town near Utrecht has just been found dead of starvation in his cell, the writer says, the authorities having forgotten that they had a prisoner.

PEACH FESTIVAL QUEEN

Autos Gain in England

London.—The use of motorcars is increasing slowly in England, and the revenue from licenses also shows a gain. During the year 1923 a total of 1,066,000 licenses were granted, an increase of 132,692 over 1922.

Woman Returns Dime Lost 15 Years Ago

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Thinking that she would not get to heaven because she kept a dime she found 15 years ago, although she knew who lost it, a Pittsburgh woman returned it to Lee Edwards of Bloomsburg, Pa. Edwards refused to reveal the woman's name.

"I want a clean page when I come up before the Great Judge," the woman wrote in a letter accompanying the dime.

SHIPWRECKED TARS DREW DEATH LOT

Sailor Planned to Leap Into Sea When Help Arrived.

New York.—After spending 12 hours in an open boat at sea, 70 miles off Sable island, near the coast of Halifax in the Atlantic ocean, 17 sailors broke match lengths into pieces and drew stakes to see which one of them was to jump into the sea to "lighten ship" and save the others.

Just as the unlucky sailor, the one who drew the shortest piece, was about to fling himself into the icy waters, a ship hove in sight and saved the entire crew.

The sailors were members of the crew of the ship Obernai, a freighter from Norway. About seventy miles from Sable island the ship was caught in an ice floe and crushed to pieces. The men took to the lifeboats and the open sea.

Flashing electric hand torches at intervals, the men managed to summon help from the Swedish liner Kungsholm. The sailor in the crow's nest had noticed the weak flashes of the hand torches.

Public Recreation Costs U. S. Millions

Playgrounds Found to Be Good Investment.

New York.—More than $14,000,000 was spent for public recreation last year by cities in the United States and Canada, according to the Playground and Recreation Association of America, which has just compiled the returns from a questionnaire on community play.

This sum is more than twice the amount spent for the same purpose ten years ago.

In a total of 680 cities reporting community recreation leadership, 660 conduct 6,591 playgrounds and recreation centers under paid leaders. In 1906, when Theodore Roosevelt and others organized the association, only 41 cities had playgrounds and recreation centers with paid leaders.

1,200,000 Play Daily.

Approximately 1,200,000 was the reported daily average of children and adults at the summer playgrounds of the country in 1923. This figure is four times greater than the 1913 attendance.

The reason for the steadily increasing expenditure for recreation at a time when municipalities are bent on economy, the association states, is that playgrounds and recreation are recognized as a good investment.

Delinquency and crime costs are reduced. Chief of Police Conlon of Leominster, Mass., says that delinquency cases in Leominster averaged 91 a year prior to the organization of community service, the local recreation agency.

Cuts Probation List.

In Utica, N. Y., Anna D. Rayland, chief probation officer, attributed to the efficiency of playgrounds the fact that not a single child was put on probation during the month of July in the Children's court.

Judge C. Penny of Miami, Fla., gave credit to the supervised play program for the fact that while previously he had had twenty or twenty-five cases of delinquency in his court in a month, in the six months after the playgrounds opened he had only five cases.

Topeka, Kan., found that truancy decreased when playgrounds were installed near the schools.

Defiance, O.; Centralia, Ill., and other cities reported the practical elimination of mischief and property destruction by boys at Halloween, due to the organized community celebrations of the city recreation committees.

Many other cities reported decreases in delinquency, attributed by judges, probation officers and others directly to organized play.

Man Chains Self to Bench to Support Holdup Story

New York.—Paul Ruell, twenty-three years old, living at 506 East Fifth street, Brooklyn, was found chained to a bench in Sunset Bark in that borough. A by-passer helped him carry the bench to a shelter house, where Ruell waited for the arrival of policemen, who freed his arm, which had been shackled to the back of the bench with a chain and padlock.

The young man said a man and woman had chained him up and robbed him of $500. He stuck to the story for three hours as steadfastly as he had stuck to the bench. At the end of that period he acknowledged that he merely was trying to make good on a statement he had made to the father of the only girl in the world that he had $500 in cash. He had chained himself, he said.

Dog Awakens Family in Time to Escape Flames

Houston, Tex.—Frank, a pedigreed dog, has been a faithful attendant in the household of Louis Rulik for many months. Now Rulik and his family are staying with a neighbor and Frank is receiving enough flattery to turn the head of even a sensible dog.

Rulik's $20,000 home at 822 Heights boulevard was destroyed by fire early in the morning. The family was asleep when the fire broke out but Rulik was awakened when the dog came whining to his chamber on the second floor. He thought Frank wanted to get out of the house, he said later, and paid no attention.

Frank then went to the bedroom of Miss Teresa Rulik, a sister to Louis. He tugged at her hand until he awakened her. The family fled in night clothes and few effects were saved.

Leaps Falls to Suicide

Niagara Falls, N. Y.—An unidentified man about twenty-five years old, jumped from the Luna island bridge into the river just before the falls and was borne over the American falls. Nothing was found to establish his identity.

Official Killer Ends Life

Berlin.—Despondent because of the death of his wife, Johannes Spaeth, official executioner of Prussia, committed suicide. Sixty persons have applied to the government for the job. The executioner operates the guillotine.

Aids Employees to Get Homes

Lynn, Mass.—Any worker in the Lynn plant of an electric company who is building his own home may borrow money from the company. Also the company's experts will assist any employee desiring to build.

This Man Praises Bumps

Ponca City, Okla.—A jolting ride in a motorcar cured the paralyzed right hand of a man at Ponca City. The man could use his hand after his head was bumped when the car hit a rough spot on the road.

Actor Falls on Audience

Vera Cruz, Mex.—While performing in a theater at Vera Cruz, Terutaro Koma, a Japanese tight-rope walker, fell 40 feet into the audience. He suffered a fractured skull.

Killed Warning Friend

New York.—Calling to his friend to be careful, Salvatore Puccie stepped in front of a train and was killed. The friend escaped.

Most Valuable Dogs in the World

The two dogs shown here are Dolf von Dusternbrook and Doda, and they are valued at $50,000, the most valuable dog flesh in the world. They are shown with their owner P. A. B. Widener II of Philadelphia. Dolf was bought by Mr. Widener in Germany shortly after the signing of the armistice for $7,000. Today he is worth at least four times that sum. Since he has been in America he has won every contest in which he was entered, and in 1923 was declared Grand Champion of America.

Wild Caribou Cross With the Reindeer in Alaska

Cantwell, Alaska. — Wild caribou bulls are invading the reindeer herds of Broad pass, and the results are beginning to manifest themselves in the number of long-legged, long-necked calves grazing in the herds. Aside from these traits, together with the solid color of the caribou, there is little difference between pure-blooded domesticated reindeer and the caribou.

It is believed that eventually the reindeer will be taught to eat grain, and thus become a better beast of burden. In experiments, reindeer have been taught to eat oats, but they still demand moss roughage. It is hoped gradually to accustom the animal to other forage until it will accept other roughage, and therefore be able to travel long distances. At present a reindeer is good for only five days as a sled animal. After that it must be released to recover its lost fat on moss.

SEE CLOSE KINSHIP OF MAN AND GORILLA

Scientists Exhibit Fragments of Ancient Jawbones.

New York.—Dr. W. K. Gregory and Dr. Milo Hellman exhibited to the New York Academy of Science at the American Museum of Natural History recently these fragments of ancient jawbones which belonged, they said, to the common ancestor of men, gorillas, chimpanzees, and other primates, or else to a very close relative of that common ancestor.

The jawbones belonged to the dryopithecus, or forest ape, which lived in the Siwalik hills in India in miocene times several million years ago. The fossils were found for the museum by Barnum Brown. They have been studied for more than a year by Doctors Gregory and Hellman and this announcement was their first publication of the discovery of evidence that the dryopithecus was man's and the gorilla's lineal forefather, or else a first cousin of that forefather.

Dryopithecus was a big ape, about the size of a gorilla. The evidence that it is the ancestor, or the closest approach yet known to the ancestor of the whole human and ape family, is based largely on the patterns of the teeth. The elevations and furrows on the crowns of the teeth follow patterns identical with those of the Neanderthal and other primitive men, and nearly identical with those of Australian blacks and certain Indians who are the most primitive of living humans.

Civilized white and yellow men have lived for so many thousand years on a diet based on agricultural food that great alterations in their teeth have taken place, so that the cusps and grooves differ from those of the Neanderthal teeth.

The seeds of dental trouble for the human race were sown in the days of dryopithecus, an arguable number of years ago, according to Doctor Hellman, who pointed out that the elevations, or cusps, had expanded till they met over the grooves, causing tunnels which are inherited today by the human race.

Oldest Living Horse in World Owned by Pastor

Catawissa, Pa.—After viewing the approach of spring with apparent nonchalance, Clover, reputed to be the oldest living horse in the world, is nearing his fifty-first birthday on the farm of a local clergyman.

The rigors of winter had no effect on the old horse, for his owner provided him with a special box stall lined with straw and a double blank Regular exercise every day and warm food are said to have helped him weather the dangerous season.

Clover still boasts a full mane and all his teeth. His body is without a blemish. Such is his fame that he now enjoys a pension from the Jockey club of New York.

Never take anything for granted.

NO TROUBLE WHEN BABY CAME

Mrs. Crossan Gives Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Dakan Also Tells What This Medicine Does

St. Joseph, Missouri.—"I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I decided to try it as I had had such a hard time with my first child. I took nine bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I never felt better in my life than the day my baby girl was born. I will be glad to tell what it will do, to any woman who will let me know her address."—Mrs. ROSA DAKAN, 2227 S. 11th St., St. Joseph, Missouri.

Back To Normal Health

New Orleans, Louisiana.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound while I was carrying my child and I must praise it highly because I never suffered one day during that time and could do all my housework and had a very easy confinement. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound because I have a weakness due to working around the house too soon after my baby was born. But thanks again to the Vegetable Compound I am getting back to normal health once more. I advise any woman to take it."—Mrs. A. MEYN, JR., 2019 Touro St., New Orleans, Louisiana.

Not A Bit of Trouble

Wilmington, Delaware.—"I was nervous and weak and not at all regular. I worked in a factory at the time and could not work very much. I was sick over a year, then a friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I started to pick up as soon as I began taking it. Then I took it again before my first baby was born and I never had a bit of trouble. I recommend it highly."—Mrs. JANE CROSSAN, 612 Pine St., Wilmington, Delaware.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped many other women just as it has helped Mrs. Dakan, Mrs. Meyn and Mrs. Crossan.

Consider the statements of these women. They give you the benefit of their actual experience with the Vegetable Compound.

A nation-wide canvass of women purchasers of the Vegetable Compound reports that 98 out of every 100 have been benefited by its use.

This is a remarkable record and proves the dependability of the medicine for the relief of the troubles women often have.

For weak and run-down conditions so common after child-birth it is well adapted. It strengthens and tones up the system and restores normal health.

The Vegetable Compound contains no harmful drugs or narcotics and can be taken in safety by the nursing mother. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Water Power in U. S.

Nearly one-third of the entire available water power of the United States is located in the states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

Swamp-Root a Fine Medicine

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

The Red Lock

A Tale of the Flatwoods

By DAVID ANDERSON

Author of "The Blue Moon"

In the glowing embers another face began to form, slowly—a face handsome in spite of its forbidding beard, formidable spectacles and drawn, peering eyes. Every act of the eccentric preacher-schoolmaster, since the day the Milford stage dropped him in front of the post office, passed before his mind—every act, as far as known, had been scrupulously circumspect.

Dreaming there by the dead embers of the fire, the woodsman found himself analyzing the preacher, in his careful way, from shiny boots to high hat. The ill-health excuse he had never believed, or rather, had set it down to an imaginary ailment—the man looked absolutely fit to enter a cross-country relay. He eliminated the elaborate frock coat, stiff neck stock, high hat and spectacles—divested of all oddities and accessories, there remained a tall and very capable man.

Then, there was the ivory-handled six-gun that happened to thud against the bottom of the skiff, and a pair of very deft hands feeling over the stacks of clothes—a circumstance that had totally escaped the other members of the seining party. Besides, there was the perfect agreement of the heel-prints on the dusty deck of the concealed houseboat—another circumstance that he alone knew.

If he was a college professor and a minister what was he doing in the Flatwoods? If he was not, still, what was he doing in the Flatwoods?

As he pondered, suddenly the dark face that had flared up from the floor of the woods and glowered at him over the log, slid into his mind. So close it came upon the heels of his attempted analysis of the preacher that the two thoughts fused into one. The connection was startling. It brought him up out of his chair and left him staring through the open cabin door into the night.

Was there a connection? Might it be possible that Ken, crime-stained and low-fallen, had sneaked back to the Flatwoods, and the preacher, being a college friend, was trying to befriend him—possibly save him? But no; there was the letter—it was absolutely genuine.

The woodsman straightened and stretched to rouse himself from the wild spell of the thought, to drag himself back from the drift of it; felt the revolver at his hip; crossed the floor and stepped out into the yard.

The night was unruffled; the woods breathed softly in the pale starlight. Back in the hills a red fox was barking; over in the bottoms a plover whistled his melancholy call; the lonesome wail of a timber wolf drifted down out of Eagle hollow.

But for the true woodsman the night has messages that other ears do not hear. As he stood in the yard sifting the sounds that rode the air, he suddenly bent forward and stood keenly listening. The frogs in Eagle run, just below the bridge in front of Uncle Nick's, had abruptly stopped croaking, only to begin again after a moment, while the frogs farther down fell silent—somebody was walking along the bank of the little stream. Somebody—frogs do not stop croaking at the tread of cattle or other like animals.

It was near midnight. Why should anybody be prowling in so secluded a spot at such an hour? The alert and experienced woodsman could even gauge the speed of the prowler by the successive silences that fell as he moved down the stream. He was going slowly—possibly creeping.

From the bridge at Uncle Nick's a foot-path led down the east bank of Eagle run and divided a short distance below, one fork leading around the base of Black rock to the Warhope homestead, the other on down the stream, through a small pasture lot and into the park-like orchard and grounds of Simon Colin. It was along this fork of the path that the night prowler was apparently stealing.

The woodsman hurriedly closed the cabin door, ran across the corner of the fallow yard, and the next moment was creeping cautiously along the fork of the path that led around under the dense shadows at the base of Black rock.

The caution of Jack Warhope was seldom at fault. There was always the chance that the woodcraft of the man he followed was as fine as his own. He paid him the compliment of keeping back from the stream, out of earshot of the frogs, and silently took up the trail.

Where the path crossed the fence into the little park the prowler stopped and stood for some time listening intently.

It is a law of the woods—fundamental and primary, whether stalking animals or men—that the woodsman must never move while the creature he stalks is still. Jack, hardly twenty steps away, stood quiet as the breath of the night and waited.

With a final searching look in every direction, the man by the fence climbed cautiously over and stole down the creek bank into the little park. Jack crept up to the fence, crawled over and followed.

At Whispering spring the night prowler crouched down by the rustic seat, put his hands to his mouth and very cleverly imitated the quavering call of the screech owl. Jack seized the favorable moment, crept up as near as he deemed prudent and hid in the dense shadow of a clump of shrubbery.

The night was so placid that during the intervals between the imitative calls the low murmur of Whispering spring fell distinct and clear upon the silence. A few steps away the red-roofed cottage bulked large in the gloom.

The man had already twice given his call and was about to give it a third time, when the parlor door at the front of the house rather noisily opened, and a man came down off the porch and across the yard. As he walked over the brink of the slight decline where the yard dipped to the creek, he passed in outline for a brief moment against the southern sky.

It was the preacher.

His glasses were off, the stoop gone from his shoulders and his step showed not a sign of mincing. He was partly dressed, partly in his night clothes—precisely as one who had wakened naturally from sleep and gone into the yard for some trifling purpose or other. There was a light spot at his hip which the watcher under the clump of shrubbery surmised to be the ivory handle of the six-gun that had thudded against the bottom of the skiff.

He went straight to the spring, took down the dipper and dipped himself a drink, making a deal of noise in the act—even an unnecessary amount of it, as it seemed to the critical ears under the shrubbery.

The drink over, he hung up the dipper, with another clatter; sauntered past the man crouched by the rustic seat, snatched something that was reached out to him; hid it in the bosom of his shirt; whispered a very hurried word or two; strolled back up the yard; crossed the porch; re-entered the parlor door and locked it behind him.

The man crouching by the seat half-rose and slipped back the way he had come, the frogs, as before, falling silent as he came even with them and resuming their croak again after he had passed. Jack tried hard to make him out as he stole by, less than a dozen steps away, but he was so stooped and so shrouded in gloom that the effort was in vain.

And so they had come—and gone. A burden seemed to be lifted from the night. A clean breeze came down out of the cool dells of the serene woods as if to sweep away the taint of their presence.

The woodsman lay a long time listening, and reviewing the astonishing pantomime. Not a sound did he hear. He glanced up at the red-roofed cottage. From porch step to gable it lay as peaceful as its background of placid sky. It was hard to think that at that moment it might be standing at the danger-center of some intangible web of evil that was being woven about it.

He knew the lay of the house as well as he knew his own small cabin—along the south and fronting the road the seldom used parlor, with the spare bedroom opening off from it on the east; back of these the sitting-room, and the old banker's bedroom adjoining it, with the small room containing his safe opening off it on the west and extending some distance beyond the main wall; back of these rooms the dining-room and back of it the kitchen.

Front entrance to both parlor and sitting-room was from the wide porch, which filled up almost the entire jog between the parlor and the small room that served as office.

Mrs. Curry and Texie both slept upstairs, the latter over the old banker's bedroom, the former over the office. There were no rooms above the parlor and spare bedroom, these, with the porch, being a later addition to the original building.

With every possible caution Jack slowly crawled up the yard, around back of the house, and under the partly open window of the parlor bedroom; lay listening for a guarded moment; then rose, noiseless as the night, and peeped within.

On a chair just under the window hung the somber frock coat; on the bed a man breathed even and deep, apparently sleeping as tranquilly as a tired athlete.

CHAPTER XI

Knives of the Night.

A man strolling carelessly through the woods would be surprised to know how many eyes are on him, how many creatures scrooch in the covers and wait for him to pass. He might even imagine from the silence that he is alone. The true woodsman knows that he is never alone, that his slightest move is watched by a thousand eyes. The stillness does not deceive him.

But let something happen—a stick snap, or some creature break cover in sudden panic—and instantly all is commotion. The still woods wake to the call of voices, the beat of wings, the clatter of scampering feet.

In such quiet lay the forest next morning when Jack Warhope, threading the dew-bathed glades, inadvertently stepped on a brush that flipped up and rattled some dead leaves lodged in a thick cluster of sprouts growing about an old white oak stump.

A pheasant that happened to be hiding under the brush instantly flushed. It seemed as if the flurry of his wings fanned the whole woods alive. A fox squirrel bounced up out of the leaves and skurried away; a chipmunk dived into his den; a pair of blue jays set up their strident screech; a crow left the dead limb of an oak and went floundering along over the tree-tops squawking the news that the most dangerous animal in the world—a man—was loose in the woods.

With the heavy shotgun he carried—a present from the banker—Jack covered the pheasant as it glanced away until it blended with the dull gray of the trees and faded from sight. He dropped the butt of the gun to the leaves and stood listening to the beat of the swift wings, growing fainter, finally ending abruptly, and he knew the bird had settled again to the brush.

"Well, ol' drummer," he chuckled, speaking half aloud—a habit the woods teach men—and throwing the shotgun lightly across his arm, "y'u didn't need t' rush off without s' much as sayin' good morning. I could 'a' stopped y'u if I'd be'n a-mind to. I had y'u right on the end of my trigger finger."

Though Jack Warhope was considered a man of clumsy tongue, he could talk well enough to himself, or to the creatures of the woods. He even had a curiously sane and sensible philosophy—a sort of romantic idealism—that outcropped at such times.

The woods—the true, the constant, the steadfast woods—the first instinct of unspoiled men with a heartache—the vastness, the all sufficiency, the immense Shekinah of the solitudes. With the gun lying across his arm he stepped cautiously to where the pheasant had flushed and peered about under the brush and bushes.

As his straining gaze searched with extreme minuteness every leaf, or glimpse of weed or bark or grass blade, gradually a grayish-brown spot, just where the bush of a fallen limb lay along the side of a crumbling log, began to take shape. He shifted his position for a better view—the gray-brown spot was gone.

He located it again, and as he looked, slowly there grew out of the blending colors of the copse the figure of a hen pheasant on the nest, so perfectly harmonizing with the leaves and brush among which she hovered that only the very keenest eye could have spied her out at all. A moment he gazed, and slipped away as noiselessly as he had come.

"Let 'er alone," he muttered when at a safe distance. "Let 'er think I couldn't find 'er. She'll think if I couldn't the fox can't, and he's her greatest dread right now."

The trees were hardly leaved out enough yet to conceal a man walking carelessly through them, or fully keep back the sun from peeping down through the thick tangle of twigs and coaxing forth flower and grass blade from the quickening mold. The silver sheath of the hickory buds had already burst and sprung wide apart, the delicate green of the crinkled, newborn leaves appearing in sharp contrast to the purple sheen lining the rent scales. The oaks had begun to thrust forth the tender tips of their new foliage, investing the waking forest with a tint of faint grayish red, as if to the infant leaves some trace of the birth blush still clung.

Upon the floor of the woods spring had already spread a carpet of infinite color and design, new and bright and still unsoiled—here a fancy spangled pattern of spring beauties; there a pattern of solid green where the may-apples opened their umbrellas to the light, in readiness to shield the fragile flowers of white wax that were soon to hover beneath their sheltering folds; and, draped over all, a shimmering silver haze, the gracious benediction of the skies.

The man stopped before a crab-apple tree, the buds of which were opened just enough to make one curious to see more of the beautiful mystery folded teasingly away within the protecting scales. Already some bees, pioneers of their tribe, fussed about the aromatic clusters of peeping color, gathering statistics on the season's honey crop.

A breeze stirred the trees, as if the woods were taking a deeper breath. Jack lifted his shoulders and filled his lungs with the nectar-laden air. Warmed by the exuberance of life that rustled and quivered and thrilled around him there gushed up within him the Jubilate of a man wooed by the genial day into almost primal closeness to nature. He dropped the butt of the gun to the leaves, leaned lightly upon it and stood listening to the dull droning of the bees.

Prayer of the Tree.

Upon a tree in Portugal a traveler read this appeal:

Ye who pass by and would raise your hand against me, harken ere you harm me.

I am the heat of your hearth on the cold winter nights.

The friendly shade screening you from the summer sun.

And my fruits are refreshing drafts, quenching your thirst as you journey on.

I am the beam that holds your house, the board of your table, the bed you lie on, the timber that builds your boat.

I am the handle of your hoe, your door, the wood of your cradle and coffin.

Ye who pass me by listen to my prayer: Harm me not!

Desk of Washington's Sister Is Home Again

After more than 140 years of wandering, the desk at which Betty Washington Lewis, sister of George Washington, sat and penned the courteous epistles of her day has come back to her old home, Kenmore, Fredericksburg, Va. For more than a year the women who have been struggling to save Kenmore as one of the historic shrines in America, have been sending out literature, describing the purpose of the Kenmore association, to the various D. A. R. chapters, says the Detroit News. One of these appeals reached the regent of the Old Trails chapter in Minneapolis, Minn., who communicated with the registrar of the Washington-Lewis chapter at Fredericksburg, telling of the old desk.

After leaving Kenmore the mahogany desk first found a home with a son of Colonel Lewis at Marmion, one of the best-known of the colonial places in Virginia. Next it went to Alexandria, then to Washington, D. C., from there passing to New York city. Finally it found a place among the possessions of Mrs. Maurice Ainsworth of Minneapolis, who kept it until she knew that it would be restored to its rightful surroundings.

Digging Machine That Uses Compressed Air

An unusual digging machine that combines the processes of shoveling and loading is finding its way into hundreds of mining and construction jobs. It is operated and driven entirely by compressed air.

The speed of the loading can be controlled so as to throw the material to the farther end of a long car, or merely to drop it into a short one.

The mechanical shovel will dump its load into the center of the car from any position, even extreme right or left, it is claimed.

Compressed-air power is applied through direct-thrust cylinders. Three control levers successively crowd, dig and dump the shovel.

The two middle cylinders, acting as one, which do the main digging, are provided with cataract oil escapement plunger pistons. This arrangement is declared to give a steady and controlled but fast movement, from the first of crowding to the last of dumping, permitting no building up of pressure and consequent jumping, or throwing out of the load.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

New Mint Plant for America

In Mentha citrata, a plant belonging to the mint family, the United States Department of Agriculture believes it has introduced a new crop which, under suitable conditions, may bring an acreage return equal to that now obtained from other cultivated mints. During the past year the crop was grown at Arlington farm, near Washington, on a scale large enough to give definite indications of its possibilities. The yield of oil from the plant when distilled was at the rate of 30 pounds to the acre. The oil itself is very fragrant and when fractionated yields 50 per cent of linalyl acetate, a compound extensively used by manufacturing perfumers.

Locate Ships at Sea by New Radio Method

A description of a means of locating the position of a ship at sea by the emission of a radio "dash" simultaneously with the firing of a small charge in the sea is contained in the "Proceedings" of the Physical society, says the Scientific American. A station on shore records the arrival of the radio signal and also of the explosion wave at a number of hydrophones suitably disposed in known positions on the sea bed. The times of travel of the explosion wave, and hence the distance from the charge to each hydrophone, are indicated by an Einthoven galvanometer photographic recorder. Although great accuracy is attainable, for navigational purposes it is sacrificed to speed—it being possible to give a ship her location within a radius of half a mile inside ten minutes from receiving her request for a position. This method has been thoroughly tested under service conditions and has been found absolutely reliable.

A nine-ounce charge can be located at a distance of 40 miles. In hydrographic survey work the method has been tested successfully in fixing accurately the positions of certain buoys and light vessels. The possibility of screening and distortion effects produced by sand banks has also been investigated.

Synthetic Food Would Put End to Farming

Now we know what's to become of the farmer. The word is passed along that J. B. S. Haldane, an English scientist, predicts chemical synthesis of foods within 120 years to a degree that will rate agriculture a luxury, and mankind will be completely urbanized. A hard fate for the agriculturist and a hard living for poets and artists if such there be in that distant day, says the Nation's Business. And what of the gardens tilled by suburbanites and commuters? Ill fares the day when no seed catalogue may proclaim man's kinship with the soil.

Chemistry thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt.

But invitation to choice is only empty fealty to courtesy when meals hold a single course. If the doctor had his crystal in good kelter the folk who are up and about when this forecast falls due may as well take their calories from a needle. And who is to take old Judge Palate's place? "Dame Science," you say? Well, well, so it goes, so it goes. Poor old fellow, he made mistakes, but no one can hope to please all tastes.

"Good Old Days" Club

The good old days. The feverish round of daily existence leaves us but little time to reflect upon them. And 'tis pity.

At all events a little group of Viennese appears to hold this opinion, for a club has just been founded there which does not lack originality, if we may judge by its name, the Club of the Good Old Days.

There are two main qualifications for admission to this club. First, the applicant must be not less than sixty years of age. Second, he is formally forbidden, under pain of expulsion, to speak of anything that has happened since August 1, 1914.

The Viennese are trying to forget. Of course, we French have not quite the same reasons for wishing to forget as the Viennese.—Le Petit Parisien.

Electric Power Development

Interest in projected super-power development in the northeastern states, with high tension electric transmission lines running from immense power plants at the coal mines to the great industrial centers, has overshadowed the real progress toward super-power development which has been made in other parts of the country. There are now only four gaps with a total of twenty-five miles in a continuous electric power system along the Pacific coast from British Columbia to Mexico, a distance of 1,400 miles. Five of the southeastern states are included in another super-power development which furnishes hundreds of thousands of horse power, and extensions are projected into neighboring states.

Liberal Tip, If Found

A mean man ate a good meal at a restaurant and then, when he had finished, dropped a half crown on the floor.

"Walter," he said, as he paid his bill, "I just dropped two half crowns. Find them for me, will you?"

The waiter disappeared under the table and in a short time emerged very red in the face.

"I've found one of them, sir," he said.

"Thanks," said the man as he pocketed the coin and rose. "When you find the other keep it for yourself—tip, you know."

Contradicting a Proverb

"You can't get something for nothing," remarked the ready-made philosopher.

"Maybe not," answered Mr. Dustin Stax, "but I'll say the man who took my good money in exchange for forged masterpieces came very near it."

ARBITERS OF FORM AND TASTE

Scholars of French Academy Always Will Be Defenders of Classic School They Represent.

The world owes an eternal gratitude to this august assembly of scholars (the French academy), for, though the literary bolsheviki of France jeer and satirize this group of men, nevertheless, they always have been and always will be the defenders of the classic school they represent.

They are the keepers of the holy seal of form and taste, of accuracy and of discretion. They are not easily wooed nor are they casually won. Their standards are inviolate and to be respected, and no facile and sporadic talent shall prevail against them, says Elizabeth Marbury.

The French academy, like fashionable society, is theoretically spurned by those to whom entrance therein is denied; nevertheless, let these contemptuous critics be given the slightest hope of admission and they will forthwith become sycophantic in their admiration and truculent in their expressions of esteem. It is a widely known fact that no influence so quickly converts a radical into a reactionary as does his election to power.

I could never quite understand why any writer of comedy should aspire to become a member of this very austere body. The atmosphere it exudes is traditionally against the spirit of mirth. Everything savors so intensely of serious responsibility that levity of any kind seems sadly out of place.

One interesting feature is that when in broad daylight the academicians don their historical costume, consisting of a cocked hat and a coat embroidered in gold palms, this is not viewed as an absurdity. It is a part of the traditions which no one would be courageous enough to criticise.

But when this same costume is displayed for sale in some pawnshop window in the Rue de Provence, or worn in a London drawing room, as was the case whenever Julius Claretie crossed the channel, then the grotesqueness of this literary livery becomes apparent.—Saturday Evening Post.

Jack London's Tip.

The secret of the success of Jack London and Robert Service, not forgetting Kipling also, is their forceful, almost crude handling of English. In none of their work do you find much of the so-called flowery English. Their vividness lies in the use of short, vivid words.

London tried to explain this to a class of literature students in Oakland and put over his idea in characteristic manner. "James had spent a trying afternoon playing with his sisters, who put in most of the time teasing him.

"At last he turned with battle in his eyes and shouted: 'Don't! Don't! Don't you know enough to don't?'—and I ask you if there could be any clearer way of expressing what James meant than the way he expressed it?"

Papyrus.

Papyrus, which has grown so familiar to everyone since the opening of King Tut's tomb has revived interest in Egyptology, forms a charming episode in history.

Herod II, king of Syracuse at about the time Theocritus was at his court composing the Idyls, built and fitted out a marvelous ship, equipped with gardens, stalls for horses and columns of Taorminian marble—a ship of 4,200 tons in those days. Archimedes doubtless helped to build it—a present to Ptolemy of Egypt.

As part of the acknowledgment of the gift came the papyrus planted along the banks of the Anapo, and there it has been growing ever since and in fact is almost the only spot where it is still in existence.

Only One Vote Cast.

At Santa Rosa, Cal., there was an election at which only one vote could be and was cast, although the polls remained open for 12 hours, in accordance with state law, and there was a board of three to count the vote. Santa Rosa planned to annex a tract known as Proctor Terrace, and only one man, Emil Lattanzi, lived in the tract. He cast the sole vote and helped to count it as a member of the election board, composed of himself and two citizens living outside of the terrace.

Matrimonial Motives.

Miss Antique—You ought to get married, Mr. Oldchapp.

Mr. Oldchapp (earnestly)—I have wished many times lately that I had a wife.

"Have you really?"

"Yes. If I had a wife, she'd probably have a sewing machine, and the sewing machine would have an oil can, and I could take it and oil my office door. It squeaks horribly."—London Tit-Bits.

Difficult to Please.

He had walked himself tired, looking for a house. At last he found an agent who had one at £52 a year—to let.

He looked it over, but was disappointed. So he returned to the agent.

"No good; it's too damp. Toadstools in the kitchen and mildew on the dining-room walls."

"Well," said the indignant agent, "what of it? What do you expect for a pound a week? Orchids?"

Wanted to See the Boss.

A green salesman had been turned loose on the drug trade. He hadn't been out long when he struck an enterprising shop doing business as the Hygeia Pharmacy. The salesman had been drilled in approach methods and instructed not to lose any time. So when the genial proprietor came forward to inquire his business, he spoke up briskly: "Kindly let me see Mr. Hygeia."

Appreciative.

Bob (contemplating loan)—How are you off for money?

Pat—Oh, I have enough for tonight! Thanks just the same.—London Answers.

PUBLICITY FOR INCOME TAXES

Senate Votes to Put Returns on Same Basis as Public Documents.

Washington.—Defeating the Republicans of the finance committee decisively the senate adopted an amendment to the tax bill by Senator Norris of Nebraska, providing for complete publicity of tax returns. The Norris amendment was adopted by a vote of 48 to 27. In addition to this action, an amendment by Senator McKellar of Tennessee, which makes all claims for abatement or refund of taxes, including the decisions, public records and subject to inspection.

The Norris amendment, which applies to all tax returns, was adopted by a combination of Democratic votes and progressive Republican votes. The action of the senate on publicity of returns was a blow at the finance committee, which had reported a provision providing that congressional committees, under certain machinery must see tax returns and make them public if deemed advisable. The Norris amendment is a brief one which writes into the bill the provision that records "shall be open to examination and inspection as other public records under the same rules and regulations as may govern the examination of public documents, generally."

The McKellar amendment provides that "all claims for abatement of refunds of taxes, including the decisions, shall likewise be subject to inspection under similar rules."

Senator Smoot and other committee leaders do not intend to rest with the decision of the senate, which was made in committee of the whole. They will force another test in the senate proper, when the bill reaches that stage in its consideration.

Early in the day an amendment introduced by Secretary Mellon, limiting deductions from net income derived from tax-exempt securities, was rejected 37 to 36 following a union of Democratic and insurgent forces.

Scot Who Tried U. S. Rum Running Loses $1,000,000

Edinburgh.—Thomas Cowan Steven, thirty-eight years old and a former clerk, who accumulated a fortune of more than $1,000,000 during the war, was declared bankrupt by the Scottish courts. He has unsecured debts of $500,000. Mr. Steven's losses were due to the failure of several American rum-running ventures. He was connected in huge whisky smuggling deals with Sir John Stewart, baronet, who a few weeks ago shot himself in his castle in Scotland, following heavy losses.

Plant Gives Girl $100,000 as the Case Nears Jury

New York.—The $500,000 suit brought by Helene Jesmer, former Follies beauty, against Philip Morgan Plant for injuries in an auto accident that ruined her beauty, destroyed the sight of one eye and left her, according to a medical testimony, in a state of emotional instability, was settled out of court at a figure understood to be in the neighborhood of $100,000. The settlement was announced just before the case was to be given to the jury.

Pardon Given Chicagoan Is Puzzle to Landis

Washington.—Former Federal Judge Landis, testifying before the Daugherty investigating committee, declared that he could not understand how Philip Grossman, convicted in Chicago for liquor law violations, had obtained his pardon from President Coolidge. Continuing, Judge Landis declared that he believed politics should have no more to do with executive clemency than with decisions handed down from the bench.

Coolidge Puts Ban on Arms to Cubans

Washington.—An embargo on arms shipment to Cuba, effective immediately, was proclaimed by President Coolidge at the request of the Cuban government. In a message to Washington, President Zayas explained that large quantities of arms in Florida were being prepared for shipment to Cuba where a revolution is imminent.

Inquiries in Senate Cost the U. S. $325,000

Washington.—The high cost of senatorial investigations was revealed to the senate by Senator Warren, chairman of the appropriations committee, who estimated the senate is spending $325,000 on the probes now in progress. "The least any committee has spent," said Warren, "is $4,000, and the Teapot Dome inquiry has cost $56,000."

109 DIE IN STORM; DAMAGE $10,000,000

Tornado Cuts Path of Ruin in Six Southern States.

Atlanta, Ga.—The report of one more fatality in North Carolina and another in Virginia brought to 100 the death toll from a series of tornadoes which devastated sections of seven southeastern states, injuring hundreds of persons and causing property damage estimated at more than $10,000,000.

Relief measures speedily were put into effect by the American Red Cross and numerous local organizations.

An incomplete survey of the windtorn regions, parts of which still are isolated, apportioned the dead as follows: South Carolina, 76; Georgia, 14; Alabama, 11; North Carolina, 5; Virginia, 1; Louisiana, 1; Arkansas, 1.

The first fatality in Virginia was recorded in Amelia county, but the damage in that state was not general.

No Germans Starving, Says Julius Rosenwald

Berlin.—"There is no starvation in Germany. There is considerable hunger and misery, but in the worst districts of Berlin conditions are not as bad as in some parts of Chicago and New York." This remarkable declaration was made by Julius Rosenwald, who, with $100,000, headed General Allen's campaign for the relief of "starving Germany."

N. Y. Leads World in Many Things—Including Lunatics

New York.—Already recognized as the largest Jewish, Negro, Irish, etc., city in the world, New York now may claim the distinction of including the largest lunatic community on earth within its five boroughs. A bulletin issued by neuropathists declared 200,000, or one in every thirty, New Yorkers to be slightly demented.

825 Delegates Now Claimed for Coolidge

Cleveland, Ohio.—With Republican victories in the primaries in Ohio and Massachusetts, President Coolidge now has a total of 825 delegates pledged to support him at the national Republican convention to be held here in June, William M. Butler, the President's national campaign manager, officially announced. Only 556 votes are needed to insure nomination.

Seven Destroyers Added to the U. S. Rum Fleet

EIGHT DIE IN GERMAN RIOTS

Thousands of Others Injured as Labor Celebrates May Day.

Berlin.—The German military suppressed hundreds of attempts throughout the nation to hold May-day demonstrations. Thousands of persons were beaten by blackjacks and hundreds of heads were bloodied through blows from sheathed sabers, while there was some rifle firing.

In Koenigsburg, Prussia, one militiaman and one worker were killed. In Hindenburg, Silesia, six workers were killed and five wounded.

In the Gera (Thuringen) riots seven militiamen were wounded. The communists suffered casualties, but hid the bodies. At Graez, Thuringen, 20 rioters were wounded.

For the first time since the republic was established the government controlled the situation with a great display of military power. Every public square in Berlin was crowded with soldiery. Militiamen with rifles patrolled Unter den Linden. Cavalry rode on the sidewalk all day even upon the steps of the former kaiser's palace.

American methods were adopted for the first time by the German militia. An order was given to "keep them moving," and they kept them moving. When a crowd of 5,000 attempted to listen to speeches in the Lustgarten the militia flashed reports to the central barracks, whereupon soldiers, militiamen and cavalry appeared simultaneously in all the streets, hemming in the mob. Clubs were used freely.

Rep. Knutson Acquitted; His Companion Free

Washington.—Representative Harold Knutson (Rep., Minn.) was found not guilty by a jury in Arlington county, Virginia, of charges growing out of an automobile ride in Virginia last March with Leroy H. Hull, a Washington government clerk. The jury was out one hour and three minutes and was said to have taken three ballots. Testimony against Hull had not been started and the prosecuting attorney announced he would nolle prosse the case.

Do Your B. V. D.'s Shrink? Uncle Sam Will Learn Why

Washington.—The Department of Commerce instituted a sweeping investigation into the shrinkage of underwear. Assistance of the bureau of standards and makers of underwear was enlisted to help solve the mystery and a meeting of manufacturers was called for May 7. The effect of soap, laundry machines, wringing, pressing and finishing, as well as the tension of knitting machines, will be studied.

Night Riders Terrorize New Mexican Towns

El Paso, Tex.—The home of Benigno Hernandez, collector of internal revenue at Albuquerque, N. M., has been burned at Canjilon, N. M., by night riders who have been terrorizing Arriba county, according to a dispatch to the El Paso Times. The home of Mrs. Tircio de Vargas, widow of the Canjilon postmaster, slain three years ago by night assassins, is also reported burned.

Britain Sinks Million Tons of War Munitions

Washington.—A million tons of ammunition and 170,000 tons of poison gas, enough to launch a sizable war, were destroyed by the British government in liquidating war supplies, the Department of Commerce was informed by Trade Commissioner Lyons, at London. Most of the ammunition was sunk in the ocean, while the poison gas was burned.

Girl, 19, With 3 Husbands Undivorced, Is Sentenced

Milwaukee, Wis. — Lena Fallier, nineteen years old, was sentenced to an indeterminate term in the woman's state reformatory on a statutory charge, 12 hours after she had confessed to having been married three times without being divorced. Three of her husbands are living, while one other died a day after marriage.

$275,000,000 Naval Bill Passes the Senate

Washington.—The annual naval supply bill, carrying $275,000,000, was passed by the senate without a record vote. The senate added about $700,000 to the bill as it came from the house. The measure was sent to conference with the house with several differences to be ironed out.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES

LEGISLAURE TAKES RECESS UNTIL JULY 22

Iowa's fourth code revision session of the legislature recessed with all of the work of revising the statute law completed, bills enrolled and signed by the officers of senate and house, until July 22nd, when it is expected formal action of adoption of the new code may be taken.

The report of the house judiciary committee on its investigation of the conduct of her office by Miss May E. Francis, state superintendent of public instruction, was deferred, with the consent of the house, until the legislature reconvenes in July.

The end was calmly reached, the last fight of the session having been made on the floor of the senate when the conference report on the prison labor sections of the board of control bill was finally adopted. All of the formal work of the session was completed before noon; but it was necessary to stop the clocks and recess until 5:30 in the afternoon in order to receive the last two enrolled bills.

The last day's work of the special session included the passage of the concurrent ersolution fixing the time of reconvening as 11 o'clock Tuesday morning, July 22; passage of a joint resolution authorizing the cancellation by the board of control of contracts for labor of prisoners and legalizing new contracts from July 1, 1924 to July 1, 1927; defeat of the Brookins resolution requesting a recess investigation of prison labor employment; passage of a resolution of appreciation of the work of Code Commissioners U. G. Whitney, J. H. Trewin and J. C. Mabry; and passage of a resolution deferring the report of the Francis investigating committee until the legislature reconvenes in July.

Those who have given close attention to the work of the codifiers are satisfied that accurate and painstaking work has been done. The work of codifying was done by a commission of three lawyers. This work has now been read, debated and ratified by the general assembly. The lawmakers assert that nothing has escaped their attention and that when the code is completed it will represent what the people have wanted in the way of laws. It will be several months before the code is ready for public use. The printing will be much more promptly done than it was in 1897, for the reason that type setting is now done by rapid machines. It is stated that the special code session of the legislature will cost the state more than $300,000. The state of Iowa has been passing laws for seventy-eight years. To keep all of these laws in order, for ready reference and to avoid conflict, is a tedious and costly process.

Teachers of Iowa who have had three or more years of successful teaching experience are not to be affected by retroactive certification rules issued by the superintendent of public instruction or the state board of examiners, under the terms of a joint resolution voted out by the judiciary committee, which has been investigating the official acts of Miss May E. Francis, superintendent of public instruction. Likewise, the resolution will protect schools of the state in their accredited standing against teacher qualification rulings that might take them off the accredited list by the disbarment of experienced teachers and state aid may not be denied accredited schools under such conditions. The resolution was framed by the committee prior to the opening of the Francis investigation but the inquiry was responsible in part for its introduction in the house.

Governor Kendall has officially announced that Fred L. Maytag of Newton would be appointed director of the budget under the law recently passed by the Iowa legislature. His statement said: "I had some delicacy in announcing his appointment before the bill was signed, but I am thoroughly acquainted with the provisions of the measure passed by the general assembly, and it will have my sanction. The state is fortunate in that I was able to induce Senator Maytag to undertake the organization of the work. The question of his salary was not mentioned by him or by me in the discussion of the subject. I presented the matter to him as offering a high opportunity to render the state a vital service, and he accepted the position in that same lofty spirit.

The amendment to the pools and trust bill authorizing the state executive council to sell gasoline, coal and fuel oil whenever it was to the interest to the people, went to its death in the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 70 to 8.

The work of the legislature received the praise of Lieutenant Governor John Hammill in a statement issued. Hammill declared the accomplishment of the legislatures will long be remembered.

Under the Board of Control bill at finally passed, the board of control is authorized to enter into contracts for prison labor with private [illegible] provided th[illegible]

Although forty of the forty-eight states in the union have some form of budget legislation, Iowa, is a pioneer in progressive budgetary regulation. At present an overwhelming number of states which employ the budget system merely require the various expending bodies to file with the governor a detailed report showing the estimate amount of expenditures and all sources of income, a survey of the budget laws shows. From these reports the governors, in the case of twenty-one states, compile their state budgets and recommende passage by the houses of the state legislatures. Before the enactment of the budget law by the state legislature Iowa will in the class which forms its budget on the governor's recommendation. Because of its departure from ordinary budgetary systems, Iowa will be closely watched during the next few years by every state in the union as its is wholly probable that upon the state's success or failure to apply its budget plan, will hinge changes in legislation along this line in other states.

The prison labor controversy which has been waged throughout this special session was ended in the senate with the adoption of the second conference report on the board of control bill. The house has also adopted the report. This bill embraces one fifth of the sections revised at the special session. The report gives the board of control final authority in making contracts for the labor of prisoners with private concerns, subject to the approval, on appeal, of the special appeal board created in the budget law. The contracts, under the report and the bill, may be made for three years, at which time private contracts will be replaced by the state use system.

The code supervising committee, authorized in the law prescribing methods of preparation and publication of the new code, was named by President Hammill of the senate and Speaker Anderson of the house. Members of the committee are Senator Dutcher of Johnson and Smith of Madison, and Representatives Clark of Linn, Harrison of Pottawattamie, and Doolittle of Delaware. This legislative committee will work with Code Editor U. G. Whitney, O. K. Patt and their code revising staff from the recess of the legislature until the code is printed, bound and ready for distribution.

Senators who are retiring this year include many senate leaders. The seventeen senators not candidates for reelection are: Senators Abben of Lyon, Adams of Kossuth, Banta of Delaware, Dutcher of Johnson, Ethel of Davis, Hale of Jones, Holdoegel of Calhoun, Johnston of Lucas, Neberry of Clayton, Olson of Boone, Price of Monore, Scott of Marshall, Slosson of Worth, Smith of Madison, Thurston of Clark, Tuck of Taylor and Wichman of Hancock.

On the house side thirty-seven representatives will retire. Of the seventy-one candidates for re-election fourteen have no opposition in either party. Twenty-two will have no opposition in the primary election; each will have an opponent in November. There are two new candidates for representative who are the only ones to file in their district. Northern Iowa seems especially well satisfied with its representatives as seven have no opposition.

Lieut. Gov. John Hammill, retiring presdent of the state Senate, in spite of long-established custom, failed to get the chair which he occupied during the 40th General Assembly. Solons feared that taxpayers would not consider the gift in line with the economy program carried out by the special session. Retiring legislators failed to avail themselves of the custom which permits them to buy their chairs for $10 and shipping charges.

Governor Kendall has vetoed no bills passed by the special session and is not expected to veto any. There is virtually no doubt he will sign the board of control bill, which organized labor leaders asked him to veto. This bill comprises one-third of the sections revised and interlocks with eight or ten other bills, and its veto would require the legislature to reassemble, it was stated at the capitol.

Departing members of the legislature exchanged good wishes and those whose terms expire were offered assistance in their campaigns by members and others who have no opposition for reelection. The members of this special session have become especially well acquainted because they have all sat with each other through two sessions and some have been colleagues in three sessions.

Governor Kendall undoubtedly will sign the prison labor bill, over which there was much controversy during the special session of the legislature had asked Governor Kendal lto veto the bill because they could not agree with its provisions relative to the petition by prison workers with organized labor.

The budget bill will correct many of the evils of unjuest assessments. It will put the operation of a county and state business on a plan similar in conduct to any private enterprise.

There will be many new faces in both the senate and the house of the forty-first Iowa general assembly when it convenes next January.

Present alignments in both houses will be somewhat different in the regular sessions of the legislature. The house farm bloc will lose but thirteen members. Seven of them are candidates for the senate. The [illegible] in the senate is [illegible] than the pr[illegible] rospects are [illegible] is organi[illegible] ough reinf[illegible] again.

FLORIDA IS WINNER OF LINDSLEY'S CUP

Florida enrolled the greatest percentage of the previous year's Legion membership on March 1. Through the generosity of Henry D. Lindsley of New York, past national commander of the Legion, the "Land of Flowers" will receive a handsome loving cup, presented by the donor to the department making this achievement.

The figures tabulated for the state show that on March 1 a total of 93.2 per cent had been enrolled of the total membership obtained on December 31, 1923. This is most unusual, and while Legion renewals are more advanced at this time by departments than is usual, Florida's feat shows effects of an earnest campaign.

The department of Mexico was not far behind the winning state, however, as it enrolled 92.2 per cent of those affiliating with the Legion during the previous year, and for a time it was thought that the foreign department had surpassed the winner. In a second group, the department of Wisconsin was in third place with 78.4 per cent renewed, while Oregon was but a single point behind the Badger state for fourth place. Other departments enrolling more than 50 per cent of the 1923 membership were announced to stand in the following order: South Dakota, Tennessee, South Carolina, Iowa, North Dakota, Alaska, Vermont, Virginia, Wyoming, Kentucky, New Hampshire, Idaho and Nevada.

Commander Lindsley's offer of the trophy was made in order to spur the departments to early renewal of membership. The award was not announced until the January meeting of the executive committee, and little or no time elapsed for the various departments to prepare any specific drive or campaign.

The former leader has taken a great interest in Legion affairs. In addition to this trophy he has presented several trophies to departments for similar accomplishments, and has made a bequest of $10,000 to the Legion on his death, with which he hopes to establish a great endowment fund which will provide money in sufficient amount to carry on the work of the organization as its members die. The Legion will have advantage of the income from Mr. Lindsley's bequest until time of his death when it will receive the total sum.

Until a few months ago Mr. Lindsley was a resident of Dallas, Tex., where he served in the capacity of mayor for one term and took an active part in civic affairs. During the war he was in charge of war risk insurance in the A. E. F., and was promoted to the rank of colonel under General Harbord. He served as commander of the Legion from the time of the St. Louis caucus in May, 1919, until election of Franklin D'Olier to the post at Minneapolis.

Colonization Plan Is Popular With Veterans

A land colonization plan for veterans, one of the features of the home and farm-aid law adopted by the California legislature, has been held in abeyance because of the great expense involved. Ten million dollars had been voted as an appropriation for the purpose of farms and homes for veterans.

At a recent meeting of Legionnaires and welfare board members, it was decided to ignore the land colonization plan. More than four hundred and thirty farms, costing $3,000,000, have already been bought for veterans who are citizens of the state. Twelve hundred applications for purchase of homes and farms have been received by the board, and it is believed that the total $10,000,000 available will be exhausted by the time these applications are filled.

Ohio Post Finds Auto Show Brings Returns

An automobile show in Jackson, O., was found to be a profitable undertaking for the American Legion post of that city. Jackson has less than 6,000 inhabitants. Dealers were pleased with the results of the show when nearly fifty automobiles were sold or contracted for during the show.

In addition to the automobile displays, local manufacturers, churches, fraternal organizations and merchants had displays. The post netted nearly $1,000 from the show.

The announcement of Chris Gilstrap, of Crystal Lake, for representative from this district, appears in this issue of the Times.

The J. J. Poort, C. G. Waterman, W. C. Keraus and R. A. Jorgenson familes enjoyed a picnic dinner and supper at Ventura Heights Sunday.

Mrs. Mart Bachman underwent a minor operation at her home one day last week as she was troubled with an abcess which had formed on her neck. She is recovering rapidly.

Mr. E. C. Rhodes, of Garner, a candidate for the Clerk's office, was in town yesterday getting acquainted with the voters. It was reported some time ago that he had withdrawn from the race but he says there is nothing to it and that he is going to make a county-wide campaign. He has an advertisement in this issue of the Times.

Yours For Service

We strive to render a service to all our depositors and to be something more than just a storehouse for money.

If our Bank was only a depository we could get along with a little room and a small window like a window in a box office, and a table with pen, ink, deposit slips and checks, and a big steel vault or two in which the money could be stacked.

But modern banking calls for much more than simply taking in deposits. We offer a service of aid to all our depositors and customers that we feel meets their very needs in the business world. Come in and talk over any problems that may confront you in business.

STILLE GIVEN PLACE ON COUNCIL

LESTER STILLE APPOINTED ON COUNCIL TO FILL TERM OF GIMER WHO RESIGNS

Ben Coobs Also Appointed Street Commissioner To Succeed Tom Hake

A change took place in the town administration the past week. The resignation of Councilman A. D. Gimer was read and accepted by the Mayor and council. To fill this vacancy on the council ester Stille was appointed to fill the unexpired term of A. D. Gimer.

Tom Hake also resigned as srteet commissioner as he had a better position in view. To fill that vacancy the mayor and council appointed Ben Coobs to act in that office.

Mr. Gimer has served on the council for several years; he i also a member of the school board and along with his business at the creamery he felt that his time was taken up and feels that to be on one board is enough. He has been a popular man on the council and always pulled a big vote whenever he was a candidate.

The selection of Lester Stille as a councilman meets with the approval of the majority. Lester is a young man and the younger men of the town especially feel that they are entitled to have representation on the council and we compliment the mayor and council for the judgment they used in selecting a young man for the council. Lester also is a man of good business sense and will make good on the board.

WILL GRAVEL HIWAY

WILSON HIGHWAY WILL BE GRAVELED AT EARLY DATE

Board Passes Resolution To Gravel Klemme-Garner and Britt-Kanawha Roads

LETTING TO BE HELD MAY 22nd

Hancock County will soon be entirely out of the mud as far as primary roads are concerned. At the adjourned meeting the board of supervisors passed a resolution to gravel the Klemme-Garner road on the Wilson Highway and also to gravel the primary road between Kanawha and Britt. Bids for graveling will be received May 22nd.

When these two roads are graveled the county primary roads will be out of the mud as the north and south roads will be graveled and the main east and west road is already paved.

We believe that the majority of people would rather have the Wilson Highway paved but the county is not in a position to pave now, and it may be a few years before this road is paved. It is the next road on the paving program; it was voted that way and is so recorded by the state highway commission and authorities on the subject say it must be paved next.

However, people will be pretty well satisfied to have the road graveled for the present.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Last Sunday was a great day. The splendid congregation assembled Sunday morning to honor Mothre. A fine spirit pervaded every part of the service. We were glad to see so many mothers present.

No less interesting was the evening ervice when the young people came in for their inning. We listened to two fine talks by Mr. Wellemeyer and Dr. Anderson. It is our aim to reorganize and revitalize the Epworth League and to make it a worth while organization for the young people. We need and ask their co-operation to do this.

The pastor has a special message for next Sunday morning. Be there to hear it.

On Sunday evening the Baccalaureate service will be held at 8:00 o'clock.

SCHOOL TO CLOSE YEAR'S WORK FRIDAY, MAY 23rd

IOWA WEEKLY INDUSTRIAL REVIEW

May 12, 1924

Our Financjal and Banking System Seems to have the stability and elasticity to serve both our country and as a universal model. World financial conditions already show improvement following adoption of plan prepared by three Americans.

Vail— Work started on grading and straightening Lincoln Highway west of town.

Sioux City— Local Livestock market breaking all previous records; during past week over 13,000 hogs brought on to market.

Colfax— Denniston & Patridge Company clearing site for erection of new building.

Ames— Story and Boone counties to co-operate in construction of Napier road.

Cedar Rapids— Apprximately $200 000 to be spent on paving work during the present year.

Ames— Machinery being installed in Summit coal mine and properly placed in condition for active develoepement.

Iowa Leads all other states in egg production.

Bloom field— Davis county ranks first in state in sheep raising and wool production.

Holstein— Local egg and poultry plant, employing 27 people, has capacity of dressing 2,000 head of poultry and packing 400 cases of eggs per day.

Cumberland— Farmers Cooperative Company closes contract for construction of large brick building.

Sioux City— Building permits for first four months of 1924 totaled $1,319,630 as compared with$ 1,055,400 for corresponding period last year.

Manchester— Manchester Security Company, capitalized at $100,000, granted operating charter.

Guthrie Center— Contracts to be awarded for construction of fifteen concrete and steel culverts in county.

Adair— Construction of $50,000 concrete and steel bridge over Rock Island railroad practically completed

Wiegston— Elevator with capacity of 100,000 bushels being erected on Illinois Central between Fort Dodge and Sioux City.

Shenandoah—Preliminary work is completed and construction of paving project started.

Sioux City—Construction of inlet and outlet at Perry creek conduit to start soon.

Nevada— Local paving program for 1924 now totals fifty-five blocks.

Cedar Rapids—Evening Gazette lets general contract for construction of new building.

Shenandoah—Standard Oil Company announces plans for erection of four additional filling stations thruout city.

Elberon—Farmers' State Bank to enlarge and modernize building.

Cedar Rapids—Approximately $35 000 added to monthly payroll of the Cedar-Rapids Minnesota division of Rock Island railroad as result of the wage increase granted to conductors and brakemen, effective April 1.

Marshalltown— Fisher Governor Company to spend approximately $75,000 improving and enlarging factory.

Deep River—Contracts totaling $33,137 awarded for construction of box culvert and bridges.

BUSY WEEK AHEAD

MANY EVENTS ON PROGRAM FOR NEXT FEW DAYS

Baccalaureate Sermon Next Sunday at Methodist Church

COMMENCEMENT THRURSDAY

Senior Class Play Tonight at Auditorium

May15	Senior Class Play
May 16	Ball Games at Swaledale
Sun. May 18	Bacalaureate Sermon
May 22	Commncement Program
May 23	Ball Game with Kanawha here.

This is the Strenuous program which has been outlined for the students of our school during the closing days, beides the final examinations.

Tonight is the Senior class play "CLARENCE". It is a play well worth your seeing and you should attend.

Tomorrow the Klemme Shamrocks will journey to Swaledale and play two games of baseball with the Swaledel nine. This promises to be hard for our boys. They have had hard luck this spring on account of the bad weather and have not been able o play many games.

On Sunday evening, May 13, Rev. Gauger will deliver the Bacalaureate sermon at the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On Thudsday Evening, May 22, the Commencement exercises will take place. Rev. A. H. Meyer is delivering the address. Music will be by High School Orchestra and school chorus.

To wind up the year's baseball season the Shamrocks are going to play Kanawha here on Friday afternoon, May, 23. Kanawha holds the cup for baseball this year and are considered the strongest team in the county.

The Examinations will probably be held next Wednesday and Thursday.

Let's help bring the school year to a successful close.

Sidney to Build Big Arch Bridge

25,000,000 Structure for Capital of South Wales.

New York.—Ever since the day, more an one hundred years ago, when the st convict ship dropped anchor in dney harbor, the greeting of the tive Sydneyite to the stranger with- his gates has been, "Have you seen r harbor?"

In six years this greeting will prob- ly be changed to "have you seen our idge"? for Sydney, capital of New outh Wales, in the Commonwealth of ustralia, will commence work within few weeks on what will be the larg- st single arch bridge in the world. he Sydney Harbor bridge linking ewes Point on the Sydney side to filler's Point, directly opposite, has een talked of for more than thirty ears. Now it is to be built.

The contract for the construction as signed five weeks ago, and re- ently G. C. Imbault, one of the con- ulting engineers of the firm of Dor- an Long company of England, whose ender was accepted, passed through ew York being enroute from Syd- ey to London to complete arrange- ents for the commencement of build- g operations.

The cost of erecting the bridge will £4,217,721, or approximately $20,- 40,301. It will be 3,770 feet in ength and will have a single arch of ,650 feet span, the largest of any rch bridge in the world. Its nearest val in this respect is the Hell Gate idge, with an arch of 977.5 feet. Be- des being the largest arch bridge in he world, the Sydney Harbor bridge ill be the third largest bridge of any ind in the world. It will be sur- assed only by the Quebec bridge over he St. Lawrence river, with a span of ,800 feet, and the Firth of Forth idge, with a span of 1,710 feet. The ourth largest span of any bridge is ur own Williamsburg bridge, whose pan is 1,600 feet, only 50 feet less han the Australian bridge.

Will Cost $25,000,000.

While the actual construction of the idge will cost more than $20,000,000, o this must be added about 5,000,000 ore for the property to be used in he approaches. More than 50,000 tons f steel will be used.

Following the policy that has al- ays been the slogan of the Common- ealth, "Australia for the Australians," he bridge will be built by Australian orkmen of material found or made Australia.

The state parliament of New South Wales had authorized an expenditure f $30,802,750. The tender of Dor- an Long & Co. was $10,262,449 less han this amount and $544,510 less han the estimate submitted by J. J. Bradfield, the government engineer.

The bridge will allow the largest teamers in the world to pass below, he floor being 170 feet above high- ater mark, and will carry four rail- oad tracks as well as 80 feet of road nd footways. The main span will e joined to two granite abutment owers rising to a height of 310 feet.

G. C. Imbault who, with Ralph Free- an, M. I. C. E., is the consulting engi- neer of the bridge, has built bridges in all parts of the world. Some of his works are the Victoria Falls bridge over the Zambesi river, in Africa; the bridge over the Blue Nile at Khar- toum and the White Nile bridge at Giz Abu Goma. During the war he was in the service of the French gov- ernment rebuilding bridges that had been destroyed by the Germans.

Speaking of the construction of the bridge, Mr. Imbault said that only the parts that cannot be manufactured in Australia would be imported from abroad.

"As much Australian steel as Aus- tralian manufacturers are prepared to produce and to roll into plates and shapes will be used in its fabrication. The bridge will be fabricated wholly at Milson's Point, Sydney, by Aus- tralian workmen; the piers and abut- ments will be constructed of Moruya granite, Nepean river sand and New South Wales cement, and the bridge will be constructed by Australian la- bor."

To Take Six Years to Complete.

Mr. Imbault said that the abutments would rest on the sandstone formation that is within a few feet of the sur- face along the foreshores of Sydney harbor, and that the engineers would not be bothered with any problems of sinking caissons into the water. He estimated that it would take six years to complete, and that during that time employment would be furnished to from 1,200 to 1,500 me- chanics, engineers, steel workers and other artisans.

The completion of the bridge will bring to a successful conclusion an is- sue that has existed for more than a quarter of a century. Before the be- ginning of the Twentieth century Syd- ney had outstripped its housing fa- cilities on the south side of the har- bor, where the city proper existed. Thousands of residences had been built, even then, on North Shore. Mil- son's Point, Mosman's Bay and the coves and inlets that wind in all di- rections. The North Shore railroad line extended from Milson's Point through a rapidly growing residential area. The only communication with Sydney proper was by ferryboat.

Several styles of bridges were sug- gested. Commissions were appointed to investigate and determine the best kind. Finally, after years of work, J. J. C. Bradfield, chief engineer, sub- mitted a design which met with gen- eral approval.

Decide on Arch Bridge.

When the bridge is completed the transcontinental express will start at Rockhampton, Queensland, on its run of 3,880 miles to Freemantle in West- ern Australia and will pass through Sydney, via the Sydney Harbor bridge, thus shortening the distance by sev- eral miles. The same cars and coaches will run through, steam and electric locomotives only being changed at various division points.

The traveling time between Sydney and the suburbs to the south as well as points on the suburban and Illa- wara line and the great resorts of Manly, Narrabean, the Spit and Mos- man's Bay will be reduced in many instances by one-half on completion of the bridge. Railroad trains and street cars will run direct from the Central station to these points.

The style of bridge to be erected was for some time the subject of con- siderable controversy. Finally it sim- mered down to the choice of one of the three principal styles, suspension, cantilever and arch; the latter, it was concluded, would best harmonize with the natural beauty of the harbor.

In this connection it is noteworthy that when the Sydney Harbor bridge is completed three of the world's four largest bridges will be of different types. The Quebec bridge over the St. Lawrence river in Canada, the world's greatest bridge, is of the cantilever type. So is the Firth of Forth bridge in Scotland. The Sydney Harbor bridge, next in size, is an arch bridge, and Williamsburg bridge, spanning the East river from Manhattan to Wil- liamsburg, is a suspension bridge.

Plan to Bridge Golden Gate.

Next in order of size come the other New York bridges, Brooklyn, Manhat- tan, Queensboro and Hell Gate, the two first named being suspension bridges, the third a cantilever and the last an arch bridge, at this time and until the completion of the Sydney Harbor bridge the largest of its kind in the world.

While the Sydney Harbor bridge is in process of erection work on three other large bridges in the United States will be going on. For more than one hundred years there has been talk of building a bridge over the Delaware river between Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J. It is being built now.

The accepted design for this bridge calls for an expenditure on the bridge itself of $13,355,000. The Philadelphia approach is to cost $3,580,000 in ad- dition, and the Camden approach, in- cluding the land taken and the pav- ing of the approach, is to be $2,640,- 000. The electrical equipment of the bridge is to cost $250,000 and the engi- neering expenses are to be $1,250,000. Real estate foreclosed in Philadelphia is valued at $4,500,000 and in Camden at $1,600,000. The distance between pierhead lines will be 1,690 feet and the span will be 1,750 feet.

Plans are being worked out in San Francisco for a bridge over the Golden Gate which will be considerably larger than the proposed suspension bridge across the Hudson river between New York and New Jersey. Its middle span of 4,000 feet will be 750 feet longer and its towers 150 feet higher than the Hudson river project. The estimated cost of the bridge is $17,- 250,000.

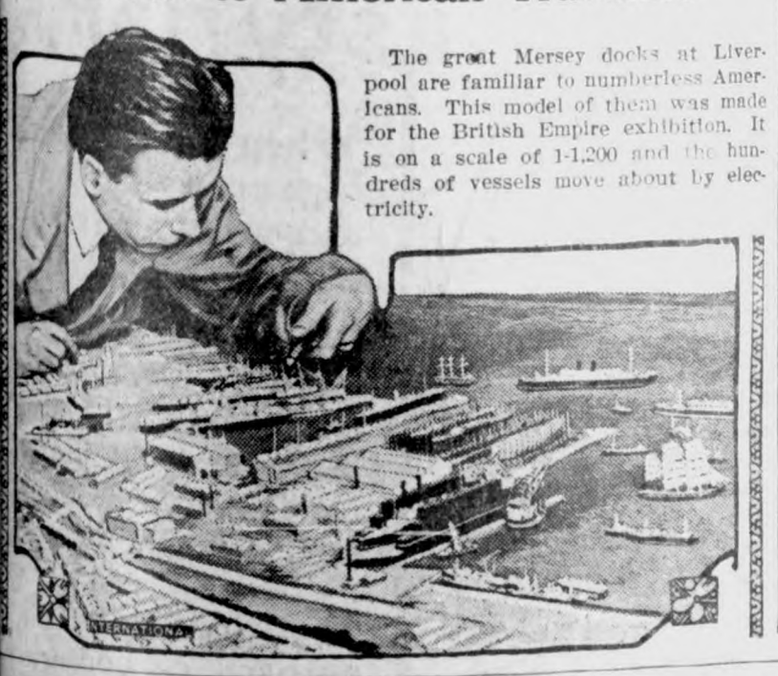
The Golden Gate bridge will be unique in construction. It will com- bine the features of the suspension and cantilever types. At the point selected for the bridge site the shores are 6,700 feet apart. Rock ledges fifty feet under water extend from each side, making the actual channel about 4,000 feet wide. The cost of a suspension bridge with cables 7,000 feet or more in length was prohibitive, nor was cantilever construction prac- ticable.

With two side spans and its middle span of 4,000 feet the bridge will be 1.6 miles in length. The 747-foot steel towers will stand on piers 200 feet from base to top, making the towers about 950 feet above rock bottom. The height above high water mark will be 200 feet and the width will be 80 feet. There will be two trolley car lines, two automobile roadways in each direction and two seven-foot side- walks.

Plans have been prepared by the City of Detroit for a bridge over the Detroit river. This will provide a great highway for railroad and vehic- ular traffic between the Michigan city and Canada. The plans of Charles E. Fowler, chief engineer, and Dr. D. B. Steinman, his chief assistant, call for a center span of 1,803 feet from center to center of towers. The shore spans will be 925 feet in length from the center of the tower to the anchor- age. The floor of the bridge between the towers will be suspended from eight cables and between the towers and anchorages it will be carried upon a series of steel piers.

The traffic over the bridge will be carried on two decks. Upon the high- way deck will be two trolley tracks, two twenty-eight-foot roadways and two seven-foot sidewalks. On the lower deck will be four railroad tracks.

Familiar to American Travelers



The great Mersey docks at Liver- pool are familiar to numberless Amer- icans. This model of them was made for the British Empire exhibition. It is on a scale of 1-1,200 and the hun- dreds of vessels move about by elec- tricity.

Paris Cuts Price of Bread

An order reducing the price of bread for Paris and the department of the Seine from 1 franc 30 centimes to 1 franc 25 centimes a kilogram was signed by the prefect at Paris.

Alien Jazz Bands Hit Musicians in France

Foreign musicians have invaded rench orchestras to such an extent hat the number of French musicians ut of jobs is steadily increasing. here are now 500 of them receiving id from the musicians' union, out of ,500 professionals in the Paris dis- rict. At the same time Czechoslo- akian, Viennese, Russian and Ameri- an orchestras are numerous and in onstant demand.

There is a law preventing the em- loyment of more than 10 per cent of oreign musicians in French orches- ras, but it is easily evaded. A good any foreign musicians come to rance under the pretense of seeking mployment as road-menders in the evastated regions. These men re- lace French musicians in hotel and estaurant orchestras, which are not overed by the 10 per cent law.

A slump in the dancing craze, hich, it is feared in musical circles, ay come at any time, would bring bout a serious crisis.

BEING BRIDE IS GREAT UNTIL BOY CLAIMS HER

Then High School Girl Refuses to Leave Her Papa and Mamma.

Kansas City, Kans.—Pretty Helen Kannally, fifteen-year-old high school student, has a husband, and if the judge will be so kind as to take him away from her, Helen will be most grateful.

To have a husband is all right, Helen agreed in Circuit court at Kan- sas City, Kans., where her father, Wil- liam J. Hartford, is seeking annul- ment of the marriage, but when he in- terferes with one's pleasures, well, that is something else.

Helen met Charles A. Kannally at West Point high school, where both were students and the two became fast friends. One day, she says, Charles suggested an elopement to Olathe and there they were married.

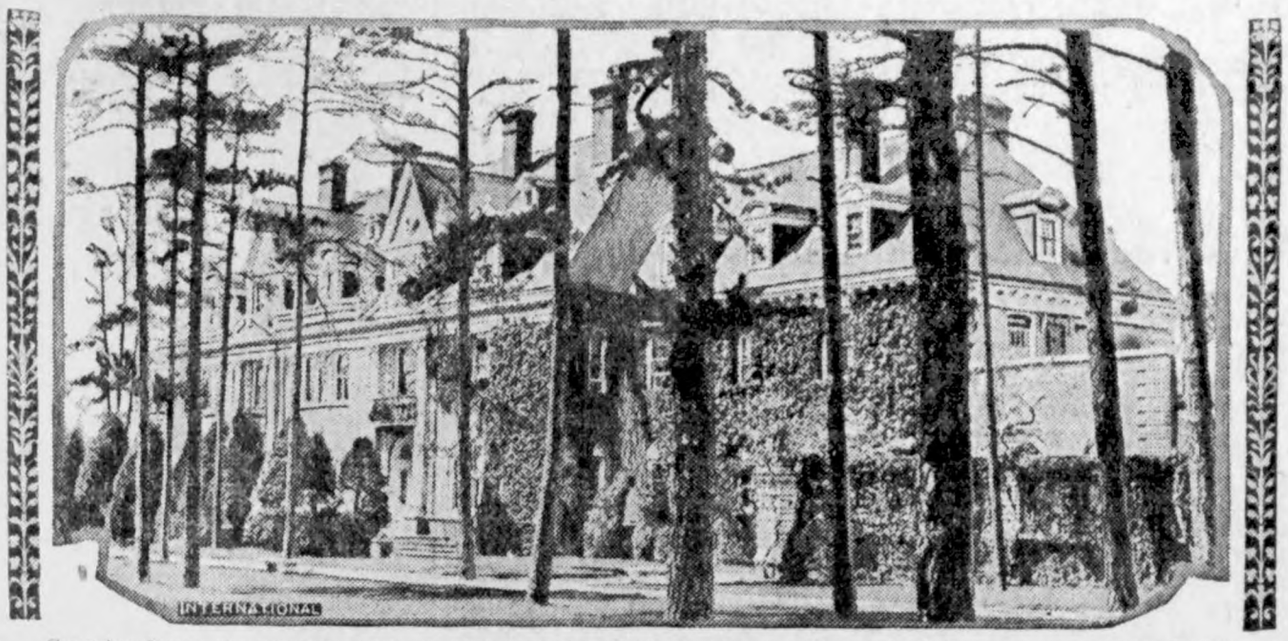
"It was to be a secret," the pretty student said. "And it was. He lived with his parents and I lived at home. Being married wasn't so bad, that way. But one day he came and want- ed to claim me and said I had to live with him. Well, that was different."

Judge Thomas Buckner reserved de- cision until Kannally is arrested and brought into court charged with falsi- fying his bride's age.

Huge Run of Smelts

Kelso, Wash.—Hundreds of fisher- men daily line the banks of the Sandy river here scooping up smelts with all sorts of makeshift nets and dippers. The annual run of the smelt from salt water to the headwaters of the Sandy is one of the phenomena of wild life. No other western river known enter- tains these six-inch fish. They come in solid masses, often packing the shallow rapids.

Gould Palace Becomes Charitable Institution



Georgian Court, the palatial residence of the late George J. Gould at Lakewood, N. J., has been sold for $200,000 to the Sisters of Mercy and will be turned into a charitable institution.

Dig Up Skulls of Indian Warriors

Amateur archeologists are as numerous around Fox Lake, Ill., just now as spring robins or bluebirds. It all came about with the discovery of an Indian burial mound right in the midst of the "hot dog" stands that cluster around Pistakee bay, 50 miles northwest of Chicago. So far nine skulls and enough bones to form a pile two feet high have been dug up. From the position in which the bones were lying, it is believed the Indians were buried in a trench following a battle.

Invents an Automatic Soldier

Niels Anson, the "Edison of Nor- way," and his wife, who are now in Washington, where the inventor is showing the War department his lat- est electrical device, an automatic sol- dier that is controlled from a distance. He has also plans for a remarkable depth bomb.

Jefferson's Little Schoolhouse

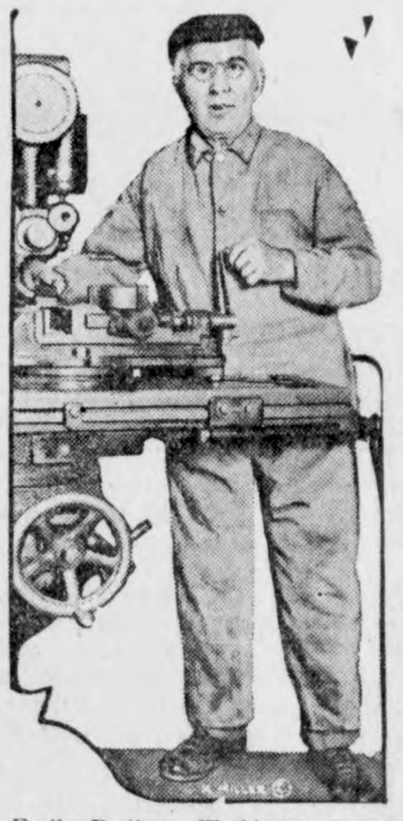
HELICOPTER BUILDER



Emile Berliner, Washington invent- or, is seen at work on his new heli- copter, which he has already entered in an international contest in England next year for a prize of 50,000 pounds, to be given by the British air min- istry. The original helicopter built by him has been flown successfully at College park for more than two years.

SYRACUSANS ENRAGED

On the eve of the opening of the anti-forest fire campaign by the for- estry bureau, this tree was destroyed by the display of a giant fiery cross in the hills near Syracuse, N. Y. It is said to have been the work of the Ku Klux Klan. The destruction of the tree has infuriated the residents of Syracuse.

TREASURE SEEKER

Miss Margaret Naylor, Great Brit- ain's first woman deep sea diver, mak- ing ready to descend in Tobermory bay to seek for the treasure of the Spanish galleon that sank there in 1588. Her equipment weighs 190 pounds.

NOW LITTLE USED

But Once the Term "To Gyp" Was Common.

Had Its Origin in a Particular Form of Swindling Which Auto Largely Did Away With.

Stopping at an iron gate beyond which a crowd of lusty schoolboys were playing, I heard the cry:

"He crooked my marbles."

Sympathizers gathered around instantly, when I heard snatches of graphic exclamation. "Swiped 'em," said one.

"Who gypped him?" inquired another.

Gypped, crooked, swiped, took the place of the milder terms stole, seized or took.

Listening another day, I found that "gypped" was a word frequently employed by the boys, writes "Girard" in the Philadelphia Inquirer. I fancy not one of them had a notion of how it came to have such a meaning as they put into it.

Some years ago "gypped" was common enough. That was when a particular form of swindling on the part of horse dealers was branded with that word.

Palming off a sawbones for a good steed was deemed parallel to the tricks in horse-trading, so common to gypsies, hence the term "gyp" to denote that kind of a fraud.

Since the auto has largely replaced the trotter and pacer for driving purposes, the gyp game is not played so frequently now.

It was once plied systematically by means of extensive advertising. Many a "rus in urbe" lured first by a convincing advertisement and then combed down by a slick come-on artist, paid a fancy price for what appeared to him to be a first-class horse, only to discover next day he had bought a lemon.

There was a regular medical treatment of horses to make them appear spry and spirited while under inspection. When the drug wore off and the poor horse was recovering from his jag, he would likelier than not appear a sorry animal.

Gyp operators were as skillful in buying the precise kind of horses they needed as in selling them. They usually looked for handsome animals whose defects were vital and incurable, but not noticeable.

That meant a low price they paid the owner. A powerful drug would put enough pep into such a horse to fool the victim selected by the gyp operator. The workhorse you see in Philadelphia today is a better animal than was his predecessor two decades ago.

But the Philadelphia horse is not in a class with the London horse, the Berlin horse or the Budapest horse.

Stop at a farm going through Hungary and you will be amazed at the superb horses.

"The brewer's big horses," which Billy Sunday sang could not run over him, were unusually fine specimens. One coal company has also attracted much attention with its teams of five or six great white horses hitched to one wagon.

A high city official said to me: "Our garbage horses are a better type than you ever saw before doing that kind of work in this city," and I agreed with him.

This is about the season of the year when in those gala times of four-in-hand coaches the city had an eye feast on superb horseflesh.

And milady in her car, however good it may be, looks less smart than when she stepped from her carriage drawn by a pair of high-stepping hackneys, who seemed ever trying to hit their noses with their knees.

Jingling chains, burnished harness, natty coachman and footman in attendance, spotless vehicle—"them was the days."

Irish Armies Invaded Britain.

Centuries ago, Irish armies invaded Britain and won victories there. Dr. Douglas Hyde, in his "Literary History of Ireland," says: "In 378 Ammianus Marcellinus mentions the Irish under the name of Scots, saying that the Scotti and Attacotti commit dreadful depredations in Britain; and Claudian, a few years later, speaks of the Irish invasion of Britain. The Irish expeditions against Gaul and Britain became more frequent toward the end of the Fourth century, and at last the unfortunate Britons, driven to despair, sooner than stand the fury of the Irish and Picts, threw themselves into the arms of the Saxons. Niall of the Nine Hostages ascended the throne in 379. He first assisted the Dal Riada clans to gain supremacy over the Picts of Scotland. He mercilessly plundered Britain and Gaul. The Picts and Irish Gaels at one time penetrated as far as London and Kent."

O'Clery's "Book of Invasions" contains a poem descriptive of treasures brought home by Crimhthan, who plundered Britain in the first year of Christ.

Upsetting the Game.

My husband was expecting a subpoena to be served and wishing to avoid being called had told me to refuse the subpoena by telling them he was out of town, which I did.

At the time he was sleeping upstairs, so I considered it safe. While I was talking to the officer my five-year-old daughter came into the room and called, "Mother, papa sent me downstairs for a clean collar." There was nothing to say, so I said it.—Exchange.

Huge Output of Pig Iron

The output of pig iron in the United States in 1923 was nearly 40,000,000 tons, an amount that surpasses even the war-time production of 1916; yet the exports of steel and iron were much lower than they were in 1913, and the lowest in the history of the industry in America if compared with the quantity produced. How long will it take American blast furnaces, keyed up to war-time pitch, to supply the demands of home consumption? Or has home consumption so increased that it can keep this great industry going at its present gait?—Youth's Companion.

Plans Hothouse for Humans

Human hothouse plants will be more than a figure of speech if a Chicago engineer can carry out a project that he is urging. He wants to build in some city a residential section perhaps half a mile square, put a glass roof over it and have one central heating plant for it. He promises to produce an Hawaiian climate all the year round, roses in winter, no rain on wash days, and other alluring advantages. He thinks that the cost of the superstructure would be offset by the lower cost of building inside the enclosure and by the lessened expenditures for heat.—Youth's Companion.

Clerk Sought to Please

Father, accompanied by his little flock, walked into a beach hotel and sought speech with the clerk.

"Can you arrange for accommodations?"

"House very full, sir. Best we can give you is a telephone booth."

"Don't spring that old gag on me. My wife and two daughters can't live in a telephone booth."

"Oh, as to that, we can give you four booths and will also insert a paragraph in the society papers to the effect that you have engaged a suite."

RAINY DAY PICNIC PROVES A SUCCESS

District No. 6 of Liberty Township enjoyed a holiday on Friday, May 9th. Several planks laid across the seats made a first class table and dinner was ssrved cafeteria. After dinner the children entertained with a closing day program and the winding of the May pole. Games of croquet and horseshoe were played. The women took part in the peanut race, and even the old boys enjoyed the new giant stride. Ice Cream and cake closed the day's program.

Locals

The W. F. M. S. Ice cream and cake social was not held last night as announced on account of the rain. Next Wednesday night the ladies expect to serve ice cream and cake at their booth on Wellemeyer's vacant lot. Music by the orchestra.

Last Thursday evening the Misses Stacy and Rone entertained at a six o'clock dinner at the F. Gruetzmacher home. After the dinner the guests gave the hostesses a miscellaneous shower and each received several useful and appropriate gifts—for house keeping.

Supt. and Mrs. C. F. Peters, of Goodell, were callers at the Times Office Tuesday evening. The Goodell school board re-elected Mr. Peters as superintendent for another year and in addition to that they gave him a $400 raise in salary, which speaks well for the ability of Mr. Peters.

The Times Shop printed and delivered to the county the annual financial report issued by the Auditor. This is a thirty-six page pamplet. As this report is of great interest to the tax payers we are running it in news form in the Times this week and it will be found on the front page and contiued thruout the paper. It gives a list of all officers in the county and the report of each of the county offices.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Johnston, of Sheffield, were Klemme visitors yesterday. Mr. Johnston is a candidate for Senator from the 43rd district, which is composed of the counties of Hancock, Franklin and Cerro Gordo. Mr. Johnston is a very capable man, has had experience as a member f the House, and he seems to be very businesslike and precise. He stands well with the people of his county and community.

Sunday the little grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Keever, who resjde in the northwest part of town, was struck by an automobile driven by Orville Stokesberry. The little boy was crossing the street to go home and was not seen by Orville Stokesberry as another car was ahead of his car and when he did see the boy he swerved sharply out but the rear wheel truck the little boy, and his arm was injured and he received some cuts about the head. As far as we can learn the accident was unavoidable.

MARRIED TWELVE YEARS BEFORE BABY CAME

Gladly Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Louisville, Nebraska.—"I was married twelve years before my boy was born. I had a lot of female troubles and had been treated by a physician for them but they continued much the same. Then I read your advertisement in the newspapers and thought I would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a good trial, for if it had helped others, why not me? I have taken 36 bottles of the medicine and am never without it in the house. My baby boy is three years old now and I sure am happy since I got relief from my troubles. When any one has troubles like mine, or any ways like mine, I am always glad to recommend the Vegetable Compound so that they will get the right kind of medicine."—Mrs. JOE NOVAK, Box 662, Louisville, Neb.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, 98 out of every 100 report they were benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Is Your Work Hard?

Is your work wearing you out? Are you tortured with throbbing backache—feel tired, weak and worn out? Then look to your kidneys! Many occupations tend to weaken the kidneys. Constant backache, headaches, dizziness and rheumatic pains result. One suffers annoying kidney irregularities; feels nervous, irritable and worn out. Don't wait! Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Workers everywhere recommend Doan's. They should help you, too. Ask your neighbor!

A flash of red flamed through the trees and stopped almost directly above his head in the top twigs of a hickory sapling and there swelled out a wild burst of reckless melody that clothed the hickory with music as the opening buds clothed the crab-apple tree with beauty.

"I thought so, ol' warcoat," the man muttered, glancing up. "You know where she is, don't y'u?"

He stepped softly toward the crab-apple tree—the wild song-burst in the hickory ceasing the instant he moved—and peered in through the gnarled limbs and tangled twigs.

Snugged down among some drifted dead leaves he found it, the treasure that inspired the cardinal's song—a roughly built, deep little nest, and, shining above its edge, a dark glossy crest, some long tail feathers, a short, heavy, reddish bill and a round glittering eye, black as a dewberry.

He let the limb he had bent aside swing slowly back into place and stole away.

"Alw'ys two," ran his thought—"a pair; mates—it's nature's way. Pheasants and cardinals and folks—they're all the same—though birds and beasts alw'ys run true, while folks—sometimes—oh, well—"

He walked away toward the west, coming at length to where the uplands ended abruptly in the line of wooded bluffs that fell steeply to the deep and winding scar of Eagle hollow, and the exact point where the double trail had run plainest the day before—a fact that had doubtless brought him just there. He bent a critical look upon the loutish trail; carefully crossed it; stepped out under a clump of haw trees at the very brink of the bluff and stood keenly searching the woods in every direction.

Below him and a short distance farther down the hollow an old deserted cabin of mud-daubed logs squatted against the bluff a few yards back from the Eagle Hollow road. The place had a reputation in the Flatwoods. It was the uncanny hovel of dead Henry Spencer, a woodchopper, who, on a winter night years before, while in a drunken frenzy, had murdered his wife and infant daughter with an ax, then had wandered out half naked and frozen to death in the snow.

What had once been yard and tiny garden was now overrun with weeds so rank that storms and snow could no longer break them down. A fallen oak had but just missed the cabin, and lay so close to one corner that some wild cucumber vines of the season before had crossed to the ruined roof and still hung in brown and dead festoons stretched from the fast decaying clapboards to the fungous warted branches.

A pair of chimney swallows, true prophets of summer, darted in and out of the crumbling chimney. A yellow-hammer loped down out of the woods, lighted upon the dry and sounding comb-board and drummed a challenge to all and sundry other yellow-hammers—or was it a love call to his mate in the dead limb of a sycamore down at the creek across the road?

The sound drew the eyes of the man. At the moment one of the swallows rose above the roof. As he followed its flight, the chimneys and gables of the red-roofed cottage, nearly a mile away down the hollow, came unexpectedly within his range of vision. His brows drew together; he gripped the shotgun; turned and strode through the fringing brambles back among the trees.

Half a mile farther up the hollow, at the point where he had left off following the double trail the day before, he picked his way down the rough and stony side of the wooded bluff to the road. He was just in the act of stepping out from the fringing trees to cross it when the soft swish of a bush a short distance above caught his quick ear.

Remembering that sinister face behind the log, he threw the heavy shotgun to instant readiness and stood dead still, his eyes searching every leaf and twig along the hillside.

There came a soft footfall, the bushes swayed, parted, and a young woman stepped out into the comparatively open glade where he stood—a girl that he had never seen, flushed and breathing hard.

She saw him on the instant, and her face went white. She darted in among the bushes again, stopped, came slowly back, stood studying him. He was as closely studying her—plainly, even shabbily dressed; her faded sunbonnet awry; her hair disheveled by the brambles; but, in spite of all, comely, and ruddy with health.

She made a quick effort to adjust the sunbonnet; spared a hasty touch to the disheveled hair and raised her eyes. He noticed they were blue.

"You don't chance t' be Mr.—Big Jack—?"

The woodsman studied her from under half closed lids.

"They call me—that—" He raised his eyes a trifle. "And you?"

She glanced uneasily up the hollow and back to his face. Half covertly searching his eyes, she seemed to gather reassurance from the level frankness of them.

"I 'lowed y'u—must be—" She glanced back at the bushes; drew a step away from them, as if she feared that hands might come out of them and clutch her. "I'm—Jennie Belden—an' I wus on the way t'—find you—"

Quite evidently much disturbed, she missed the quick lift of the man's shoulders. She glanced again at the bushes, listened a moment, drew a step nearer and lowered her voice.

"You're in dreadful danger, an' I wus comin' t' warn y'u. I don't know what y'u've done, but y'u ain't safe a minute. Of course I know y'u hurt brother Loge's hand, but it ain't that, an' there's another man more dangerous than him, an' a—third man more dangerous than both. There wus eyes on y'u yisterd'y. Ther' ain't none on y'u this mornin'—n'r on me, an' that's why I could slip away—but ther' will be. Stay out o' the woods, an' don't show a light at night, an' don't come out if anybody calls y'u"—she involuntarily glanced up the hollow, shivered, wrung her hands—"an' please, please, don't breathe a word about seein' me! They'd—kill me if they knowed—not even brother Loge could withstand 'em."

"You Don't Chance t' Be Mr. Big Jack?"

She was talking fast, in low and hurried whispers. Apparently she fancied that her words were not making the full impression she wished, for she drew still nearer—so close that Jack could hear the quick purr of her breath.

"You ain't skeered—?" She stopped; stood studying him: "But, of course, I don't reckon y'u would be—a man like you. But please b'lieve me, an' heed me. The woods has eyes; the bides his time, an' when he strikes, he night has knives." She bent her head; she seemed struggling with some inner thought. "That—third man," she muttered, "he waits, an'—kills."

She whirled on the instant, like some startled creature of the woods, and was gone. He strode a surprised step after her, even called softly. There came back to him only the low swish of the bushes and the soft fall of receding steps.

Like a shadow the girl—a far wanderer from the Kentucky mountains—had come; like a shadow gone. One moment the swaying bushes had flared forth her face, with its startled eyes, the next moment had swallowed it up.

The woodsman came back to the edge of the road and stood pondering her message—her warning; felt over in his careful way each hurried word; tried to cast them up and arrive at the exact sum total of them. The thought crossed his mind that she might have been wrought up over an imaginary danger; but no, it was real enough that she had dared personal harm to warn him—and her eyes were honest.

That the man who had glowered at him over the log was in some way associated with Loge Belden he had already surmised from the fact that the man had taken up Belden's quarrel at the schoolhouse—besides, his trail had led that way. But the utmost of their combined grievance could hardly warrant such a threat as the mountain girl had plainly hinted. There must be something back of it all—something that cut deeper than gashed hands and sore jaws.

The girl's last muttered words—"that third man" that "waits, an' bides his time, an' when he strikes, he kills"—suddenly assumed a deeper meaning. He darted a quick look down the hollow—a deep scar winding like the trail of a dragon between the hills—where, more than a mile away, hidden from view by the dense woods, the village lay like some hapless creature that had barely escaped the dragon's jaws; then frowned toward the narrow valley's head where the weather-blackened roof of a squalid cabin could barely be seen through the trees. A slow sternness crawled into his eyes; he dropped the butt of the shotgun to the leaves; leaned upon it and stood staring down at the road.

Gradually, as he stared, there grew upon him the consciousness of an outline of a single footprint at the other side of the road—detached, alone, apparently with no mark of any kind leading either to it or from it. The singular fact of its seemingly perfect isolation slowly reached him, and won a place among the troop of thoughts that gripped him.

He studied it closely a moment, grunted and then grinned.

"Uncle Nick," he muttered. "Heel deepest—he's jumped—where from?"

He glanced at the other side of the road where the take-off must have been to land a leap just there and after a short search found where the old man's boot had scraped the moss a little in making the spring.

"Aimin' f'r that slab of sandstone," he chuckled, his eyes losing a mite of their hardness, "fell a bit shy and landed in the soft dirt—mighty good jump, at that, f'r a man with eighty-odd years on 'is back."

Stooping again over the isolated footprint, he examined it with closest attention, trying at the same time to call up all the lore of the trail that the old ranger had taken such pride in teaching him—the wise and wonderful ways of woodcraft that he had taken an equal pride in learning, until, next to Uncle Nick himself, he was known to be the most skillful woodsman along the Wabash. As he looked, a grass stem that had been bent down and slightly hung in the soil suddenly loosed and straightened.

"Hot trail, ol' scoutmaster," he muttered, in the half spoken soliloquy that nature sometimes teaches her favorites. "And there y'u go, pickin' y'ur steps so's t' hit the hard spots and miss the soft ones."

A sudden thoughtfulness crossed his face. "I wonder why y'u're so p'tic'lar t' hide y'ur trail, though—there ain't no Pottawattomies t' find it no more. Mebbe the woods jist filled y'u s' full this wonderful morning, like they have me, that y'u can't help playin' a while at the ol' war game of the trail. Well, I'll play with y'u—and I'll run y'u down b'fore the shadow of the bluffs climbs out of the crick."

After a searching glance in every direction, so keen and critical that it appeared to handle with minuteness every bush and tree within range of his eye, and a further moment spent in sounding the woods for any false note they might carry, he threw the shotgun into the hollow of his well arm and took up the trail.

It led across the two or three rods of broken ground between the road and the little stream, which, at that point, sparkled along over a shallow riffle. Once, as his old friend had sprung from stone to stone in crossing, his boot had slipped and gone into the water. After that every alternate stone on which he had stepped, was still damp from the wet boot.

Jack had followed to a point well within sight of Loge Belden's cabin when, barely a hundred yards ahead, he caught a glimpse of a man stealing from cover to cover—just a flash as he flitted from one hazel thicket to another, but that was enough. That tall form, erect as an Indian, those iron-gray locks, falling loosely from under the quaint old cap of hand-dressed coonskin, could belong to but one man in the world—Uncle Nick.

Jack instantly darted to cover and began stalking the old ranger. Barely fifty yards separated them when, as he peeped from behind an oak, he saw the old man steal out from a dense thicket of wild grape-vines, dart across an open space and throw himself flat behind a decaying log.

Crawling up behind a huge sugar maple that stood barely more than a rod from the log, Jack rose to his feet, a grin spreading over his face as he thought of the surprise he was about to spring upon his old friend.

He was just bracing himself for the rush when a hand fell upon his shoulder, and, whirling with sudden startlement he found himself looking with foolish vacancy into the quizzically twinkling eyes of—Uncle Nick.

At sight of his young friend's bewildered face the shoulders of the old hunter shook with merriment, though not a sound passed his lips—the silent laughter that long years in the woods, when they were dangerous, had taught him.

Quite So.

Jud Tunkins says the man who gets the best of the bargain is usually the one most willing to let bygones be bygones.

Never tell a girl that her face looks like a picture; she'll think you think she painted the portrait herself.

DRIVER FLED FROM "MESS OF WIDDERS"

Possibly Remembered Tony Weller's Warning.

In a certain old New England seaport the toll of the sea throughout many years left so many widows that they formed an important part of the population. Some of them, resident upon a street that though it possessed another name was never called anything except Widows' lane, even took a curious pride in their estate and rather resented the intention of a newly married couple to build a house on the one remaining vacant lot.

"Being as we're all widows on the lane, it don't seem suitable," one of them explained to the bride, "and, lookin' for'ard, your husband not being a seafaring man, there's no reason to think you'd be left a widow any more likely than him to be left a widower. Still, if you're really set on coming, we'll try and make you feel as if you was one of us."

Strange to say, it was that kindly offer which induced the bride to select a site elsewhere. She did not wish to feel like a widow; she never became a widow nor did she ever dwell in Widows' lane.

Kate Douglass Wiggin in her recent reminiscences relates that there was at the time she first took up her residence in Hollis a singular lack of men in the society of the village, says the Youth's Companion. "Almost all the men had died in the Civil war, gone West or left the little village for towns where there was more lucrative work to be found. I remember leaning out of my bedroom window one morning on hearing the sound of a heavy truck and saw that it was filled with split pine boards— 'cut rounds' and 'stickins.'

"'I think you have mistaken the house,' I said, 'for we have ordered no wood.'

"'Ain't there a widder in this house? They told me to bring this wood down to a widder in Salmon Falls.'

"'Oh, yes,' I replied. 'The widders are all right; it's only the wood that's wrong. I am the Widder Wiggin; my mother is the Widder Bradbury; the lady who owns the house is the Widder Akers; but we don't need wood.'

"'Would it be for the house down the road a piece?'

"'Very likely; the Widder Pennell lives there, and the Widder MacLeese at the end of the bridge; or, if you go up the street, the Widder Sweet lives in the white house, and the Widder Dunn across the way in the brick one. Shall I make a list and throw it out of the window?'

"'Land, no,' he grunted. 'I don't want no list of widders. I'll take the wood back to Clark's mills, get the right name and have somebody else haul it over. A man ain't safe in such a mess of widders.'"

Trappers Make Money

In the little island of Tasmania trapping is a very profitable business. The trappers supply a market that used to look to America and Siberia with skins of the humble rabbit, the wallaby, the kangaroo and the opossum. Inexperienced trappers earn $125 a week and the old hands earn as much as $300, according to the Washington Star.

One of the leading fur exporters of Hobart states that this sum is a fair average with many of his customers.

The trappers are sought after. Caravans go out into the bush for weeks buying up skins. Before the advent of this industry landowners were glad to have trappers to keep down the game that devastated their runs, but skins have now become so valuable that they lease the trapping rights for big sums and there are many applicants.

The state government has followed their lead in respect to crown lands. Options are now held for two seasons ahead over the trapping country.

Made It Fifty-Fifty

A case was recently brought into divorce court, in which both parties charged desertion, but finally made up their differences and agreed to try double harness for a while longer.

It developed that the husband had for years been a golf fiend, and because he did most of his work at night and played golf all day, he became almost a stranger to his family.

Nevertheless, he took it for granted that when he did get home, he'd find his wife there, and a meal ready, and in fact, thought of nothing else until one night—she wasn't there.

After searching the house he found a note on his bureau which was short and sweet. It read:

"Dear husband, I have learned to play mah-jongg."

The Pie and the Peri

"This is hardly the pie for third prize," complained the chief judge after tasting it.

"Did you see the girl who made it?" asked the judge who had done the judging.

"No."

"There she is."

"That dazzling blonde?"

"The same."

"As I was saying," resumed the chief judge, "this is hardly the pie for third prize. It should have first prize."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best-- Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Plans have been drawn for a laundry on the campus of the Iowa State College at Ames. The building will cost approximately $17,000.

The town of Yale is doing away with telephone poles on Main street, and is placing all wires of the telephone company underground.

Plowing for corn in Bremer county is about 80 per cent completed, it was estimated here today. All early oats are up three to four inches high.

Contracts for road work costing $58,500 have been let by the Polk county supervisors. The work includes bridge and culvert construction.

Sixty-eight years on the same farm is the record of the Buck family, who still live about three miles east of Lamoni, but whose farm has just been sold.

The Monticello Canning company has secured contracts for 650 acres of corn in Jones county, which it will can this season. This is an increase of 200 acres over last year.

Examinations totalling 13,508 were made at the Des Moines Health Center in 1923 as against 12,674 in 1922, according to the report of Dr. A. D. McKinley, medical director of the institution.

Lieut. Gov. George Richard Lunn, of New York, who sold papers on the streets of Des Moines thirty-eight years ago, was a visitor in the city recently for the first time in that number of years.

An art exhibit is being sponsored by the Des Moines Federation of Colored Women's Clubs. Proceeds of a sale of handicraft will be donated for the benefit of the colored girls' dormitory at the University of Iowa.

With a total of 304 permits, issued and representing a total valuation of $964,000, the month of April has set a new record in number of building permits issued. The best previous record was 295 permits issued last May.

At a recent meeting of bus operators June 12th was set as the date for the Fageol safety coach to leave Des Moines for a twelve-day trip of 2,000 miles through northern Minnesota. Twelve couples have made arrangements to make the trip.

Radio is taking its place as a diversion for the patients at the state sanatorium at Oakdale for the treatment of tuberculosis. One of the recent innovations is the wiring of individual rooms so that a telephone head piece can be plugged into the wall at the head of the bed.

Sniping rats with a .22-caliber rifle in the city dump as snipers fire on enemy soldiers at the battle front, E. R. Walizer of Des Moines won The Register's fourth annual rat killing crusade with a total kill of 1,883 rats. The total killed in Iowa is estimated at 1,500,000.

Poppies made by disabled veterans of the world war will be sold in Des Moines on May 29 by Veterans of Foreign Wars. The proceeds of the sale will go toward the aid of service men and their dependents, the purchase and upkeep of burial plots, military funerals, hospital relief and entertainment, and service bureau work.

The one hundred and forty-fourth anniversary of the birth of Chief Keokuk from whom Keokuk takes its name, will be celebrated by local citizens this month. Although the exact date of Keokuk's birth has never been established, historians and research workers are practically agreed that the powerful chieftain first saw light of day in Illinois in Rock River in May 1780.

Speakers at the meeting of the Gas association of Iowa, at Atlantic, have been stressing the fact that the utilities of the country, the light, power, telephone and traction companies, as well as many others which furnish service to the people, are passing into the hands of the people they serve, who are buying their stock and securities and are participating in the profits of the business their own patronage has built up.

EX-SERVICE MEN TO GET PAY FOR DUTY

Is the mass of the people in favor of adjusted compensation for the service men?

The question was answered in no uncertain terms in Missouri recently when the state voted on 21 amendments to the state constitution, snowed under all but six, and among those six that won was a provision for the issuance of $4,600,000 for Missouri World war fighters.

For several days all except the soldier amendment was in doubt. The newspapers proclaimed its success the first day and kept adding to its majority as returns came in.

To the American Legion in Missouri, led by its commander, H. D. McBride, all credit is due. When Missouri's first bonus went through two years ago the number of claimants was underestimated. There was not sufficient funds to pay all. It required an amendment to the state constitution to finish the payments. The American Legion began a campaign for a square deal to the 25,000 who lost out.

For months a commission held sessions evolving a new constitution for the state. Columns of publicity were given to their work. The one amendment for the soldiers, sailors and marines received but scant attention by those engrossed with the heavy study of writing a constitution for a state that was doing business under provisions made by a past generation.

As the election drew near an undercover effort was made to defeat the amendment for the soldiers. It brought a scathing statement from G. H. Scruton of Sedalia, Mo., district committeeman of the American Legion, and a fighter for the Legion in peace with the same do-or-die punch that he showed in France. The statement was issued the evening before the election. It was sent broadcast through the state, the metropolitan newspapers giving it first-page prominence.

Scruton said:

"Rumor has reached this city that sample ballots being distributed in larger cities do not suggest support of amendment No. 4, which provides for the payment of the state bonus to those soldiers who did not participate in the original appropriation because the funds were exhausted before their names were reached.

"Former service men here and in neighboring communities in this part of the state appeal to the voters of St. Louis to vote for this amendment. It is right and just and fair. Its defeat would be a stain on the good name of the state of Missouri."

The amendment carried by 65,964 majority.

Prize Legion Band Is Much in Limelight

Friends of the prize-winning American Legion post band of Sioux City, Ia., may now hear their favorites on the phonograph.

The band has made two records, one of the famous American Legion march, "Armistice Day Forever," the composition of Berry J. Sisk, an Iowan, and the "American Aviation March." Under Director Johnson the band has been playing for records, broadcasting over the radio, and playing program concerts throughout Iowa and nearby states. The band won first prize in New Orleans and was awarded second at San Francisco. It is composed entirely of Legion men, and represents the Monahan post, one of the strongest in the department of Iowa.

Work of the Legion

(By Robert N. Stanfield, United States Senator from Oregon.)

"To me the most impressive work of the American Legion has been in the discharge of its duties towards the disabled comrade. Because of its energy and devotion to this work the many great difficulties surrounding it have been solved. Much credit for the conception of our present laws in this direction is due to your organization. So, too, has the Legion progressed with its wonderful work in the rehabilitation of the veterans of the great war, and its program of Americanization cannot help but leave a feeling of security in the minds and hearts of those who love America and respect her institutions."

Yours For Service

We strive to render a service to all our depositors and to be something more than just a storehouse for money.

If our Bank was only a depository we could get along with a little room and a small window like a window in a box office, and a table with pen, ink, deposit slips and checks, and a big steel vault or two in which the money could be stacked.

But modern banking calls for much more than simply taking in deposits. We offer a service of aid to all our depositors and customers that we feel meets their very needs in the business world. Come in and talk over any problems that may confront you in business.

BAND WILL GIVE FIRST CONCERT IN PARK SUNDAY

COME OUT AND HEAR KLEMME'S BAND IN FIRST CONCERT

Band Has Made Rapid Progress With Poort As Director

Some time ago we mentioned in the columns of the Times that Klemme had a band and that they would soon give a concert. The band will make their first appearance this Sunday, May 25th when they will give an open air concert in the Park beginning at 3:00 P. M.

A few word regarding this band will be appropriate. The band is composed of fifteen young men of this city and vicinity. They are conducting the band entirely independent of outside help or financing. They ask nothing in the way of financial help while building up a good band and this first concert is really put on to show what kind of band has been organized and whenever a concert is desired by anyone, or the services of a band required for celebrations, etc., the band will make a charge for their services. The concert to be given Sunday is free and no donations or collections will be taken up by the band. The band is paying all their own expenses in the way of music, intruments, uniforms, and other incidentals. Their services in the future are "for sale" to any city or organization in the surrounding territory.

So much or the band at this time. And as to the program Sunday the band extends an invitation to everyone to come.

HAMMILL ASKS ELECTION UPON RECORD

Lieut. Gov. John Hammill of Britt, candidate for the republican nomination for governor, is making his campaign upon his record in the state senate as a lawmaker, Lieutenant-Governor, Acting Governor and his positions upon public questions.

Mr. Hammill is a practicing attorney and farmer residing at Britt, Iowa. He has during all his business career been interested in farms and in public works.

He believes that the prosperity of the government of the state depends upon a curtailment of expenditures by public officials as well as economical appropriations by the legislature.

His stand for a budget system has won for him thousands of friends throughout the state. The work of the senate during the special session was directed by Mr. Hammill as presiding officer.

Senator of both parties concede that Mr. Hammill was fair in his appointments on committees and made selections from the personnel of the senate entirely up o the qualifications of the member to serve rather than for political reaons.

Mr. Hammill's attitude on the questions which so vitally affect the agricultural interests of the state is such that hi candidacy will appeal to the thinking agricultural people of the state of Iowa.

His experience in the office of lieutenant governor and in the office of governor itself, while acting for Governor Kendall, has demonstrated his ability and qualifications to fill the office of governor.

FISH ARE ADDED TO LAKE NEAR KANAWHA

KANAWHA West lake which lies three miles east of here, was stocked with several thousand pike fry yesterday. The fish were obtained from the Clear Lake hatchery through the efforts of O. E. Johnson. West Lake furnishes fairly good fishing at the present time and if an average per cent of the "plant" survives it will only be a few short years untill we will have as good fishing as anywhere in this ection. The East Lake a half mile east of West Lake, will be stocked this seasan also if negotiations now on foot mature. An effort is also being made to secure a shipment of reclaimed fish for these lakes this fall.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Next Sunday is Memorial Sunday. Our service will be in keeping with the occasion. As a nation we are reminded of the splendid, unselfish work done and the sacrificial spirit shown by the soldiers of the seyeral wars. It be hooves us to recall this and to honor them. If they are still with us, or to keep their memory fresh if they paid the supreme sacrifice.

A most cordial invitation is extended to all ex-service men to spend the hour with us on Sunday morning. This includes members of the G. A. R., of the Spanish American war and also of the World War We shall be pleased to have them present in a body and in uniform.

Our evening service carries specjal interest with it. At seven thirty a special service for the young people in the lecture room o the church. This service will be in charge o the pastor's wife. This is a special for young people. Come!

At the regular evening service Mr. Griesemer will speak on things of interest that he heard and saw at the General Conference. We should have a full house.

If a man has failed in business and his wife takes boarders, he can tell how the country should be run.

Sofas are reported to be lasting about twice a long as they did before autos became popular.

'TWAS MAN WHO DID THE WALKING HERE

ALGONA— The story is told that a gay traveling man who makes Algona in a car, asked a young woman to take a joy ride with him. She accepted and they drove east on the paved road. Over near Sexton, he evidently got gay, insulted her and told her she might have to walk home. She suddenly dropped her handkerchief from the car and he stopped the car and alighted to get it. She slid over in the driver's seat and stepped on the gas and drove home and Mr. Traveling man had nothing else to do, but to walk in.

METHODISTS LIFT BAN ON DANCING, CARDS, RACES

Springfield General Conference Lifts Old Ban On Amusements

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 19.— The lifting of restrictions in the Methodist church law against amusements, excluding only "diversions which cannot be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus" were recommended by a standing committee of the Methodist Episcopal general conference here today.

The recommendation substituted the diversions specified for the following, now forbidden in section 280 of the Methodist discipline:

"Dancing, playing at games of chance, attending theatres, horse races, circues, dancing parties, or patronizing dancing schools, or taking such other amusements as are obviously of misleading or questionable moral tendency."

And, by the way, it will not be long until the mosquitoes are presenting their bills.

A man's troubles are many, but few are disheartening as the supper dishes.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTRIX

Notice is hereby given, That the undersigned has been duly appointed and qualified as Executrix of the Estate of August Schlawin late of Hancock County, State of Iowa, deceased. All persons indebted to the estate are requested to make immediate payment; and those having claims against the same will present them, duly authenticated, to the undersigned, for allowance.

Some Opinions of Love

The Married Man— Love is an illusion of youth, which only time, a wife and ten children will dispel.

The Bachelor— Love is a mythical emotion which was first foisted upon the world by a sap-headed novelist in need of "copy".

The Debutante—Love! Search me I can't tell, but it's nice.

The Old Maid—Love is the heavenly reward of all who withstand the temptations of this life. If it isn't I've backed a loser.

The Cynic—Love is only experienced by fools and babies. Neither are qualified to give opinions.

The Married Woman—Love is like expensive face cream. It wears off quickly—but cannot be renewed.

The Chorus Girl—Love is an ideal way of getting ready cash and a sure way through a breach of promise suit to a single happiness.

The Average Young Man—Love is the most expenive form of gambling with the odds all against the man.

All the World—Love is an emotion seeks and no one is satisfied with when found.

The Difference

Street Car Driver— Me and that off horse has been working for the company for twelve year now.

Passenger—That so? The company must think a great deal of you both.

Sreeet Car Driver—Wall, I dunno last week the two of us was taken sick and they got a doctor for the horse and docked me. Gid up there, now, Betsy!

If you must throw mud, why not be a ditch digger?

'Nerve isn't everything, but it seems to get it.

Balloon tires now have prospective buyers in the air.

Anybody is pretty well educated who knows that he will never know much.

SCHOOL TO CLOSE YEAR'S WORK WITH PICNIC FRIDAY

ONLY 3 STATES BEAT IOWA ON PER CAPITA WEALTH

Iowa is exceeded by only three states states when it comes to per capita valuations, according to the figures compiled by L. B. Jeffries, industrial secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Des Boines.

He is getting ready for the state manufacturing meeting to be held here May 21. His statistics are based on a urvey of business and industrial conditions in the state. In his compilation Jeffries says:

"As records per capita valuations Iowa i exceeded by only three states these being relatively sparsely settled sections where mining wealth enters in to enhance values rapidly. It is interesting to note that the states that show a higher per capita wealth have a combined actual wealth of only slightly over 40 per cent of that of Iowa alone.

The national average per capita wealth is $2,918; that of Iowa $4,274. The state's per capita wealth in 1912, lagt previous compilation, was $3,465. It should be borne in mind that increase in monetary values are to a large degree due to price increases and in so far does not represent a corresponding increase in quanity of wealth, but recent figures serve to confirm our claims to leadership."

121 ENTER CORN YIELD TEST

Iowa Is Divided Into Four Sections for Experiment—Test in Three Localities

All entries are now in for the 1924 corn yield test, conducted by the Iowa Corn and Small Grain Growers' association. Samples of corn sent in by competing farmers are entered in one of four sections of the state, northern, north central, south central and southern. Each sample is tested in three different localities in the same section and on each experimental plot it is planted in 10 different places, growing side by side with other entries, under identically the same soil, climatic and management conditions as all other entrie. In this way the winning variety in a section definitely proves its superior yielding qualities for that section.

The experimental plots are as follows.

Northern section: Sioux County farm, Orange City; Hancock county, Fred Hunsely farm; Britt; Chickasaw county, Emmett F. Drewelow farm, New Hampton.

North central section: Buena Vista county, J. N. Horlacher farm Storm Lake; Hardin county, E. B. Glenney farm, Union; Delaware county, C. A. Swindell farm, Masonville.

South Central section: Harrison county, P. W. Lewis farm, Woodbine Story County, Iowa State College agronomy farm, Ames; Jones county, State farm, Anamosa.

Southern section: Montgromery county, Rex J. Davidson farm, Red Oak; Warren county. I. U. Halderman farm, Hartford; Henry county, C. A. Strothman farm, Mt. Pleasant.

There are 121 entries in the 1924 test, with 22 entries in the northern section, 37 in the north central, 38 in thes outh central and 24 in the southern.

In addition to prizes offered by individual corn growers and farm bureaus, the banner trophy is awarded annually by R. A. Pearson, president of Iowa State College, to the grower entering the sample making the highest yield and the association presents a gold medal to the owner of the sample making the highest yield in each section.

A firey temper usually gets a cool reception.

"Laugh and the wordl laughs with you, " weep and it says. "That's too bad; well, I must be going."

PICNIC TO BE HELD ON THE SCHOOL GROUNDS

TWo Ball Games Scheduled on the Days Events

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES TONIGHT

Tomorrow is the big event of the school year, that is the annual picnic, for the community.

The picnic is to be held on the school grounds this year, owing to the convenience to the school house, said professor Neese.

If the committe has not seen you consult Pro. Neese at once.

The big events of the day, however are the baseball games.

In the morning at 10 00 O'clock the Shamrocks cross bats with the Thornton nine. This promises to be a real game.

In the afternoon at 2:00 o'clock Klemme will play Kanawha. This team took the county cup in baseball this year at the county tournament. Our team promises to make it interesting for them.

G. REMUS BARES BIG BOOZE GRAFT

Tells Brookhart Committee He Paid About $300,000 to Jess Smith.

Washington.—George Remus of Ohio, a liquor convict at the Atlanta federal penitentiary, told the Brookhart committee that he had paid between $250,000 and $300,000 to the late Jess W. Smith in order to keep out of prison. He said that he could not tell whether he had been double-crossed or not, because "the dead don't tell."

Remus was brought before the committee under guard. He told of how he had bought a string of distilleries in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky after the Volstead act was passed and had arranged by a "gentleman's agreement" with Jess Smith to get withdrawal permits.

He said that he had been allowed immunity from prosecution for a year and a half, while he distributed some 600,000 or 800,000 gallons of liquor under the pretense of selling it for medicinal purposes. The witness could not recall just how much money he had paid Smith, who at that time was Attorney General Daugherty's buffer. He estimated, however, that it was between $250,000 and $300,000. He said he never asked Smith whether he had split the money with Daugherty. When he was asked why he gave the money to Smith, Remus replied:

"To keep out of the penitentiary—to keep the boys out—to get Smith to use his influence with the attorney general. Even after I was convicted in Ohio Smith told me I would never see the penitentiary.

"Smith told me that the general—the attorney general—said there would be no putting away of Remus and his men."

Remus said that a plan had been evolved by which he was to receive clemency, if the case went to the Supreme court without gaining his release.

"Harry Daugherty was going to see that I got my pardon—Smith told me that," Remus declared. "Smith killed himself a year ago this month without making his promise good."

Thousand Trillion Marks Given to General Degoutte

Duesseldorf.—The municipality of Duesseldorf recently presented General Degoutte, the French commander in chief in the Ruhr, with one thousand trillion marks ($230) for the mess fund of the "pollus" who aided in the installation of the German sample fair in Duesseldorf. General Degoutte asked the municipality to devote the sum to the city's charities in the name of the French soldiers because the army regulations forbid the acceptance of such gifts.

Yanks Travel 878 Miles in Jump Across Pacific

Paramashiru Island, Kuriles.—The three United States army flyers arrived here Saturday morning at 11:35 o'clock from Attu island, the Aleutians, on their flight around the world. The jump from Attu island, westernmost tip of the Aleutian chain, to Paramashiru was the longest of the route laid out for the flyers and was considered one of the most hazardous. The distance, by way of Cape Kronatski, on the Kamchatka peninsula, is 878 miles.

Fewer Born, More Died in 1923, Census Shows

Washington.—Lower birth rates and higher death rates for last year, as compared with 1922, were recorded by the census bureau. Statistics made public here show that the highest birth rate, 34.8 per 1,000 population, was in cities of Wyoming and the lowest, 15.6 per 1,000, in rural districts of Montana. The highest death rate, 23.3 per 1,000, was in cities of Mississippi and the lowest, 6.5 per 1,000, in the rural districts of Idaho.

U. S. Business Is Good, Kahn Tells President

Washington.—The fundamental conditions of American business are sound; there is no accumulation of products, and immediate delivery orders are coming in steadily, though future orders are no so brisk. This message was brought to President Coolidge by Otto H. Kahn, member of the international banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Finns May End Dry Law as Nation Soaks Up Rum

Copenhagen.—Finland's rikstag discussed the abolition of prohibition, making the sale of alcoholics a state monopoly. The proposal for abolishing the measure states that in 1923 5,200,000 liters (roughly, 1,300,000 gallons) of alcohol were used in spite of prohibition.

Pat Harrison to Keynote

New York.—Senator Pat Harrison (Miss.) has been selected temporary chairman and "keynote speaker" of the Democratic national convention which meets here on June 24, it was learned here.

120 Dead in Quakes

Constantinople.—Further earthquake shocks were reported at Erzerum, Hassan Kale and Kars. Entire villages in the section were destroyed and about 120 persons lost their lives.

ELSA BRANDSTROM

Elsa Brandstrom, Swedish Red Cross worker known as the "Angel of Siberia" because of her relief work among war prisoners in Russia, has received the degree of "Doctor Honoris Causa" from the University of Koenigsberg on the occasion of the Kant memorial celebration there.

M. E. CHURCH IS TO DISAPPROVE WARS

Committee Report Urges Members Dodge Conflicts.

Springfield, Mass.—By a vote of 76 to 37, the church and state committee of the Methodist Episcopal General conference decided to recommend that the Methodist church as an organization should refuse to participate in any further wars.

The decision embraces not only wars of aggression, but wars of defense. If the recommendation is carried out, the church will disown war and merely will elevate its eyebrows a degree or two when a hostile navy steams up to the coast and trains its guns on New York or San Francisco.

An amendment was introduced to make an exemption in case of defensive wars, but it was tabled.

German Trade Slumping Fast Into Bankruptcy

Berlin. — Twenty-five bankruptcies reported Thursday are taken as indicating the critical condition of German industry, according to business men here. In the case of the Mansfield Mining company the government was compelled to intervene to prevent 32,000 workers from being thrown out of employment. Many firms, especially in the shoe and foodstuffs industries, are asking moratoria.

Senators Give Wheeler Clean Bill of Health

Washington.—Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana was exonerated by the special committee of the senate, which has been investigating his conduct, from any violation of the law relating to practice before the departments. The committee stood four to one in his favor. Senator Wheeler was indicted some weeks ago by a federal grand jury in Montana on the charge of having violated the law.

Indicted for Writing Threats to President

Pensacola, Fla.—The federal grand jury returned a true bill against Clarence Carlip for writing threatening letters to President Coolidge, in which he said, "This government has failed to function and it must be overthrown." His signature was written in a nicely drawn picture of a sinking submarine, grasped by a mighty hand. Frank A. Vanderlip and Secretary Denby were also threatened by him.

One-Armed Man Kills Robber Having One Leg

Wabash, Ind.—Warren Allison, sixty-four, a one-armed man, shot and killed James R. Turner, who has but one leg, when the latter attempted to rob him. Allison was taking the day's receipts from a cigar store where he is employed to his home when the attempted holdup occurred.

British Salvaging German Fleet to Build New Ships

London.—Salvaging operations were begun on Scapa Flow on the ships of the German war fleet which were scuttled by their own crews after the peace treaty. The hulls of the ships and materials will be used for the construction of other vessels. A huge floating dock, formerly Germany's property, was towed to Scapa Flow to begin operations.

Forest Fires Raging

Washington.—The forestry service announced that fires in northern Montana are reaching alarming proportions. Twenty separate fires, covering an acreage of 10,000 acres, are burning.

J. H. McClemont Dies

New York.—John Hall McClemont, sixty-two, a director in many corporations and formerly comptroller of the Edison General Electric company, died suddenly at his Brooklyn home.

COOLIDGE VETOES WORLD WAR BONUS

U. S. Principles Oppose and Country Can't Afford It, He Says.

Washington. — Asserting that no moral justification exists for the soldier bonus, that the country cannot afford it, that American principles are opposed to it, and that the veterans as a whole do not want it, President Coolidge sent the bill back to congress with his disapproval.

The President attacked the measure both on economic lines and on principle. President Harding, who vetoed the former bill, put his opposition practically entirely on the effect the measure would have on the treasury. Indeed he said he would approve a pension bill if it carried in it the taxes necessary to provide the revenue.

The President asserts that "we owe no bonus to the able-bodied veterans of the World war," that the "first duty of every citizen is to the nation," and that a gratuity for performing "this first duty is unjustified," from any standpoint.

"The gratitude of the nation to these veterans cannot be expressed in dollars and cents," Mr. Coolidge continues. "No way exists by which we can either equalize the burdens or give adequate financial reward to those who served the nation in both civil and military capacities in time of war. The respect and honor of their country will rightfully be theirs forevermore.

"But patriotism can neither be bought nor sold. It is not for hire and salary. It is not material, but spiritual. It is one of the finest and highest of human virtues. To attempt to pay money for it is to offer it an unworthy indignity which cheapens, debases and destroys it.

"Those who would really honor patriotism should strive to match it with an equal courage, with an equal fidelity to the welfare of their country and an equal faith in the cause of righteousness."

Rail Board Intervenes in New Wage Issue

Chicago.—The United States railroad labor board decided to intervene in the case of 60,000 locomotive engineers and firemen asking a 5½ per cent wage increase from 90 western railroads. This action was requested by the railroads, but opposed by the employees who intended to pursue their negotiations with individual railroads. In announcing its stand the board said: "The board has reason to believe that a dispute exists which is likely to substantially interrupt commerce."

Coolidge Act Rebuked by Chicago Judges

Chicago.—President Coolidge's pardon of Philip Grossman, a Chicago saloon keeper, who was sentenced to a year in the house of correction for contempt of court, was overruled by Judges Wilkerson and Carpenter of the Chicago federal court. In reading the decision, Judge Wilkerson held that the Chief Executive is without pardon authority in contempt cases.

Scheme to Nationalize British Mines Defeated

London.—The first out-and-out socialist legislation promoted by the British Labor government went down to defeat before a combined Liberal and Conservative onslaught. It was a bill calling for nationalization of mines and was rejected by a vote of 264 to 168.

Three Comets Shooting at the Earth in 1924

Washington.—Three comets are due to approach near the earth in 1924, the naval observatory announced. They are the Encke and Temple, which will appear in November, and the Tuttle, coming in December. All were small during their last visit within range of vision.

500 Libyan Rebels Die in Battle With Italians

Rome.—Successful military operations by Italian forces against unruly tribesmen in Libya are reported in an official communique. The Italian casualties were 23 dead and 124 wounded, all negro troops. The tribesmen lost 500 dead and a great number wounded.

Horace Dodge Estate Now Is Over $39,000,000

Detroit, Mich.—The estate of Horace Dodge, multi-millionaire motor manufacturer, who died December 10, 1920, showed a balance May 1 of $39,390,806, according to an accounting filed for probate by Howard B. Bloomer, executor.

Coolidge Opens Headquarters

Cleveland, Ohio.—National headquarters for the Coolidge campaign was opened here on the ninth floor of Hotel Cleveland. William H. Butler, the President's campaign manager, is in personal charge here.

Seaton to Head College

Misinformed in Grossman Case, Says the President

Washington.—President Coolidge authorized the statement that he had been misinformed as to important facts in the case of Philip Grossman of Chicago, whose sentence for contempt of court in a liquor case he commuted several months ago, an extension of Executive clemency which Federal Judges Carpenter and Wilkerson have held he had no authority to make.

Mormons in Washington to Erect New Church

Washington.—One of the most prominently situated plots of ground in the foreign legation quarter of fashionable upper Sixteenth street, one mile north of the White House, has been sold to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—better known as the Mormon church—as the site for the erection of a Mormon church edifice in the nation's capital.

Add 15 Naval Ships to Shunt Off Rum Runners

Washington. — Thirteen additional reserve destroyers, a mine sweeper and a seagoing tug were ordered turned over to the coast guard by Secretary Wilbur, to be added to the coast guard fleet for hunting rum runners. The group ordered transferred includes five 1,000-ton destroyers. The ships are tied up at Philadelphia navy yard.

Vienna Suicide Epidemic Due to Franc Gambling

Vienna.—Vienna has been seized by a suicide epidemic largely the result of stupendous losses sustained through speculation in French francs. One of the latest victims is Dr. Fritz von Hoffman Vaguhely, an industrial financier. Among the other victims are artists, bookkeepers, housewives and public officials.

One Girl Is for U. S. Against 124 Pacifists

Evanston, Ill.—The students and faculty of Garrett Biblical Institute of Northwestern university by a vote of 124 to 1 adopted a resolution approving the anti-war attitude recently taken by a committee of the Methodist general conference at Springfield, Mass. The only vote against the resolution was cast by a girl.

Federal Judge to Face Quiz

Washington.—A house committee, after completing a preliminary inquiry, recommended a congressional investigation of charges against Federal Judge Baker of West Virginia.

Woman Fined for Cutting Cat's Claws

Chester, Pa.—"That's the cat's meow," remarked a neighbor of Mrs. M. Schofield of No. 631 East Twelfth street. Later the neighbor discovered the "meow" was caused by the owner of a cat trimming the feline's claws. She notified Agent La Rose of the S. P. C. A. and he had a warrant issued for Mrs. Schofield's arrest. Magistrate Maitland fined her $10 and costs.

SPIRIT OF CAPT. KIDD HAUNTS OLD HOUSE

Pirates Said to Have Buried Treasure in Ohio Building

New Lexington, Ohio.—The spirit of Captain Kidd, pirate extraordinary, is said to haunt an old house on the Pleasantville pike, two miles east of Lancaster, Fairfield county.

The house is more than 125 years old and is still in good condition. The back windows of the upper floor of the house are boarded with sheet iron and have stout bars on the inside. Tradition has it that one of the principal members of Captain Kidd's band of pirates escaped with his loot, bought the old homestead and buried his treasure on the farm, or somewhere in the old house, fitting up the back room into a stronghold from which he could note the approach from all sides.

The same story goes on that he finally hanged himself to the bed in the room. Others say that another of the gang tracked him to his hiding place on a dark, stormy night, murdered him and escaped with the booty. The house has been famous as the "haunted" house for more than seventy-five years and tenant after tenant has moved in only to move out after staying a few months or days. Some say unearthly shrieks, screams, commands and the crash of glass can be heard emitting from the barred room on stormy nights.

Recently a tenant moved into the house and, in search for the hidden gold, he dug so deep around the foundation that it became necessary to run a brace through it to steady the walls. He did not find the treasure.

The farm has holes dug practically all over its hundreds of acres where treasure-seekers have made efforts to locate the gold.

The "pirate house" is built on what is known as the old "Baldwin" farm, and in earlier days was the stopping place for stockmen who drove cattle from Kentucky to all points in Ohio. The farm was inherited by Mrs. W. W. Kemper after her mother's death, and in 1909 the Kempers built a bungalow on the farm but only lived there a short time, although they say they were never bothered by ghosts. The farm is now being platted for building lots.

Wife Keeps Vow to Die When Spouse Is Buried

Alto, Tex.—Keeping a vow which she had made time and time again during her life that she would "not live without her husband, but that she would die when he was buried," Mrs. J. G. Hoover, well known resident of this community practically all her life, died at her home three hours after returning from her husband's funeral.

Mr. Hoover died recently and the funeral was held the following day. His wife, although heart broken, was in good health. She repeated time and again that she would not live without him, and upon returning to her home, she went to bed. She died three hours later, passing away content and peacefully. She was buried beside her husband whom she had known all her life.

Hoover owned considerable acreage near Alto. His son, Miller, is a prominent tomato grower of this county, and during 1922 was connected with the state department of agriculture.

Tame Duck Winner in Battle With Wild Hawk

Cullen, Ala.—A large hawk came out second best here in a battle with a duck and gave up its life in an effort to make a meal of the tame animal. The hawk was exceptionally large and had caught the duck on a pond. The domesticated animal made a great resistance, pecking the hawk in the eyes and blinding it. The duck then grasped the helpless hawk by the throat and held on tenaciously until Mrs. John Ramsey, owner of the duck ranch, killed the hawk with a club. The duck was not harmed.

New Skyscraper to Have Space for Tenants' Cars

Chicago.—One-quarter of the area of a new skyscraper at Chicago—to be the second largest in the city—will be laid out in parking space for tenants' automobiles. There will be room for 625 cars. The building is located in a business street on which the parking of motor cars has become a serious problem.

Dies Aiding Sick Wife

Owensboro, Ky.—While giving a dose of medicine to his sick wife, Calvin Lamar, seventy-four years old, of Owensboro, fell dead of heart disease. Mrs. Lamar is not expected to recover. She does not know that her husband is dead.

WHY DRUGGISTS RECOMMEND SWAMP-ROOT

For many years druggists have watched with much interest the remarkable record maintained by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine.

It is a physician's prescription.

Swamp-Root is a strengthening medicine. It helps the kidneys, liver and bladder do the work nature intended they should do.

Swamp-Root has stood the test of years. It is sold by all druggists on its merit and it should help you. No other kidney medicine has so many friends.

Be sure to get Swamp-Root and start treatment at once.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

His Fate

"What about your nephew, Elrod, who used to drink so heavily?" asked Beenaway, who had just returned to the old home town.

"Now, there's poor Elrod!" replied old Riley Rezzidew of Petunia. "Looked like he felt just nacherly compelled to try to drink all the liquor there was. But when he couldn't get any that was fit to drink, he—"

"Great Scott! He didn't die, did he?"

"Worse than that! He took to writing poetry, and is at it yet."—Kansas City Star.

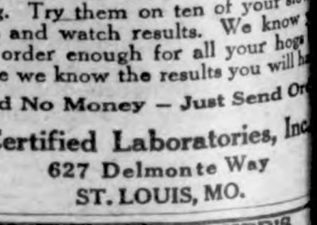
Kills Worms--Saves Hogs

You don't have to force it down his throat!

SANTI-WORM

A HOG BISCUIT

(CONTAINS GENUINE RUSSIAN SANTONIN)



One use of SANTI-WORM will convince any hog raiser that it is the most effective and most convenient remedy for ridding hogs of worms ever prepared. It does away entirely with the great difficulty of giving medicine to a hog in the ordinary way. It is in the form of a small biscuit which may merely be thrown to the hog as food, and it will be eaten ravenously because it is a preparation that hogs like.

Contains Genuine Russian Santonin

Every hog raiser knows that santonin is a recognized successful remedy to kill worms in hogs. It has the highest recommendation of state and government authorities. The only difficulty in its use up to this time has been the trouble of getting a hog to take it. The process has been to drench a hog and use a jaw spreader and ball gun. That is a job for two men, besides a lot of trouble and danger to the hog.

Just Like Feeding Hogs

To give santonin to a hog in the form of SANTI-WORM BISCUITS is just like tossing the hog something to eat. He eats it because he likes it. Then the medicine does its work—a complete job within twenty-four to forty-eight hours.

Ten For $1.25 C. O. D.

You need send no money to try SANTI-WORM BISCUITS with your hogs. Just send order for a package of ten biscuits. It will be delivered by parcel post, C. O. D. Satisfaction is guaranteed, otherwise the biscuits cost you nothing. Try them on ten of your slowest hogs and watch results. We know you will order enough for all your hogs because we know the results you will have.

WHO'S WHO—and WHEREFORE

ew Head of League of Women Voters

Here is an up-to-date portrait of Miss Belle Sherwin of Cleveland, Ohio, the new president of the National League of Women Voters, who succeeds Mrs. Maud Wood Park. President Sherwin has been first vice president. The other officers are: Miss Julia Lathrop of Illinois, first vice president; Mrs. Minnie Fisher Cunningham of Texas, second vice president; Miss Ruth Morgan of New York, third vice president; Miss Elizabeth Hauser of Ohio, secretary, and Miss Katherine Ludington of New York, treasurer.

The regional directors elected were Mrs. James A. Cheesman of Rhode Island, First district; Miss Gertrude Ely of Pennsylvania, Second district; Miss Adele Clark of Virginia, Third district; Mrs. William G. Hibbard of Illinois, Fourth district; Miss Marguerite Wells of Minnesota, Fifth district, and Mrs. Walter A. ...ley of Nevada, Seventh district. No report was made on the Sixth district, owing to the uncertainty of plans of Mrs. Gerhard Dietrich, present director.

The league is the reorganized National Woman's Suffrage association and ...ld not be confounded with the Woman's National party, from which it ...rs on many questions. The most immediate activity of the league is a ...paign for getting out the vote.

Dull Man Good Citizen

I am often impressed with the great numbers of dull people who get along well. The dullest man I know is a good citizen, a good husband and father, and a useful man. He isn't able to write, or make a speech, but he is able to behave, and work, and save, and be honest and polite; and these are the essentials. Hundreds of brighter men laugh at him, none of whom get along as well as he does. It is easy to behave, and work, and be honest, and make a living, however hard it may be to paint a great picture, write a great book, or become great in statesmanship.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Described.

The inhabitants of a sagebrush town were seated on a cracker box exchanging desultory conversation.

"You know them hot cakes what the feller flips in the window of the Forlorn Hope restaurant?"

"Yes, I know 'em."

"Ever try 'em?"

"Yes, I've tried 'em."

"What do you think of 'em?"

The citizen thus appealed to gazed reflectively toward the foothills for some minutes and then rendered judgment.

"That feller's not a cook; he's a juggler."—Judge.

WALLACE GIVES CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING RULES

Secretary of Agriculture Defines Ten Principles Essential to Success for Bank Association.

Ten principles requisite for the success of co-operative marketing plans have been prepared by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace for the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association which has just published a nation-wide compilation of views, experiences and discussions regarding the movement. Mr. Wallace's principles are:

1. A co-operative organization must be controlled by its members, not as shareholders or investors, but as producers employing the facilities of the organization.

2. A co-operative association is not operated to make a profit on invested capital above the usual rate of interest, but to profitably market the products of its members at the lowest possible cost.

3. A co-operative association should be organized around a single commodity, or a group of commodities for which the same marketing machinery, methods and channels are employed.

4. The organization should have sufficient volume of business to enable it to operate efficiently and economically, and should control this business through definite legal contracts with its members.

5. The organization must perform definite functions. The organization of a co-operative marketing association is not an end in itself.

6. The members must understand the purposes of the organization and be kept fully informed regarding its activities and problems.

7. A co-operative association should have expert management. The duties of the manager of a co-operative association are more difficult than those of the manager of a commercial enterprise of equal size. The manager must not only conduct the business of the organization efficiently but he must recognize the close, personal interest of every member in that business, and be able to maintain harmonious contacts with each individual.

8. Proper accounting is essential. Accounting is one phase of management but is so important in co-operative marketing that it is given special mention. The management cannot be properly advised regarding the status of the organization, nor properly inform the members, without accurate records.

9. Sound financial policies are also a part of management, but are of sufficient importance to be placed under a separate heading. One essential is that a co-operative association should build up adequate reserves in order that it may have the financial strength necessary to weather periods of stress.

10. A co-operative organization should be self-perpetuating. It should have a definite legal status, and once it is organized it should be so conducted that it would never be necessary to call upon outside agencies to re-establish the organization or shape its policies.

WHAT BANKERS THINK OF THE LABOR BANKS

With the advent of the labor bank three years ago, there was wide spread speculation as to what labor turning capitalist would mean.

By bold calculations the most imaginative pictured a coup d'etat in finance wrought by the mobilization of labor's savings and strategic investments in the key industries. Prophecies of disaster came from the quarters of the other extremists.

Taking the middle ground was the great group of conservative bankers who saw the bank as a link—rather than a wedge—between capital and labor. It was their opinion that the experience gained in the management of the labor banks would bring a real understanding of the business of handling money and investments and develop a knowledge of the problems of capital. By making capitalists out of the workers, directing the investment of their funds into safe securities instead of wild-cat stocks and by promoting thrift, they saw good flowing from the enterprise. With the mystery taken out of banking the bubble of fabulous earnings pricked, and the right of an individual to his accumulated savings firmly established, it was patent that the radicals would be disarmed of their thunder against the much-assailed capitalistic system. On the other hand, it was conceded that, with the rise of labor as a factor in finance, opportunities for the abuse of the worker by the bludgeon of cruel credit control would be more restricted.

In their appraisal of the movement, the events of the past two years have largely justified the view of the conservatives, although the time is still too short to permit a mature judgment. It is quite clear, however, that labor has not revolutionized banking, the control of credit has not been diverted from its former channels.—American Bankers Ass'n Journal.

ALL LAY IN DRESSING HABIT

Mystery That for a Long Time Disturbed Wijjit Finally Solved Purely by Accident.

It took Wijjit several months to figure out just why he was late at the office some mornings and punctual other mornings. He could see no apparent reason for it. He was the man in a thousand who didn't try any monkey business with his alarm clock. He ate a routine breakfast at the same table in the same restaurant every morning.

He shaved every morning, and by long practice had reduced the strokes to the minimum.

But the fact remained, for all his automatic behavior. It might be anywhere between 9 and 9:10 when he reached the office.

Then Wijjit discovered, more or less by accident, the secret of it all, deep in his subconscious mind. In all came to him one morning when he started to put his shoes on. He had been out late the night before and had neglected to put his shoes neatly side by side after taking them off. Instead he had let them lie, the right one on the left. He started to put the right shoe on, and even as he was putting his toe in the shoe he felt a sudden difficulty. He looked again. His head was not exactly as clear as a bell, but it was the right shoe. What was the cause of the instinctive reluctance of his right foot?

Wijjit realized that he had formed the habit of putting the left shoe on first, that ever since he had been putting on his own shoes he had been doing the same thing without once being aware of it. It was only when he allowed something to interfere with this established habit that he even dimly realized that there was a habit at all.

He began to look at his clothes more closely. He watched himself as he dressed and caught himself going instinctively for the left sleeve of his shirt first, for the left stocking first, for the left sleeve of his overcoat first.

The devil of it is now that even though Wijjit has discovered how 99 per cent of people save time for themselves in dressing by habit, he has made it impossible for himself to save time in the future by becoming self-conscious about it. He tries to console himself for the thought of future tardiness at the office by the realization that he has hit on a great scientific truth. But as far as his business career is concerned he sometimes wishes that he had never started this self-analysis.

New York in First Place.

Scattered over the face of the earth is a total population of 1,804,187,631, only 7 per cent of which is in cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants, according to statistics compiled in Berlin, Germany, and based largely on 1922 census reports. Only 30 of the 70 nations listed have cities of or more than the 100,000 class, which is the lowest counted within the classification of "large cities."

Approximately 40,000,000 of the globe's inhabitants live in the 18 centers having a million residents or more each. About 90,000,000 live in the smaller large cities, of which there are only 393 in the whole world. New York city is given as the largest city in the world, with a population of 5,620,048. London is second with 4,483,249, and Berlin is third with 3,803,770.

Europe leads the continents in point of population. It has six cities in the million class, London, Berlin, Paris, Glasgow, Vienna, and Moscow.

It is considered surprising that Asia has more large cities than North America. Six of the 92 Asiatic cities house more than 1,000,000 persons each. These are Shanghai, Hankow, Calcutta, Bombay, Tokyo, and Osaka.

North America follows Asia with four cities, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Mexico City, in the million class.

Twenty-four large cities are located in South America, Brazil having 13. Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro are the only million-resident centers.

Has Gift of Silence.

The moss-grown statement about women having the last word and the frequent allusions to their love of conversation come in for serious contradiction when the record of Miss Reba Hurn is considered. This young woman was elected from the Seattle district to the Washington state senate, and, with the session over, she has adhered rigidly to her resolution not to deliver a single speech during her first term in that body.

She has, however, been extremely busy on several committees and has earned the reputation of being one of the most useful legislators in her state. So splendid an impression did she make on her associates that at the close of the session they presented her with a platinum and diamond pin, which seems to indicate that in Washington at least silence is something else besides golden.

In Seattle Miss Hurn has the reputation of being a capable and successful lawyer.—New York Herald.

Bird's Mistake.

Keen as is the sight of birds, it is sometimes at fault. A swan flying over a market gardener's grounds near Norwich, England, saw, as he thought, some beautiful green river plants under a nice shallow sheet of water, and swooped joyfully down to examine so inviting a place.

His astonishment was supreme when, instead of splashing into a cooling pond, he crashed through five panes of greenhouse glass and settled on some cucumber plants underneath. He resumed his flight more frightened than hurt.

Women Want Harem Back.

According to recent research the women of Turkey are not all giving three cheers for their recently acquired independence. Most of the old-timers are still strong for the harem. Now a lot of them have to get out and hustle for their meals. In the old days all they had to do was to sit on upholstered cushions in a nice warm harem and munch chocolate creams. They could push the buzzer for coffee whenever they felt like it and the hours were spent in gossip and embroidery.

To go forth into a rough world and put in twelve hours a day in some factory or shop for the joy of being independent does not appeal to all of them. They are sighing for the good old days when Mustapha Phelim provided a nosebag for a whole flock of houris and odalisks. It seems to be mighty hard to please all the women in the world.—Los Angeles Times.

Vezin's Slight Mistake.

Charles Vezin said recently: "Four years ago I chucked the double life of commerce and art for the single blessedness of painting. While exploring rural New England for a sketching ground I injured my shoulder and called in the professional services of a country practitioner. He was a gentleman of culture and high professional attainments. I left that section, asking the good doctor to send me his bill. He did not do so until a year and a half later, when I received, when in a different state, his bill for professional services—$150. I looked at it aghast and thought: 'Well, that is going some. A hundred and fifty dollars for three visits to the office of a country practitioner.' And I said to myself: 'You confounded medical profiteer, I'd like to see you get it!' and was about to write him what our English friends call a 'snaky' letter. But on thinking it over I decided to pretend to think that he meant to write fifteen instead of a hundred and fifty, and mailed a check for fifteen dollars with his bill. Three days later I opened a letter from him returning my check. And I murmured: 'So you are going to insist on payment. Well, you can sue me.' On reading his letter I found these words: 'Dear Mr. Vezin—I herewith return your check. You made a mistake. My bill is one dollar and fifty cents.'"—San Francisco Argonaut.

When Anarchist Welcomed King.

Ivan Gorgonovitch, the man whose anarchistic writings and utterances had stirred up millons of persons against royalty and the divine right theory and who was credited with having sown the first seeds of the Russion revolution, met the king face to face and smiled a cheery though surprised welcome. Gradually the smile broadened into a grin and finally he laughed outright.

Ivan Gorgonovitch's companions looked on with mixed emotions showing on their fierce countenances. Two of them frowned their disapproval; one sneered incredulously and a fourth expressed amusement in a blasphemous utterance. But Ivan Gorgonovitch, the terrible anarchist, pail no heed to them. His whole attention was given to the king. There was adoration in his eyes.

Ivan Gorgonovitch had just filled a royal flush and there were eighty-five American dollars in the pot.—L. B. Birdsall in Judge.

Husbands and Husbandry.

The office boy, whose wages went either for pie or for pictureque attire for his evening parade along Illinois street, was always facing financial problems. The Saturday pay envelope had come and gone, and late Saturday, because certain creditors had to be satisfied, he was attempting to borrow a dime with which to buy his afternoon allowance of pie. The office force, however, was unresponsive, allied against him, in fact, having learned from experience the difficulty attending the collection of reparations.

"Why don't you stop borrowing money?" one of the men in the office inquired. "Don't you know that 'repeated borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry?'"

"That don't mean nothin' to me," he replied. "I'm not married."—Indianapolis News.

Tularaemia Newly Discovered Disease

Usually Occurs During the Harvesting Season.

Washington, D. C.—Every summer certain agricultural sections of the West are visited by a strange epidemic of an extremely serious nature. Occurring usually just in the midst of the harvesting season, it greatly hampers the handling and marketing of crops. Men are stricken down while at work in the field and women while at work in the kitchen, one moment the victim appearing well and vigorous and virtually the next moment overcome with dizziness and fever. While fatalities are not common, even the lightest attack is likely to incapacitate the victim for work for two months or more.

This disease has now been studied thoroughly and given the name of tularaemia by experts of the United States hygienic laboratory in Washington. The organism causing it has been isolated by Dr. Edward Francis and the various agencies capable of transmitting the infection have been completely investigated in a series of experiments extending over a period of several years.

During this time all six men engaged in the work of experimentation developed the disease themselves, thus heroically adding to the knowledge of the subject. Doctor Francis had it twice, first in one form and then another—an unintentional but gamely accepted sacrifice which proved of great value as a practical demonstration.

Investigation of the malady first began in the summer of 1919, when, an epidemic occurring in the vicinity of Delta, Utah, the state health commissioner requested the surgeon general of the United States public health service to detail an officer to study the new disease. At this time nothing definite was known concerning the affliction, although the farmers shrewdly guessed that it was closely connected with a prevailing epidemic among jack rabbits. They had also already come to the conclusion that it was caused by the bite of the bloodsucking fly.

The medical evidence strongly supported the conclusions of the farmers, as is shown by the following typical case: W. E. C., a fifty-year-old farmer residing five miles west of Holden, Utah, was mowing alfalfa when he noticed a stinging and burning sensation above his left ear, which was immediately followed by headache, chill and marked weakness. He was compelled to stop work and go to bed.

He could not recall whether or not he had been bitten, but the doctor's examination showed a small crust in the hair of the left temple one inch above and two inches in front of the left ear, about the diameter of a matchstick. The tissues were swollen and tender and the lymph glands behind the ear and at the angle of the jaw were enlarged and very tender.

Later, according to the doctor's report, it became necessary to incise the skin in front of the infected ear to evacuate the accumulated pus. Meanwhile the bite on the man's temple under the hair had formed into an ulcer three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The patient recovered after an illness of about three months.

Doctor Francis, who was the first to be detailed by the surgeon general for the investigation, succeeded in isolating the organism causing the disease from the peripheral blood of two human cases. The next task was to prove definitely the contentions of the farmers that the malady was the same as that suffered by the jack rabbits. Hence a survey of jack rabbits for evidence of tularaemia was conducted through a stretch of irrigated farming country 60 miles in length.

A total of 556 jack rabbits were shot and immediately dissected, an especially thorough examination being made of their lymph glands, spleen and liver. When the spleen and liver were considered suspicious, specimens were taken to the laboratory and placed in contact with healthy guinea pigs, which resulted in the infection of and death of several guinea pigs. Of 23 jack rabbits suspected of being infected, 17 were definitely proved guilty. One ground squirrel, shot along with the jack rabbits, also proved to be harboring the infection.

Next it became necessary to trace the activities of the blood-sucking fly—scientifically known as chrysops discallis—to determine whether or not it was capable of spreading the disease. By that time Doctor Francis had received reinforcements, five other physicians being detailed to the investigation. They were unable to find any data showing that the blood-sucking fly bites jack rabbits, but it is assumed that they did, especially if the jack rabbits were in a sick or dying condition and thus oblivious to biting flies.

Experiment With Guinea Pigs.

The laboratory experiment was made with guinea pigs, the fly being permitted to bite first an infected guinea pig and then a healthy guinea pig. Each fly under experiment was confined singly and at all times within a lantern globe, the ends of which were covered with cloth gauze of coarse mesh. Biting was permitted by applying the end of the globe to the animal's skin, the fly biting through the meshes of the gauze. By this method it was proved that flies were especially effective in spreading tularaemia infection.

Yet this did not entirely settle the question. There remained cases on record in which the fly's guilt was greatly to be doubted. Doctor Francis himself had developed the disease, during his early experiments when no blood-sucking flies were about. But he had been exposed to the infection through contact with the laboratory animals and had on two occasions taken blood and pus specimens from human cases which terminated fatally.

On the thirtieth day of this investigation he suddenly became ill in the late afternoon, feeling tired and weak and having a considerable elevation of temperature. With the exception that his temperature nearly reached normal on the third and fourth days, at which time he felt slightly improved, his fever continued until the twenty-fourth day. During the second week of his illness he packed up his laboratory equipment and animals and brought them back to Washington, where he attempted to go on with his work, but ended in a hospital. He was seriously ill for two months and did not fully regain his strength for another six or eight weeks.

Further experiments with laboratory animals showed that tularaemia was not only communicable by contact with the infected persons or animals, but that there were other insects that carried the disease besides the bloodsucking fly. Most notable among these is the common bedbug—cimex lectularius—which gave great evidence of its ability in experiments with mice.

The bedbugs used in the experiments were collected from cracks in the wooden cages in which the laboratory stock of guinea pigs and white mice bred and confined in test tubes. The mouth of the tube was covered with fine gauze, through which cimex lectularius was able to thrust his sharp proboscis, already infected with tularaemia bacteria, into the body of a healthy mouse. It was successful in transmitting the disease in nearly every case, even when the process was reversed and some of the white mice were permitted to eat their bedbug tormentors.

In fact, the bedbug is definitely placed as one of the most dangerous of carriers, since it is capable of retaining the infection for months at a time.

Other insects found capable of spreading the disease are rabbit lice, mouse lice, squirrel fleas and stable flies. Of these only the last two bite human beings, but rabbit lice are probably the most dangerous, because they are doubtless responsible for the spread of tularaemia infection among the rabbits.

OPPOSE COMMUNISTS

"I AM not an alarmist," said Dr. Hubert N. Rowell, deputy grand exalted ruler of the B. P. O. Elks, in addressing members of the Berkeley (Cal.) post of the American Legion. "I have not come here to paint with red the azure skies. I am a loyal supporter of constituted government, and I am here to tell you of a need for a determined fight against communists and allied forces."

He said that there are 15 recognized leaders of radicals in the United States. Under the direction of these crafty men are 1,500 sectional leaders, and beneath them are the followers of the movement. "The United States is a clearing house for radicalism with every ship bringing more radicals and more of their destructive literature," he said.

"At present these radicals are raising a fund of $2,000,000 in California, Nevada and Oregon for the purpose of carrying on their work of disrupting government," he declared. In closing, the speaker called upon the men of the Legion to again take up defense of their country against the menacing forces of I. W. W. radicals and communists."

FAILED TO CONFORM WITH BODY'S POLICY

Daylight Post, 229, Department of California, the American Legion, was suspended not because of its expressed views about adjusted compensation, but because its membership did not conform to the legally adopted policies of the national and department organizations. This is the announcement made by Morgan Keaton, adjutant of the California department, who has written posts in the principal cities of the country explaining the stand of the officials.

The post went on record as unfavorable to passage of the adjusted compensation measure, and Department Commander James F. Collins promptly suspended the post and called for surrender of its charter until the department had time to act. The executive committee sanctioned this act of the commander.

Post officials have since announced that they will take their fight for reinstatement to the national organization, but the matter must first be considered by the department convention.

Keaton's letter to other posts of the organization, says:

"This suspension should not be confused as any attempt on the part of the State department to repress or coerce Daylight post, or is the question or adjusted compensation involved; nor is the question of free speech involved; but is simply to be clearly understood to mean that Daylight post or any other post must agree to conform with the legally adopted policies of the American Legion or withdraw therefrom. A man or post cannot serve two masters or support two opposite causes. If Daylight post wishes to oppose adjusted compensation it has that right, and its method in doing so is to withdraw and join those who are opposed to it, because the Legion favors the adjusted compensation as a result of deliberations in five national conventions, and there every unit belonging to the Legion must of necessity adopt the same policy."

HOUSEWORK NOT DRUDGERY

Back Don't Bother Me Now

Lincoln, Nebraska. — "My back would bother me so and when I had to do any heavy lifting it made me sick to my stomach with the pains in my back. I have my housework to do and four babies to take care of so when I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I took it and I feel better. My back don't bother me and I can eat more and work. I do all my housework and washing for six in the family. I will tell other women to take the Vegetable Compound and you may publish my letter."—Mrs. CHARLES F. DOLEZAL, 1201 Garber Ave., Lincoln, Nebraska.

Felt Better At Once

Volga City, Iowa.—"I will tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was all run down and could hardly be on my feet. I was so cold I could not keep warm. I had numb feelings and then heat flashes would pass over my body. I had severe pains in my sides and was very nervous. I saw your advertisement in the newspapers so I thought I would try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of the Vegetable Compound and I began to feel better as soon as I started taking it. I have taken it off and on for three years now. I keep house and do all my work for my husband and two little boys and make my garden. I feel fine and I tell others what the medicine has done for me. I think it is the best medicine in the world for women."—Mrs. THOMAS GRINDLE, Volga City, Iowa.

Can Do Any Kind of Work

Fouke, Arkansas.—"I had the 'Flu' and after that I had a pain in my side and was not able to do my work I was so weak. I found an advertisement in a paper and it told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would do, and I took it. Now I can do any kind of work I want to. I think every family ought to keep it in the house all the time and I intend to do so."—Mrs. DORA PHILYAW, R.R. No. 2, Fouke, Arkansas.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

This shows that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This goes to prove that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—can and does do good work. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Flirty Flapper Autoists Waste Time on This Cop

New York.—Flirty flapper motorists who threw admiring glances at a handsome traffic officer at Lexington avenue and Forty-second street were chagrined to learn that their wiles had been wasted on one of their own sex.

For the traffic officer was Miss Mary Allen, commandant of London's 20 policewomen, who arrived here recently to study American police methods.

She wanted first-hand information on traffic regulation, so she was permitted to replace the regular officer. High boots, riding breeches and a dark blue uniform coat reaching to knees, gauntlets and a trim gold-braided cap made her a handsome "copper."

Miss Allen doesn't own a skirt, she declared later. Her hair is cut short at the back and over the ears—not bobbed. They don't permit it on the London force, she explained.

Veterans Are Urged to Beware of Sharpers

The American Legion is warning all veterans against paying any fees to attorneys who offer to secure a certificate issued in lieu of lost discharge. In a recent letter from Watson B. Miller, chairman of the Legion's national rehabilitation committee, instances were mentioned where unscrupulous attorneys were seeking fees for this work, when the government furnishes the certificates without charge.

Mr. Miller advises all veterans to either apply direct to the adjutant general of the army or to write the service bureau of the American Legion, 417 Bond building, Washington, who will handle the case without charge.

Bridgeton (N. J.) Post to Aid New Hospital

Shoemaker post of the American Legion in Bridgeton, N. J., received a bequest of $4,000 from the father of the man for whom the post was named, with the request that it be used for erecting a memorial building.

The Legionnaires, impressed with the possibilities for service to the community offered by erection of a new hospital in Bridgeton, authorized the turning over of this bequest to the building fund for the institution. The generosity of the Legionnaires will be marked by a special room dedicated to the men who gave their lives during the World war.

BOYS SAVED FROM HUNGRY BEARS BY BIG REINDEER

Eskimo Herders Take Refuge Among Animals and Attackers Fear to Follow.

Anchorage, Alaska.—Evidence of reciprocal protection between men and animals came to light recently at Cantwell, where big reindeer herds are ranging under the supervision of the United States biological survey and Eskimo herders.

Several Eskimo boys had been standing guard over a herd to ward off wolves and other predatory animals. The boys were sitting idly while the herd grazed when a monster brown bear, followed closely by her yearling cub, rushed out of the woods.

The boys saw no refuge and to outrun the bears was impossible. Sensing the only means of escape, they headed straight for the herd, with the mother bear in close pursuit.

The reindeer, which ordinarily would have taken the running approach of the Eskimos as a signal to move forward, scented the danger. Instead of fleeing, they turned, as if by some primitive command, and the big bucks rushed forward to meet the boys and the bears.

At the same instant the does called their fawns to their sides and huddled together. The Eskimos shouldered their way into the middle of the herd, watching the elemental maneuvers of bear and reindeer.

The monarchs of the herd stood with antlers pointed forward and the bears swerved, milling up and down as if looking for an opening. The bucks turned with the motions of the bears, their sharp antlers forming a barrier of bayonets.

Finally, realizing it was impossible to snatch a fawn or an Eskimo, the great bear and her cub retreated. The herd relaxed, and the Eskimo boys emerged to resume their vigil.

—14—

"An' did y'u think t' take the ol' man by su'prise? Did y'u, lad?"

He opened his mouth in another upheaval of silent merriment, his still sinewy shoulders heaving up and down and jostling his iron-gray locks about his ears.

"Jist bracin' y'urself f'r the rush, werdn't y'u?"

"I—I—thought y'u was b'hind the log."

The old ranger's eyes danced and his mouth spread wide.

"I wus."

"Yes—but how?—w'y I had m' eyes on that log every second."

"Egzac'ly"—the sinewy shoulders heaved up and down again—"calc'lated y'u would. 'Stid o' keepin' y'ur eye on the log, y'u ort 'a' kep' it on the pass to the nighest cover—ol' Injin trick—show y'u some time."

The young man glanced at the log, noted the space of practically open ground that must have been crossed in order to reach the nearest cover, and turned to his aged companion in frank admiration.

"An' Did Y'u Think t' Take the Ol' Man by Su'prise? Did Y'u, Lad?"

"Wonder if I ever will be as handy as you?"

"'Tain't likely—y'ur life don't depend on it, like mine use'n to sixty years ago. Y'u're far handier a'ready than any other man in the woods. But woodcraft will never ag'in be what it once't wus. People even kinda look down on it, now'days. They're s' wrapped up in book l'arnin' an' lan' grabbin' an' money graspin' that they think it's a kind of disgrace—some of 'em—t' even l'arn t' shoot. No, no, woodcraft will never ag'in be what it once't wus—never ag'in."

A faint suspicion of bitterness, of homesickness for scenes long gone—for the stimulating uncertainties of the perilous trail—quavered in the old man's tones. He stooped, plucked off a tender shoot from a sassafras sprout and stood chewing it meditatively.

"How come y'u left y'ur trail s' open this morning?" asked Jack. "I picked it up where y'u jumped the road."

The question seemed to recall the old man's straying thoughts.

"Yes, an' y'u ort' 'a' picked it up long b'fore. Y'u crossed it twice't b'fore ever y'u come down the bluffs—once't about a hundred yards west o' the pheasant's nest, an' ag'in a leetle no'th of whar y'u stood lookin' down at Hen Spencer's ol' cabin. Y'u didn't hardly act like y'urse'f this mornin'—y'u acted kinda keerless an' fur away, like—so I left the trail open a leetle thar at the road an' at the crick."

The young man turned away and stood gazing out across the brush-tangled hollow.

"And me thinkin' t' take by su'prise the famous ranger that found the trail of the great Tecumseh, when it was hid from the best of the runners," he said warmly—"and you was jist playin' with me."

At reference to the far-famed achievement of his younger days, the shoulders of the old hunter seemed to grow a little more erect, while his dark eyes glowed with a faint suggestion of the fire that in his prime had made them the hardest pair of eyes on the border to pass unseen.

"Well, not jist playin', nuther." He chewed hard on the sassafras sprout a moment. "You must 'a' purt nigh run into that gal a leetle bit ago?"

A statement with the force of a question—the young man started, but hid the movement by fumbling with his sore shoulder. The terrified face of the mountain girl freshened in his mind, with the dread of discovery in her startled eyes. He hitched the blouse loose from his shoulder and glanced out across the hollow without meeting his old friend's look.

"What gal?"

The old man jerked a hand toward the opposite bluff.

"Aw, I jist glimpsed one a-peakin' along through the brush yonder an' 'lowed mebbe y'u might 'a' run acrosst 'er."

He stood chewing the sassafras shoot and looking away down the hollow in the direction of Black rock. The young man breathed easier—the girl's secret was safe. The hawklike eyes had missed the chance meeting—seemingly the one thing they had missed, as his next words half startlingly disclosed.

"What did y'u make o' them tracks y'u foller'd yisterd'y—f'om them bushes on the edge o' the cliff back o' y'ur cabin an' past the ol' log? I see'd y'u'd be'n foller'n' 'em as I crossed the trail m'se'f this mornin'."

The young man bent an amazed look upon his aged friend, lost in wonder at his marvelous woodcraft.

"I got a look at the man that made 'em," was his slow answer, "while he laid b'hind that log a-watchin' me straighten up the fence. I don't think he knows I saw 'im, but I did—it was the feller that stirred up all that rumpus at the schoolhouse night b'fore last."

The old man threw away his sassafras shoot; an eager seriousness crossed his face.

"That wus Black Bogus."

The younger man stared.

"No!"

"Hit were."

The woodsman fell suddenly thoughtful; glanced away across the hollow toward where the double trail led through the woods. The old man studied him curiously. It may be each was thinking the same thought—that strange resemblance that had so puzzled them both—but neither let fall any inkling of it to the other.

"Al knows 'im," Uncle Nick went on after a moment. "He's a friend of Loge Belden's—an' he thinks mebbe he's harborin' up thar with 'im."

He jerked his thumb up the hollow toward where a section of the warped roof of Loge Belden's squalid cabin barely protruded above the bushes; seemed to weigh his next words before letting them fall.

"Anyhow, I thought I'd p'int m' nose up the crick an' kinda throw an eye on Loge's cabin t' see if 'e is."

"An' if 'e is—?" the other questioned, having caught the curious look.

The caution of a lifetime in the woods prompted the old hunter to look guardedly in every direction before answering.

"Don't let on y'u know it"—he came a step nearer—"but Al says Belden b'longs t' the same gang o' cutthroats down Vincennes way that Black Bogus does, an' he thinks more 'n likely they're plottin' t' crack ol' Sime Colin's safe."

The hardness that had come at the mountain girl's warning crept again into the woodsman's eyes, but he made no comment.

"I 'low y'u nee'n' t' be told they ain't neither one got much time f'r you, after what happened at the post office an' at the schoolhouse—an' they're the kind that won't stay licked, an' the kind that strikes in the dark."

Jack picked up the heavy shotgun from where he had laid it aside when about to rush upon his old friend, thoughtfully blew a dead grass blade out from between the hammer and the lock, but offered no word. The old man again bent his furtive look upon him and went on.

"Black Bogus—they's fifty sheriffs a-lookin' f'r him, an' a standin' reward of five thousan' dollars, dead 'r alive—"

The young man flinched, looked keenly at the other.

"Uncle Nick—y'u wouldn't—!"

"No, I wouldn't," the old man replied with instant readiness to the half-implied imputation. "I've shot men in my time. I never sold one."

He stepped around the great sugar maple, motioned for the other to follow, and stole away along the brow of the bluff, quite obviously in serious earnest.

The young woodsman fell into the trail. Steeped in the caution that came from much living alone, he said nothing, but it was the one thing that had brought him to the woods that morning—to have a look at Loge Belden's cabin.

Reaching a point, at length, a short distance below where the suspected cabin squatted, they crept down the bed of a dry wash-out and through some thickets of brier and hazel until they lay within less than a hundred yards of its crude and mud daubed walls.

There seemed to be no one about except the comely mountain girl, who came to the open door a time or two to look out, as if she expected some one—some one that she would rather not see, to judge by the troubled expression of her face—a face whose tragic sadness had so impressed the woodsman at that strained and hurried interview.

It was late in the forenoon when, above them on the hillside, they heard the swish of a brush swinging back into place after having been dragged aside. Uncle Nick held up a cautious finger, and they crouched lower in the cover.

There came the snap of a dry stick; a man emerged from the swaying bushes and stole toward the back door of the cabin, passing within a dozen steps of where they lay. There could be no mistaking the powerful form and truculent face with its stubble of beard—it was Black Bogus.

CHAPTER XII

Ashes of the Past.

It was little enough that the red-roofed cottage saw of the young preacher—breakfast by candle light; supper the same; an hour of twilight with Texie on the rustic seat at Whispering spring. The rest of the day he spent in the study at the parsonage, where, at the insistence of the venerable widow, he lunched. He proved to be a very studious man. It was a rare thing indeed to see him in daylight when his peering eyes were not poring over a book, with another usually tucked under his arm.

Jack Warhope had not yet climbed the bluffs to the woods on the morning of that eventful day that flared forth the startled face of the mountain girl with her hurried warning; its dawn still clung to cliff and scar, and many candles were still alight in the village, when the preacher left the parlor bedroom and came out on the porch.

Texie was already on the lawn, flitting about among the flowers and gathering a bouquet for the breakfast table.

She was like them—the flowers; as much a part of the rich life of the lawn as they. Life—it radiated from every curve of her pliant body; it was the one thought that came first to mind when looking on her. There were butterflies in the mellow glow already arched above the rim of the east and sifting in through the cool trees adrip with dew, but she was more alive than they.

At sight of her, a-tiptoe by a lilac bush and reaching up for one of its choicest blossoms, the studious concentration left the face of the man on the porch and there came over his features a curious sadness—a sadness touched with fire, as if within him had suddenly flared up some desperate battle of the soul.

The girl had heard the step on the porch. With the coveted blossom in her hand at last, she placed it with the others, and turned with a smile of sensible frankness.

The precise and studious concentration instantly returned to the eyes behind the spectacles, the stoop came back to the capable shoulders, and, with the quick, mincing step that was as much a part of him as the frock coat and neck stock, he came down off the porch and joined her.

With the stately and somewhat ponderous courtesy of seventy years ago, he had taken the shears, begging to be allowed to cut the flowers, when the slam of a gate drew their eyes to the back of the yard. The old banker was just coming from the barn, his step leaving the rumpled trail in the gray dew of the lawn, his rugged face apparently full of its accustomed strength and color.

"W'y, father, I expected you'd stay in bed a while this morning yet, after that—fainty spell the other night."

"Bed! No place f'r a well man after daylight"—he pulled himself up to the last inch of his gaunt height; stretched up his arms; filled his chest with the dew-washed air; expelled it with an explosive exclamation that scared a couple of blackbirds in the branches above; and the crags and battlements of his grim old face smoothed themselves out into an expression as near as they could come to a smile—"an' I am a well man—fit as a fiddle."

"But, father, you don't think of goin' to the—office t'day?"

"Aw, I reckon y'u'd all r'ar up if I did."

"I'm so glad—and won't it be nice t' have y'u at home all day ag'in! I wish y'u never would go back t' that horrid ol' office ag'in."

The old man put his arm around her and patted her shoulder.

"You're a good gal, Texie. I dunno what y'ur ol' father would do without y'u, now that—that—"

He stopped; let his eyes stray up the river and far into the east, all flushed and spangled with the close coming of the sun; the girl bent her head; the preacher stood fumbling the shears in his hand.

A Man Emerged From the Swaying Bushes and Stole Toward the Back Door of the Cabin.

"Mebbe I will quit the office one o' these days."

His eyes were still lost in the east; he spoke as if his heart was there. His daughter raised her head and searched his face.

"You alw'ys say that, but y'u never do."

"I dunno, better walk out than be carried out, they say, an' I've come almighty nigh that very thing a time 'r two—heap nigher"—he brought his eyes back out of the east, noticed the hurt on his daughter's face and patted her shoulder.

Chocolate Craving

The age of chocolate drops, according to a Detroit physician, is at hand. "Men, women and children," he said, "buy more of them every day. It gets to be a habit just like drinking. Chocolate candy has an effect on the nerves, and if the habit is acquired, a craving for the candy will be felt every day. The effect is somewhat dull and always mild. There is nothing serious about the habit."

BAD AUTO WRECK

An auto accident happened last Thursday evening on the road east of town between the Barz farm and the town limits when Wayne Lemke's car upset. Lemke was coming toward town when he met Martin Brinkman; he turned out to give Brinkman his share of the road and something went wrong as Lemke's car swerved for the ditch to the right and then up over the road into the opposite ditch and again toward the road bank where it turned over. Lemke was accompanied by three or four other boys but none were very seriouly injured. The car was almost a total wreck. He is driving a new car now.

MEMORIAL DAY IN CHARGE OF KLEMME LEGION

Friday, May 30th is Memorial Day and will be observed in Klemme. The Legion has charge of the program and services here. A good speaker will be procured and in addition a concert will be given by the Klemme Band and other music by a chorus. The exercises will begin at the park at ten o'clock. After the program at the park a procession will form headed by the ex-service men of all wars, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, School Children, Citizens and will march to the cemetery for further services in honor o our dead heroes of past wars. The program had not been compleed at the time of going to press but will be published in complete form next week.

AT THE ILDE HOUR THIS WEEK

For Saturday night, May 24th you should see "HIS MYSTERY GIRL," a rattling romance of love and adventure that takes the prize for novelty of situation and baffling complications. See Herbert Rawlinson in this picture Saturday night.

For the comedy ,"Should Poker Players Marryy?" It's funnier than a cat getting his paws into sticky fly paper.

Also two more reels of the new series of "Fighting Blood."

Show start at 8:00 o'clock.

Miss Minnie Lenz's Sunday chool clags, the Glad Game Class, was entertained by Lela Bachman at her home Tuesday evening. A musical program was given, after which the rest of the evening was spent playing games. Refreshments were served by the hotess. All report a fine time.

The Senior Class of the Klemme High School, and their class teacher, Migs Stacy, drove to Mason City on Tuesday evening and enjoyed a banquet at the Hanford Hotel which was followed by a theatre party at the Cecil. We presume this was the Junior-Senior Banquet, but the Juniors were all absent. All report a fine time.

HUMORIST WRITES ROAD SIGNS BETTER THAN HE KNOWS

Road Sense in Fun for the Press

"Bugs" Baer, a well known newspaper humorist, has written and pub lihed a series of "road signs," probably merely intended to entertain. But many of them might be erected with benefit to the public safety.

"Don't run up your mileage with skids," contains a lot of real caution in tabloid form. "Don't do your thinking with your brakes," will strike a responsive chord in every man who has had near-nervous prostration at the sight of hte reckless driver stopping in a hurry. "There are three grades of eggs, but only one grade of crossing and that's dangerous," ought to be pasted in the hat of all those who try to "beat the train" across its right of way.

"The glass in your windshield is the same stuff they put in hospital windows. Which will you look out of?" is a very pertinent query and "Fifteen miles an hour may be a chill but fifty is fever," is not too medical to be understood.

To towns troubled with too much speeding by tourists, Mr. Baer suggests "Speed limit in this town fifteen miles an hour. One day for every miie over that!" or "We have seven hotels and one jail, take your pick!"

"Don't try to scare locomotives ith your horn." "The minute you save may be your last one." "You wouldn't travel on a freight train o don't try to travel under one," are ill good to remember.

Mr. Baer intended to be funny, and succeeded; he may not nave intended to be serious, but many can take his cleverness seriously with benefit to themselves and the general public

In other words (Mr. Baer once more) "Accident insurance is a good hing without the accident.

TO THE VOTERS

Kanawha, Iowa, May 24, 1924

Having learned just recently, while calljng upon the voters, that a statement is being circulated to the effect that I was to withdraw as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, I wih to take this means of informing you that this statement js false. I am still a candidate and if elected I faithfully promise you that I will do all in my power toward law enforcement in our county.

A furthur statement that is gaining circulatjon is to the effect that I have already made a choice of deputy, should I be eleced. This statement is also without foundation and I wish to refute it.

If you are for clean politics, clean government and law enforcement I earnestly solicit your support as this is the program I have planned should you elect me to the office of Sheriff of Hancock County.

Very respectfully,
A. Foster.

RADIO ON THE FARM

The radio while generally regarded as belonging more to urban than rural life has become popular in the country. The department of agriculture recently completed a survey showing that 145,000 farm families are now equipped with radio receiving sets.

Based upon an estimate of five persons to a family, this would mean that there are now 750,000 rural radio fans capable of tuning in and hearing various programs put on at broadcasting stations.

The radio may work as a greater influence than the telephone, good roads, electricity or the motor car in keeping tht people on the farm, for these convenience in many cases only increased the hunger for things urban.

In Memoriam

It is with a heightened sense of gratjtude and a deep feeling of reverence that we approach once more the day set aside in sacred memory of those who in the past have given freely and unstintingly of their all, that we as a nation might survive.

To this glorious sentiment, which in the hurry of a busy, bustling world we are too prone to pas by without the consideration that is its just due, we ask that every member of this community pause and give a thought to the mighty sacrifice of human love, ambitions, and even life itself, which this Memorial Day commemorates.

And as a part of this community, we join in bowing our heads in silent prayer, that those who have gone before may know that they are not forgotten, but that their deeds of heroic sacrifice are still fresh with those still left behind and that ever will hold jn our hearts a chamber sacred to their memory.

CONTROLLING ANIMAL DISEASE

Dean Stange Tell of Foot and Mouth Disease Outbreak

The necessity of controlling contagious animal diseases is of especial interest at this particular time, when both federal and state officials are struggling with the California outbreak of foot and mouth disease. Foot and mouth disease attacks cattle, hogs, sheep, goats and sometimes other animals, including humans, says Dean C. H. Stange of the veterinary division Iowa State College.

The disease is highly infectious, and the germs may be carried on the shoes, clothing or bodies of persons, upon the bodies of other animals, by insects, by particles of straw and litter and by the wind. Should the present outbreak of foot and mouth disease spread and possibly find its way eastward to the corn belt, Dean Stange says he would urge every person to co-operate to the fullest extent with the state deparmen of agriculure and federal forces which already are on guard to prevent the disease from invading Iowa.

The mint has issued a new coin, the "Huguenot half dollar," in commemoration of the tercentenary of the voyage of the ship Nieu Nederland, which brought the first Walloon Hugenot familjes to this country in 1624. The coin bears a likeness of the ship and suitable inscriptions. There will be memorial celebrations of the tercentenary jn many cities this month under the direction of a commision created by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ.

Americans are using 1,400 cigarettes for every 1,000 used in 1922, judged by the lattest reports of factory output. The use of cigars and pipes continues to slump. The cigarette, made "respectable" by the war, is the national smoke. Fifty cigarettes a month are being made for every man, women and child in America. Meanwhile, medical men, and reform organizations continue their battle for the supression of the "coffin nail."

The biggest piece of health news for many a day will be that when we hear cigarette consumption i declining.. Cigarettes are harmful.

Another two-reeler of "Fighting Blood." The characters in this are "in the movies" now and it is a fine picture.

This show begins at 8:00 P. M. Come early as we do not run over more than three reels of the second show.

Watch for "Westbound Limited," to be shown here June 4 and 5. This is a thrilling railroad picture full of thrills that will make you hold your breath and hang onto the seat.

TO THE VOTERS OF HANCOCK COUNTY

It has been impossible to meet and talk with you all personally. It is also imposible to state my stand on public issues and matters of vital interest to my County through the medjum of the press.

Believing, however that the farm roads, and taxes are of vital interest to all, and knowing that the welfare and prosperity of Hancock County is wholly dependent upon agriculture, and believing that prosperity cannot endure unless the Farmers are receiving a just return upon their labor and investment, I pledge myself, if nominated and elected to the office of Representative of Hancock County, to give my whole-hearted support to any meagure which will tend to afford relief or protection to the agricultural interests, in wjhch I am myself vitally interested.

I favor legislation which will require heavy motor busses and motor transports to pay a tax to be used for road purposes, commensurate with the use of our highways by these vehicles.

The Budget Law passed at the extra session of the General Assembly has for its purpose the lowering of taxes and restriction of local taxing bodjes. I believe the safe guards in this law and similar legislation are to be the interests of all taxpayers, and I therefore pledge myself to sup port such similar legislation as will tend to decreae public expenditures of money, and taxes.

I will if nominated and elected, in sist on rigid economy in state and local expenditures of public moneys to the scame degree as I would practice economy in my private affairs.

Respectfully Submitted,
Chris Gillstrap.

MAKE GOOD COTTAGE CHEESE

Temperature is One of Most Important Points To Observe

Good cottage cheese is eaily made if attention is given to the temperature of heating the sour milk to separate the curd, says thedairy department at Iowa State College.

If the temperature is too high, the cheese will be dry and granular, while if the temperature is too low, a soft, pasty cheese which drains poorly, will result.

The following procedure is given for getting the best results in making cottage cheese: Take about two gallons of clean skimmilk and allow it to sour at a temperature o 70 degrees F. At this temperature the best flavor will develop and here is less danger of objectionable odors.

When ssufficient acjdity has developed the milk will curdle and this is the best time to heat it rather than to allow the souring to continue further. The flavor will be milder han if more acidity is allowed to develop.

To heat clabber milk it is best to set the pail in a vessel of warm water and allow the temperature to rise gradually to about 105 degrees The curd should be stirred more than is necesady or trouble in draining will reult.

Since the heating is the most important factor affecting the texture of the cheese, it is well to watch this rather closely and cease heating when thec urd separates readily from the whey when allowed to stand.

Drain the cheese by hanging it up either in a muslin or cheese cloth, and when it is sufficiently dry, add salt at the rate of one-fourth ounce to a pound of curd. Cream also may may be added at this time, altho cottage cheese—if properly made—should be palatable without it.

NEWSPAPER A COMMUNITY ENTERPRISE

Most people look at a newspaper as the business of a single individual If it thrives, that is the editor's business. If it fails, that also is the editor's business. As a matter of fact, the sucess or failure of a newspaper is a matter of grave concern to an entjre town. Your newspaper is the best advertisement your town has in the outside world. Other cities judge your town by the kind of newspaper it has. If its business men are not represented in its columns, or jt possesses any evidence that it is not thriving as it should, outsiders are inclined to look on the town as an undiirable to live in and so move on to other cities. No, the newpaper is not a private institution it belongs to the cmmunity, and they can make just what they want to out of i.t It is a mirror in which you are reflected; and you may judge yourself how you reflection looks to outsiders. They may not tell you how you look, but you may depend upon it that their judgment is pretty correct.—Livermore Gazette.

1924th PSALM

The Ford is my auto, I shall not want. It maketh me to lie down in muddy roads; it leadeth me into much trouble; I go by the path of debt for its sake. Yea, thought I understood my Ford perfectly, I fear much evil lest my radius rods or the axle might break. It has a blowout in the presence my enemies. I annoint the tjre with a patch, the radiator boileth over. Surely this thing will follow me all the days of my life life, or I shall dwell in the house of poverty forever.

Moral: Equip your Ford with one of the new cuckoo clocks. When the car reaches a speed of twenty-five miles an hour the bird will come out and sing, "Nearer My God To Thee," and at forty miles an hour it will sing, "Lord, I'm coming Home.'

NOTICE TO VOTERS

As there are no deubt many voters that I will be unable to see I wish to again state my position on he matter of roads.

I am for gravel in preference o hard surface as I feel conditions are such at the present time that a hard surfacing tax would be a burden to he taxpayers of the county. Should I be elected to the office of county upervisod would strive for an economic program throughout.

Present conditions would warrant no other program and the rumors that have been circulated to the effect that am for hard sudfacing are for hard surfacing are simply propaganda to hurt my candidacy.

Should I be elected I assure you that I will give the best service posible. I have farmed in this county twenty-nine years and know that a program of economy would be appreciated.

I earnestly solicit your support on June 2nd.

Respectfully,
W. H. Darrah.

—15—

The sitting-room door opened, and the portly form of the housekeeper appeared on the porch.

"There's Mis' Curry," the girl cried, seizing her father's arm and inviting the preacher with her eyes. "Breakfast's ready, and our bouquet not half finished."

She was the life of the little group that assembled a few minutes later in the gloomy old dining-room, with the candles flickering over its bare walls and waging a losing battle with the shadows lurking in the corners. Only for her, the scene and setting might have been somber enough—the stark walls, stiff old furniture, decorations and ornamentation severely in keeping with the taste of a day long gone; the grim gray figure that presided at the head of the table.

Banker Colin was a man out of whom life had squeezed most of the finer sensibilities and coined them into gold. The dreams of boyhood, the romance of youth, the glory of manhood—gone—bargained away for a price. Sitting there at his gloomy breakfast table, a disappointed, weary old man, his soul cried out to rue the bargain; to trade back with fate. But none had learned the lesson better than he that fate trades not back; that there he was doomed to sit, a hopeless mourner over the dead ashes of the might-have-been.

The forenoon he spent in the small room, busy with his papers, or in meeting people who came to pay him money—or borrow it.

In the afternoon he tried to take a nap, but so long had his mind been set to its daily grind that it now ran on in spite of him—a sort of mental engine whose clutch could no longer be released.

Rest; a quiet nap—they were no longer his. He had sold them—part of the price he had paid for—what?—the privilege to pocket interest money; to collect rents; to write his check. Cheated again. The devil never loses in a trade.

It would be a hopeless task to trace his thoughts as he thrashed about over the bed and fidgeted the hours away. His business; the farms; his squandered years all passed in review. And what was left? To sit by a musty window and pile up wealth—for somebody else to spend. He couldn't spend it himself. He didn't know how. He had toiled so hard to make it that he had never learned how to spend it—an infinitely finer thing to know.

Sleep—he was never wider awake in his life. He floundered off the bed at last, less rested than when he lay down, and stormed out to the porch—only to stand drumming a restless tattoo upon a post with his long bony fingers.

The voices of Texie and the preacher were borne to him from the rustic seat under the giant maple at Whispering spring. He mildly wondered at it; reflected that the genial day had probably for once lured the young man from his studies, and sauntered back to his easy chair in the sitting-room.

As he sat there, with the pulse and purr of the wonderful May day borne in through the open door, his mind groping back over the distant past, a memory held him in far-flung retrospection. Minutes long it held him; until it smoothed the lines on his face and softened his hard old eyes.

He rose from the chair at last; paced back and forth across the floor a time or two; went into the small west room to his safe, unlocked it; with a noticeable effort swung the heavy door open; fumbled inside and drew out a large envelope of stout manila paper; unsealed; fumbled deeper and brought out a small locket of gold; closed the safe, without locking it, and went back to his easy chair.

A long time he sat, with his elbow propped up on the chair-arm, his chin in his palm; finally with fingers that trembled, he pressed in the catch of the locket. It sprang open. There were two pictures inside—a woman and a man. But the face of the woman was not the face over the mantel in the sitting room; it was the face of the woman beneath the draped flag in the cabin under the crimson rambler—what it had been in her girlhood. And the face of the man in the locket was not the upstanding soldier above the sword and spurs, in the uniform of a colonel of Mounted Rangers; it was the face of Simon Colin—what it had been in the days of his young manhood.

The old man gazed at the beautiful, highborn face of the woman in the locket; again and again laid it to his grim old lips, held it close against his breast—suddenly, with a gasp, snapped the locket shut.

A mighty spasm of pain had gripped his side. He clutched it with his hands; fought for breath. When it was over and he was able to breathe again, his lips were blue, and clammy sweat stood heavy on his craggy brow.

Still clutching his side, he opened the locket, with its secret, trying not to see the beautiful face, lest it turn him from his purpose; took out both pictures; struck a match, set them alight and watched them burn to ashes.

As he sat staring, gradually he seemed to grow aware of the envelope lying in his lap. He picked it up and gazed at it absently, as if his mind still dwelt with the dead ashes of the past—the past with its disappointments, its misunderstandings, its tragedy.

In a bold hand that wavered slightly—unmistakably the hand of an old man—the big envelope was addressed, curiously enough, to Jack Warhope, with the legend—"Not to be opened until his twenty-first birthday."

After a moment the old man fumbled some legal-looking papers out of the envelope; read them through with great care; replaced them; sealed the envelope and put it in his pocket. Then he walked to the safe; dropped the empty locket behind some papers at the very back of it; closed the door; locked it and strayed aimlessly out to the porch again.

The shadows of the fine old trees in the yard were creeping well eastward. The preacher, still a truant from his studies, was with Texie at the spring. Just over the brink of the decline where the yard dipped to the park-like orchard, he could see them—the girl on the rustic seat, the tall form of the young minister lounging against a fork of the huge maple.

The drone of their voices carried up to the lonesome old man, at a loss how to spend the hours of his enforced idleness, and the splintered ruins of what had once been a smile for a moment chased the weariness from his craggy old battlement of a face. He dragged a chair to a sunny spot of the porch and sat down.

The girl, hearing the scrape of the chair, sprang up.

"Father!" she cried. "He's up."

Springing over the gnarled, exposed roots of the great maple, she hurried up the yard, half laughing back over her shoulder at the preacher's mincing steps as he followed.

She flew to the porch, and in a moment her arms were around the weary gray figure in the chair.

"F'rgive me, father—I didn't know y'u was up 'r I'd 'a' come sooner."

"Aw, that's all right," he drawled. "Can't expect young folks t' waste the'r time on old ones."

"No, no! Not waste." She smoothed his hair. "I'm so sorry I f'rgot—your good day at home, too."

The old man patted her face and reassured her, in a voice that the people who borrowed his money had never heard.

"W'y, child, I got up only a little bit ago, an' thought I'd jist set out on the porch a while. It's kinda—lonesome in the house."

"And do y'u feel better after y'ur nap?" the girl asked, glowingly happy at his endearments—endearments that had been all too rare.

"Oceans," was his answer, with a grimace at the idea of the nap—a grimace that he suppressed just in time to keep her from seeing. "Good as new. I be'n wonderin' why y'u never tuck Mr. Hopkins hossback ridin'. Y'u ain't even showed 'im y'ur new saddle hoss, have y'u?"

"Brownie? F'r a wonder, I hain't. But this is the first time he's ever be'n here, except at night—and he's traveled s' much and knows s' much that I didn't 'low he'd care about hosses. We've jist be'n talking about—Ken—"

The old banker bent his head and fumbled with a loosened screw of the chair-arm. The girl gazed out across the wide bottoms to the river. The preacher took out his handkerchief; nervously brushed away a speck of dust from his coat sleeve; put it back.

"Brownie," the girl repeated after a time, her eyes turning back from the river to the piously pensive face of the preacher, "would y'u care t' see 'er?"

"It would give me the greatest pleasure," was his answer, in the studied and faultless though somewhat stilted diction of the period.

"I could talk y'u t' death about 'er."

"I should die happy," he answered.

The girl was so artless and unspoiled that the flattery, trite as it was, half pleased her. The native cheerfulness, subdued for a moment by thoughts of her hapless brother, brightened again in her eyes. She threw her arm about her father, dragged him up out of the chair and led the way to the barn.

Brownie, a beautiful dark sorrel, with a single small patch of white in her forehead, hearing the girl's voice, came trotting up out of the pasture lot—the same through which Jack had trailed the unknown prowler the night before. A tall, clean-limbed gelding, bright bay, with one white hind foot, followed her almost up to the gate, where he stood back and half jealously watched the girl caress his mate.

"Come, Rex," the girl called, reaching out her hand and coaxing the tall bay. But the horse kept his distance. It was only after the two men had drawn back a few steps that he came up to the gate and put his nose against her face.

"Do you ride, Mr. Hopkins?" she called over her shoulder.

"Not especially well," he answered, "though I do like a good horse. You ride, of course?"

"Everybody rides in the Flatwoods—you must learn."

"W'y, yes," chimed in the old banker, "there's Rex jist sp'ilin' f'r work, now that I don't ride any more sence these blasted fainty spells got t' comin'. Ther's nothin' t' hender y'u from takin' a ride every day—I reckon we've still got my saddle an' things, ain't we, daughter?"

"Saddle and bridle and all," she answered. "And it will be such a pleasure," she went on, turning to the young preacher, "t' show y'u around over our beautiful Flatwoods."

"With such a guide, I am impatient to go the earliest moment possible," the preacher exclaimed effusively, "this afternoon—now—if you will."

The girl glanced at her father.

"Why not?" he nodded.

"I don't like to leave—you."

The old man tossed up his hand and laughed—a raspy sort of laugh—all that the years had left him.

The girl turned back to the preacher.

"W'y, yes—if you wish," she said—"only you must promise not t' run away from me; Rex is ever s' much faster than Brownie."

The preacher turned to look again at the tall bay, standing a few feet back from the gate, where he had withdrawn step by step as the minister advanced.

"He certainly appears to possess great speed."

"Speed!" the old banker repeated, a note in his voice common to the throat of every man in the Flatwoods when speaking of his horse or dog, "next t' Jack's Graylock at the homestead yonder, he's the fastest in the Flatwoods."

"Graylock — Warhope" — the tired eyes pinched together thoughtfully—"a remarkable young man."

"Scarce as hen's teeth, his breed," the old man returned warmly. "I'm doubtin' if ther's anybody along the Wabash that knows the woods like he does, unless it might be ol' Nick Wiffles. I've alw'ys be'n glad he tuck to 'em the way 'e did, and I've encouraged 'im. Ther's nothin' like the woods t' make a man of a feller."

"Some pr'fessors came up her from down the river t' study what they called 'Native Flora' on the homestead last year—y'u know, ther's two thousand acres of it, most of it layin' jist as the Indians left it, and he keeps coaxin' me not t' 'low an ax laid to a single sound tree. There'll be a fortune in that oak and walnut some day. Jack, he'd be'n writin' to' these pr'fessors, and they'd be'n sendin' 'im books—anyhow, they come up and tramped around f'r nigh a week.

"One day one of 'em was talkin' t' me, and he said Jack knowed more about the woods than all the rest of 'em put together. Well, that's him, every time. I never did know 'im t' try anything but what he got it down about as fine as the next one."

The old banker glanced up at the sun slipping down the west and turned to his daughter:

"Well, if y'u're goin', y'u better be startin'."

Long years of active business life had taught Banker Colin the value of promptness and decision—had so ground these traits into his nature that they had come to function automatically.

Talking as volubly about the relative merits of Rex and Brownie as if he were an agent trying to sell them, and rubbing his bony hands in delight at having his restless mind set once more to a definite task, he led the way to the lot and turned the horses into the barn.

The saddle and bridle were somewhat stiffened from disuse when he tried them on Rex, but he had them limbered up and came leading out the horse almost as soon as Texie had Brownie ready.

A Woman on Decoration Day

By Mary Blake Woodson in the Country Gentleman

I STAND in the crowd and I watch them,
As the wounded in battle go by—
How little they know as they pass me
That none are as wounded as I!

I have tears for what they have given—
Their youth, their Dawn of the Day—
But I'm hungry for all they have left them,
Who gave in a bitterer way.

The eyes that are blinded, the wound stripes,
The limps, the wheel chair and crutch,
Catch at my heart with the sorrow
That bodily blemishes clutch.

And I love them with terrible pity—
I, whose body is whole—
But what if they saw my shattered faith
Or looked at my wounded soul?

Would they know me at once for a comrade
In pain, in courage more sad?
I, without glory of battle,
Who sent away all that I had?

Would they see how my whole life was crippled?
Perhaps if these boys understood
It would humble those scars they are proud of
As only such deeper scars could.

And perhaps I'd go limping out yonder,
Ahead of them all, at the start—
I, with my poor, maimed spirit—
I, with my broken heart!

Tributes Are Due to Fallen Heroes

Observance of Memorial Day Is Duty and Privilege of Americans.

MEMORIAL Day, originated as a tribute to the fallen heroes of the Civil war, has come in these later years to mean much more than that, says a writer in the Detroit Free Press. The dwindling lines of the Old Guard, representing the Grand Army of the Republic, will soon pass in last review before the inspector general, and the heroes of other, later wars will take their places.

It is well that we Americans keep in memory all our men who struggled in battle to keep Old Glory flying in the heavens. These men, heroes of the Spanish-American war and those of the World war conflict, now loom large on the national horizon, and to them, as well as to the remnant of the Old Guard that kept watch and ward along the Potomac and in the Mississippi valley during the dark days of the Civil war, our solemn graciousness is due.

We can never do enough to show our appreciation of what they did in time of trial, and it is meet that we assemble each Memorial Day and give thanks to Almighty God for the victories won by these sons of the republic on so many ensanguined fields of war.

The blue-clad armies that met and conquered the hosts of Lee in the sixties have their counterparts in the lads in khaki who stemmed the German flood of frightfulness in the Argonne, Belleau and on other fields of gore, teaching the hitherto conquering hordes of the kaiser that the despised Yankee from across the brine was not visiting the Rhineland for picnic sport, but to terminate once for all the claims of an absolute monarchy that it ruled the world.

Memorial Day is the one day in all the year when the men and women of America can show more reverently, more sympathetically, more heartfelt appreciation and gratitude for our boys who in the World war as in all other conflicts in which the republic has been engaged, led the van, causing victory to perch upon the banners of righteousness.

Bring flowers to garland the graves of America's soldier dead. What more appropriate? Tears for the dead, help for the living. We must not forget the maimed and suffering, that legacy left by the frightfulness of the most ferocious and heartless war in the history of the world. Kaiser Wilhelm sits in the shadow of Dutch hospitality and broods over the fall of the Hohenzollern dynasty. His punishment is small compared to the suffering his guilty reign inflicted on his fellow beings. Doubtless he is now counting the cost when it is too late to save him from the just condemnation of mankind.

Many thousands of graves will this year be decorated in France, graves of American soldiers who paid with their lives for their patriotic stand for God and country when the bugle sounded for the march across the ocean.

Should Mean Much to Comrades Who Survive

Present-day Americans cannot with wisdom desert the historic traditions which their forefathers held in such high regard. Memorial Day has of late years degenerated, not due to lack of zeal on the part of the few old soldiers remaining, but because of lack of appreciation by later generations of the spirit which actuated its inception. The World war took its awful toll; thousands there are who sleep forever in France, or Belgium, or some other foreign land. The bodies of thousands more have found a last resting place in the native sod. Memorial Day should mean much to their comrades, to those who came safely home. And to the friends of those who came not back. Then let a nation rededicate itself to Memorial day, in the spirit which first inspired those who paid homage and respect to the soldier dead of the United States.—Grit.

THIS WOMAN'S MARVELLOUS RECOVERY

All Due to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Truman, Minn.—"I was badly run-down, had pains in my side and back, sometimes I could hardly move around in bed. My husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking it I was so much better I could do all my work again. I do my housework, have a garden, raise chickens, and in harvest time I worked in the field and helped pick corn. Sometimes I do chores and milk. I took the Vegetable Compound before and after my four-months old baby was born, and it has always helped me wonderfully. I believe there is no better medicine made for women, and I hope every woman will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. AUGUST R. WIEDENHOFT, R. No. 2, Box 84, Truman, Minn.

Women suffering from troubles so common to their sex should give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

The Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has relieved women of such troubles for the past fifty years. For sale by druggists everywhere.

No Problem at All

An instructor in an automobile school was instructing his class in regard to breakdowns on the road and how to make rapid repairs for the same.

He pointed his finger at the most stupid one in the class and said: "John, you are driving a big bus, and have 20 passengers en route to a picnic, with baskets full of fine things to eat, and your engine goes dead ten miles from the picnic grounds. What are you going to do?"

John replied: "We would have the picnic right there."

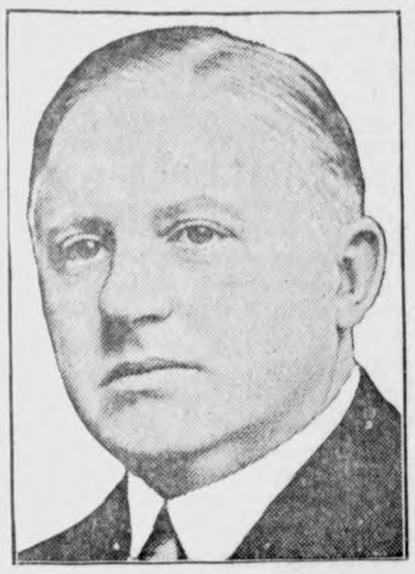
WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

International Rotarians Visit Abroad

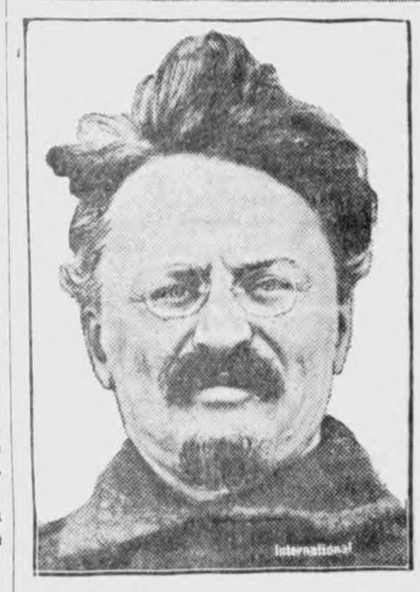


Guy Gundaker of Philadelphia (portrait herewith), president of Rotary International, is rotating in Europe these days, accompanied by Frank Mulholland of Toledo, past international president of Rotary. The two American Rotarians delivered addresses at the convention in Torquay of the Rotary International association for Great Britain and Ireland. Mr. Mulholland aided in the organization of Rotary in the British Isles twelve years ago. There are Rotary clubs in France, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Italy, Denmark and Norway and the two Americans are visiting as many as time will allow, as President Gundaker plans to attend the international convention of Rotary in June in Toronto, Can.

President Gundaker spoke at Torquay of the 98,700 Rotarians in the 1687 Rotary clubs in 26 nations—a world fellowship of business and professional men united in the ideal of service to bring about understanding, good will and international peace."

"Through Rotary mankind is finding means of substituting friendly accord among nations for orgies of fear, suspicion and apprehension," Mr. Mulholland told the convention. "The great ameliorating fact of international acquaintance and friendship is coming into the world, growing into the lives of men, teaching them how to live so that their elbows will not jab the other fellow.

Trotsky in the Soviet Saddle Again



After an absence of nearly six months from all participation in soviet affairs Leon Trotzky, the soviet war minister, has re-entered public life with an energetic and aggressive spirit which has surprised his friends who are aware of his frail health.

"The United States is the most democratic country which plunged into this imperialistic war without idealistic stimulation," said M. Trotzky. "It has become a colossal Tower of Babel and is trying to digest into its stomach all the huge gains it realized from the war. It is now keeping aloof from European affairs, but at the same time is carefully preparing for future war. It is placing aviation and asphyxiating gas foremost in its equipment. It is developing these destructive agents not only for a struggle against enfeebled Japan but also against Europe.

"We all know the use to which the dentist puts asphyxiating gas," he continued, "but when we see the United States preparing to use gas to extract a revolutionary tooth from Europe we must be on the alert. In the meantime Americans are trying these new gases upon their criminals, discarding the use of electricity as a means of killing wrongdoers. Picture to yourself rich and satisfied America sending to famine-stricken, revolutionary Europe whole squadrons of airplanes which threaten to rain these noxious gases upon our heads!"

Nathalia Crane, Ten-Year-Old Poetess

Nathalia Crane, ten years old, who wrote her first poem a year and a half ago in a burst of admiration for the janitor's son, has signed a contract with a publisher who wishes to bring out a book of her poems. Nathalia is a public school girl in Brooklyn, N. Y. Since she began writing at the age of nine Nathalia has had published upward of a hundred poems in newspapers and magazines in all parts of the United States and in Canada and England.

Her first poem, which had to do with the janitor's son (a mere passing romance, however), began:

O, I'm in love with the janitor's boy,
And the janitor's boy loves me;
He's going to hunt for a desert isle
In our geography.

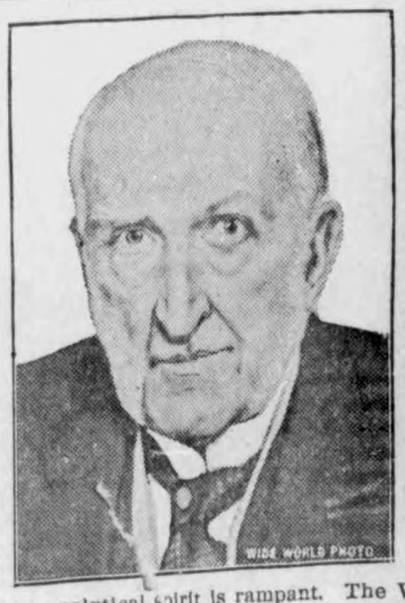
A desert isle with spicy trees,
Somewhere near Sheepshead Bay;
A right nice place, just fit for two,
Where we can live alway.

O, I'm in love with the janitor's boy,
He's busy as he can be;
And down in the cellar he's making a raft
Out of an old settee.

He'll carry me off, I know that he will,
For his hair is exceedingly red;
And the only thing that occurs to me,
Is to dutifully shiver in bed.

Nathalia is a descendant of John Alden of Mayflower fame.

Depew Stands by the Mid-Victorians



Chauncey M. Depew has had another birthday and out of the wisdom of ninety years, he administered a philosophical spanking to modernists and anti-Victorians at the thirty-third annual dinner of the Montauk club of New York in his honor. His address was broadcasted. He said in part:

"I enter fully into the appreciation and praise of the Nineteenth century. Steam is followed by electricity, by radio and radium, and discovery reveals the secrets of nature and overcomes the handicaps on health and longevity until the brain becomes fatigued to understand it all. But the soul starves. The foundations of faith are shaken, and readers of the creed who deny its teachings and preachers who want their independence and weaken reverence by denying the Divinity of Christ, fill the newspapers and empty the churches.

"We carry criticism too far and the analytical spirit is rampant. The Victorian Era was distinguished by rare scholarship and high contributions to literature and science. The Victorians have a permanent place in the temple of fame. But a cult has arisen whose mission and labors are to ridicule the time, its authors, its statesmen and its men and women of distinction. It surpasses imagination to conceive what worth while the iconoclasts get from their efforts."

Modern America

A woman friend dropped in the other evening to chat with the wife, and was scrprised to find the husband, enveloped in an apron, washing the dishes.

"Where's the wife?" the visitor asked cheerily.

"Over at the barber shop," came the grumpy reply.—Indianapolis News.

Musical Tone Opens Lock

A newly invented lock for safes has just been exhibited at Birmingham, England, the peculiarity of which is that, instead of opening to a numerical combination, it does so to a musical tone. In other words, if the cracksman who attempts to open a safe door sings a G sharp when the lock has been attuned to G flat he will be thwarted. Safeblowers of the future, instead of carrying a kit of jimmies and "nitro," will have to have a set of tuning forks.—Musical America.

To the Voters

Of Hancock County

Hayfield, Iowa, May 24, 1924.

Dear Fellow Citizens:

In my campaign for Clerk of the District Court, my desire has been to see every voter in the County. Not being able to do so I am taking this means of presenting my candacy.

The office is one that requires activity and accuracy on the part of the incumbent because upon the records kept in that office may depend the validity of the judgments rendered by the District Court, the title to lands as well as the collection of those judgments.

Also in this office are kept the records of the estates of deccdents and the descent of property and that these records may be properly kept and preserved requires the continuous, caeful and diligent attention of the incumbent as well as some knowledge of the procedure in such cases.

I have always been a member of the Republican party, and for thirty-eight years have been residing upon a farm and farming in Madison Township in this County.

Durng that time I have been connected with the schools of Madison Township, serving for fourteen years as Secretary of the School Board.

I have also served for six years as a member of the Board of Supervisors, retiring from that office five years ago, but by reason of that experience and the information gained while thus serving, I believe myself qualified to perform the duties of the office of Clerk of the District Court to the satisfaction of the people of Hancock County and if nominated and elected, I pledge all of my ability, time and personal attention to a faith ful discharge of those duties.

I, therefore, respectfully solicit your support at the primary if you can see your way to give it.

Sincerely yours,

F. P. OLESON

S. GLENN YOUNG AND WIFE SHOT

Attempt to Assassinate Southern Illinois Klan Dry Leader.

Belleville, Ill.—S. Glenn Young, Ku Klux Klan dry leader, and his wife, Mrs. Maude Young, who were wounded by shots fired by gunmen while they were motoring to St. Louis, were reported resting easy in St. Elizabeth's hospital here.

Mrs. Young received wounds in the right side of her face from a charge from a shotgun. The wounds are not considered serious.

Other bullets fired by the gunmen, one of which wounded Young in the right leg, breaking the bone, were metal cased bullets of .45 caliber. The automobile was pierced in fifteen places by bullets.

The attempted assassination was staged on the Atlantic-Pacific highway just as Young's car reached the Okaw river bottoms near Okawville, Ill.

Young said about twenty shots were fired at his automobile from automatic pistols of large caliber by four men in a sedan, who sped by his car and escaped down the road before he could return the fire. Two of the men he believes he can identify.

Young has been conducting a series of talks or "klantauguas" in cities in southern Illinois.

"My wife and I observed a sedan following us," said Young. "I think there were four men in it. When I arrived at the embankment near the Okaw river bottoms the driver of the sedan speeded up his car and passed my machine on the left.

"Just as the two cars were abreast three of the men in the sedan poured a volley of shots at us. My wife and I both ducked and escaped being killed, bullets passing through the coach work of the automobile right over our heads.

"I had no chance to get my two .45-caliber automatics or my submachine gun, which I had in the automobile."

Senator Walsh Asks Cash Bonus in New Measure

Washington.—Senator Walsh of Massachusetts has started a drive for a cash bonus in the senate. With the bonus bill, providing for endowment insurance certificates just enacted into law, Senator Walsh introduced a bill giving to every soldier who is entitled to an insurance bonus certificate under the new law the option of taking the full amount in cash if he prefers cash to insurance.

Senate Gives Wheeler a Clean Bill 56 to 5

Washington.—By a vote of 56 to 5, the senate adopted the Borah resolution, approving the majority report of the special committee of investigation, exonerating Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana of charges of practicing before the Interior department. It was on these charges Senator Wheeler, "prosecutor" of Daugherty, was indicted some weeks ago by a federal grand jury in Montana.

FORD SUPPORTERS GIVEN A SETBACK

Move in Senate to Speed Shoals Bill Fails.

Washington.—Henry Ford's supporters in the senate agriculture committee were routed in the first test on the plan to give him Muscle Shoals. The committee, by a vote of 11 to 6, turned down a motion of Senator Pat Harrison (Dem., Miss.) to report out the Ford bill, and thus bring it before the senate for action.

The committee also voted down a motion to report out the bill of Senator Norris (Rep., Neb.) for government control of the power site. After these votes it was decided to finish the hearings Monday. The committee then will go into executive session to decide what kind of a report to make.

The vote on the Ford bill brought one surprise. Senator Ralston (Dem., Ind.), who is prominently mentioned as a Presidential possibility, voted for Ford. His attitude during committee hearings had strongly indicated that he would oppose the Ford offer.

Voting with Ralston were Harrison, Heflin (Dem., Ala.), Caraway (Dem., Ark.), Smith (Dem., S. C.), and Ladd (Rep., N. D.). Against the Ford bill were Norris (Rep., Neb.), McNary (Rep., Ore.), Capper (Rep., Kan.), Gooding (Rep., Idaho), Norbeck (Rep., S. D.), Harreld (Rep., Okla.), McKinley (Rep., Ill.), Ransdell (Dem., La.), Kendrick (Dem., Wyo.), Magnus Johnson (Farmer-Labor, Minn) and Keyes (Rep., N. H.).

Malaria and Other Ills Spreading in Russia

Leningrad.—Malaria and other diseases are spreading alarmingly throughout Russia. There is an acute shortage of quinine and other essential drugs, and the authorities are finding it difficult to combat epidemics. According to a report presented to the epidemiological congress here, there were more than 6,000,000 cases of malaria in Russia last year, also 300,000 cases of spotted typhus, 250,000 of recurrent typhus and 50,000 of scurvy.

KIDNAPERS SLAY RICH CHICAGOAN

Nude Body of 14-Year-Old Heir to $4,000,000 Found in Marsh.

Chicago.—Along a grass-grown Indian trail near the Indiana state line the nude and crumpled-up body of a fourteen-year-old heir to $4,000,000, stuffed into the drain pipe of a railroad culvert, brought to light the strangest and most baffling homicide in Illinois criminology.

The victim was Robert Franks, son of Jacob Franks, millionairie manufacturer, living at 5052 Ellis avenue.

His body, bearing slight wounds about the head, bruises of constriction about the neck and an injury to a lung that puzzled physicians, was found at 9:15 a. m.

At just about that moment his father was tearing open a special-delivery letter from a writer who clothed his anonymity in the signature "George Johnson."

Written with as much regard for its diction and literary value as its clarity, the letter demanded that Mr. Franks pay $10,000 for the safety of his son, kidnaped, the letter said, the night before.

But when that letter was received the lad was dead. Seven hours after his body had been found—three o'clock in the afternoon—the anonymous kidnapers made an attempt to collect the money, by sending a Yellow taxicab to the Franks home for the father.

That inexplicable fact, with others of a similar nature, and the patently amateurish modus operandi of the kidnapers and slayers, tended to cause police to minimize the kidnaping theory as a hastily conceived bit of camouflage to hide the real motive for the crime.

Lets Bees Sting Him to Calm Nerves, "Peps Up"

Mount Vernon, Ill.—Bee stings as a remedy for nervous trouble proved successful with Alva N. Turner of Ina, nine miles from here, according to reports. Turner is said to have captured 20 ordinary honey bees and, holding their heads in a tweezer, allowed them to sting his naked back. He took 20 stings at one treatment, declaring it gave him more pep than he had for some time.

Japanese Boom Grand Greeting to U. S. Flyers

Kasumigaura.—Amid loud banzais of 1,000 officers and bluejackets, the treble cheers of several hundred school children waving American flags, and the booming of daylight fireworks, the American round-the-world flyers boomed in a great S over Japan's main naval air base coming to a rest on the lake.

Revolt in North Mexico Grows; 50 Chinese Slain

Nogales, Sonora, Mexico.—Unconfirmed reports of the slaying of 50 Chinese in a clash at Cananea, Sonora, were received by Mexican officials here. Rumors of minor revolutionary movements in northern Sonora are current coincident with reports of the burning of three railroad bridges between Nogales, Sonora and Cananea.

U. S. to Serve Reindeer Meat on Alaska Trains

Seattle, Wash.—Between 60,000 and 70,000 pounds of reindeer meat soon will be purchased by the government to be served in the dining cars of the Alaska railroad, according to word received by the Seattle Chamber of Commerce. This was said to be the first time that a large market for reindeer meat has been created within Alaska.

Coolidge Is Ready to Call New Arms Parley

Washington.—President Coolidge definitely has determined to call another conference on limitation of naval armaments this fall if the Dawes report on reparations is adopted and if congress passes the naval construction bill. Leaders in congress who have been in consultation with the President stated positively that he is committed to another parley.

Cincinnati Tailor to Give $600,000 to Employees

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Arthur Nash, president of the A. Nash Tailoring company, announced a plan for distributing $600,000 of the stock of the company among his employees. Nash received the stock through a 100 per cent dividend voted last Tuesday. He said that if he kept the stock his conscience would condemn him as "the greatest robber that ever walked."

MANY WAR ORPHANS PROBLEM OF LEGION

Child welfare workers are beginning to realize that the American Legion has a real consciousness of the serious problem which confronts it in the care of children orphaned by the World war, and those left by veterans. One of the best known of such workers, O. C. Carstens, director of the Child Welfare League of America, recently made this assertion in a bulletin sent to members of his organization. The letter discusses the Legion proposal to take responsibility for the welfare of orphans of service men, an action ratified by national accord.

Mr. Carstens' bulletin calls attention to an outline of the Legion plan which recently appeared in a publication of the child welfare organization. This plan, he says is "deserving of congratulation and reflects the farsightedness of the Legion's committee.

He particularly commends the fact that the Legion does not intend to relinquish control of these children to anyone else, as it is to be entirely a Legion responsibility.

In suggesting methods of co-operation for his organization, Mr. Carstens wrote:

" . . . We would suggest that you bring cases of service men's children to the attention of Legion posts organized to consider them or to interest Legion members. The point, as we see it, is not to request the Legion to undertake the entire care of the children at once, but to work out methods of co-operation through mutual effort in dealing with the actual children who need help."

To Erect Monument for Grand Army Men

It has been a cherished hope of Grand Army veterans in Appleton, Wis., for many years to erect a monument to their departed comrades. The post has dwindled to 14 members and still that dream is unrealized.

But the American Legion has taken over the plans of the older veterans and will erect the tablet as planned.

At a recent meeting of the World war veterans, the newest generation entertained the members of the G. A. R. post, and announced during the course of the meeting that the tablet would be placed at an early date. Gustave Keller, a member of the Legion, made the suggestion following a newspaper notice that the older veterans were unable to fulfill their desire. The movement is unanimously supported by the Legionnaires.

Pershing's Former Q. M. Now in Legion Ranks

Maj. Gen. Harry L. Rogers, U. S. A., retired, formerly quartermaster general under Pershing, has enrolled as a member of the Chatham post of the American Legion in Savannah, Ga.

General Rogers began his army service as quartermaster general in 1918, and held that position until his retirement in 1922. He was made a knight of the Bath by the king of England. In addition to his distinguished service he was in charge of supplies with Pershing's punitive expedition into Mexico and saw service under Gen. Fred Funston in the Vera Cruz expedition in 1914.

The Legion membership reduces him to a "buck" in the ranks but General Rogers has accepted his part willingly, and is doing much to foster Legion spirit in the community.

Memorial Buildings in Eight California Towns

Two hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars has been apportioned among eight towns in Contra Costa county, California, for erection of memorial buildings. The money is to be distributed as follows: Richmond, $52,799.55; Crockett and Danville, $45,027.52; Martinez, $26,463.93; Walnut Creek, $21,975.95; Pittsburgh, $26,180.03; Antioch, $21,125.21; Brentwood, $21,125.21. An initial amount of $13,000 was set aside for each town for immediate use. The money was apportioned from special tax levies in 1922 and 1923, and its distribution was approved by the county council of the American Legion, members of which will be most benefited by erection of the homes.

Destroy Plate Marking Tree for World Warrior

An act of vandalism, destruction of a plate marking the name of a World war hero in Washington, has aroused American Legion officials in the District of Columbia and the organization will closely guard such memorials hereafter.

The tablet, which was attached to a tree, marked the death of William Emery, Jr., former Washington newspaper man and veteran of the World war. On a tour of inspection of all trees bearing tablets in the city, the Legion men found that the tablet had been wrenched from the tree and demolished.

Long Island Post Is Making Good Showing

Late in 1919, when the Blissville post of the American Legion was organized on Long Island, payment of the first month's rent left just $5 in the post treasury. The financial report for the year ending March 31 1924, discloses that $16,000 has passed through the treasury, and a goodly nest egg is on hand. The post is receiving praise because practically 80 per cent of the adult population w born in Russia and 40 per cent of veterans in the community came that same country.

One of the First Decoration Days

Grave of Young Southerner Scene of Service That Drew Attention.

WHEN flags are fluttering, bands playing, feet tramping, cannon booming, hearts swelling and tears rising, as millions pay tribute to America's war dead, on May 30, an aged Southern woman, sitting at the window of her little home in Petersburg, Va., will remember a memorial day that antedated the famous "Order No. 11" by which Gen. John A. Logan, as commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., established the national custom, writes Ernest C. Pollard in the New York World.

Miss Nora Fontaine Maury Davidson, Petersburg residents claim, decorating the grave of a Southern patriot and the sight of the wreaths anr flags on the Confederate graves at Petersburg, as described by Mrs. Logan to her husband, suggested to him the idea he carried out in Order No. 11 and later by a bill in congress.

Mrs. Logan, in her "Reminiscences of a Soldier's Wife," tells the story of her visit to Petersburg, and of the resulting action of General Logan, but she does not mention having seen or heard of Miss Davidson. Mrs. Logan died but recently.

This is the story, however, as Miss Davidson's friends tell it, and it is a firmly rooted tradition of the town.

In Spring of 1866.

In the spring of 1866, Petersburg, the historic old Virginia city, 22 miles from Richmond, the scene of some of the bloodiest fighting in the Civil war, was under martial law, and occupied by Federal troops. One day in March a squad of soldiers on duty were astonished by the appearance of the Confederate flag at the head of a procession of pretty girls, in stiffly starched white dresses and black sashes, marching out of the "Confederate school," a select seminary for young ladies, conducted by Miss Nora Davidson. Miss Davidson carried the big flag and, in addition, each girl wore a small flag on her shoulder.

"Halt!" ordered the officer in charge. The fluttering line stood still. The officer demanded the surrender of the big flag. Miss Davidson refused. He warned her that she might be arrested and imprisoned. She merely remarked: "Come, young ladies," and the white-gowned procession marched calmly past the dumfounded soldiers and climbed into two waiting omnibuses.

A young man, a friend of Miss Davidson's brothers, climbed up beside the driver of the first omnibus and, taking the flag, shouldered it himself. The old negro driver touched his whip to the horses and the buses started. The commanding officer, recovering from his astonishment, leaped upon his horse and galloped in front of the conveyance and, covering the young man with his revolver, demanded the surrender of the flag. The boy refused and the officer shot him dead. The flag wrapped itself about his body as he fell to the ground.

The street was instantly filled with excited citizens and the Federal soldiers carried the body away and buried it within the hour, without ceremony, but Miss Davidson and her girls followed it to the cemetery and when the soldiers had left they scattered some of the flowers they carried on the mound and marked the place with flags and stood in a circle while Miss Davidson led in prayers. It was then late evening, but the remaining flowers were carried through the city again to the old Blandford cemetery, where sleep "The Blue and the Gray." A short service was held and the graves decorated with flowers and small flags.

Custom Continued.

The custom was thereafter continued. Two years later, in March, 1868, Col. Charles L. Wilson, editor of the Chicago Journal, invited a party consisting of his niece, Miss Anna Wilson (later Mrs. Horatio May), Miss Farrar, his fiancee, General Logan and Mrs. Logan, all of whom are now dead, to accompany him on a visit to the battlefields around Richmond.

It was a bleak March day and snow was falling when the party visited Blandford cemetery, in Petersburg. As they entered they paused to let a large group of school girls and their teacher pass out. They had seen the girls and the young woman arise from their knees on the damp earth where they had been praying, and now they saw the graves strewn with flowers and fluttering little Confederate flags.

As is well known, when Mrs. Logan returned to Washington she told her husband of the old cemetery and the flower-strewn graves, and he declared he would establish the custom as a permanent one. As commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic he issued Order No. 11, which he afterward called "the proudest act of my life." As member of congress from Illinois, he introduced the bill June 22, 1868, and it was unanimously adopted.

World Can Never Forget Hardships of Civil War

Lincoln said in his Gettysburg address that "the world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here." The world has not forgotten what the heroes of the battle of Gettysburg did or what Abraham Lincoln said in praise of their valor and sacrifice. The world and the nation bow in homage again to those who survived Gettysburg and the other battlefields of the Civil war; to those who have survived throughout the years.

Popular Poem Is to Blue and Gray

New York Attorney Gained Fame by Tender Tribute to Fallen Heroes.

POETS in many lands have reaped public as well as literary honors, but New York state furnishes the solated instances of a poem which not only made an upstate lawyer famous, but was the direct means of elevating him to a seat on the bench of the highest tribunal in the state.

The lawyer was Francis M. Finch. The poem was "The Blue and the Gray." The place attained by the author was judge of the Court of Appeals.

With the recurrence of Decoration Day there is a revival of popular interest in the poem which may be said to have foreshadowed it, beginning:

By the flow of the inland river,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled;
When the blades of grave grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead.

Two years before Decoration day became a holiday, the poem which inspired it, "The Blue and the Gray," was written by Mr. Finch, then forty years old, and living in Ithaca, on the shores of Lake Cayuga. That was in 1867, two years after the close of the Civil war. The author had been international revenue collector, but, tiring of official life, he became interested in Cornell university.

The close of the Civil war found both sections of the United States eager and craving for peace. In many pulpits the favorite text was the words from Micah: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

But there were many empty chairs at family firesides, many missing faces at the family board, and widows and orphans everywhere told the story of four years of strife, the bitter recollections of which could not be appeased by pleasant words or speeches counseling moderation and forgiveness.

Mr. Finch (unconsciously, he afterward said) struck the popular chord and keynote of reconciliation by appeal to the memory of the dead in "The Blue and the Gray," published in the Atlantic Monthly. A national convention had been held in Philadelphia to promote the appeasement of the two sections, and northern and southern men (South Carolina and Massachusetts delegates), walking arm in arm, had typified, or attempted to typify, the general spirit of renewed patriotic comradeship.

A Memorial Day, dedicated to forgetfulness of the wounds of war and to redecorating the graves of the fallen with flowers, at first was observed in the various states at different times, but usage soon settled upon May 30, which has been made a legal holiday in most of the states. This day was chosen because it was the date of the discharge of the last soldier in the Union army in the Civil war, which ended officially not with the cessation of hostilities, but with the mustering out of the last volunteer soldier on May 30, 1866.

The concluding words of "The Blue and the Gray" are, perhaps, the ones best remembered:

Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray.

Although Mr. Finch became a professor at Cornell after having been a lawyer of some note and an office holder in the federal services, to the public, he was known almost solely as the author of "The Blue and the Gray." When, some years later, there was a vacancy on the Court of Appeals bench he was nominated for it and elected. His term expired in 1896. He died in Ithaca in 1907.—New York Times.

The little slabs shown here, and on which no names are graven, are mute evidence of the fact that 979 of the 5,663 brave men who gave up their lives in the greatest battle of the Civil war, went to graves unknown. They lie in the shadow of the monument that marks the spot where Lincoln delivered his famous Gettysburg speech at the dedication of the cemetery in 1863.

Developed Into Systemic Catarrh Recommends PE-RU-NA

Mr. A. R. Wilson, LaFollette, Tenn.

The letter written a short time ago by Mr. A. R. Wilson of LaFollette, Tenn., brings some more direct evidence of the value of Pe-ru-na in the treatment of catarrhal diseases.

It reads as follows:—"While attending Billy Sunday's great revival at Knoxville, Tenn., last February I contracted a cold which weakened my entire system. I have taken only three bottles of Pe-ru-na and feel like a new man. It is a great system builder as well as a great catarrh remedy."

To attempt to even estimate the thousands who, in the last half century, have come to know and appreciate the merits of Pe-ru-na would be worse than useless. The number is astonishing and increasing daily.

Your nearest dealer has Pe-ru-na in both tablet and liquid form. Insist upon having Pe-ru-na, the original treatment for catarrh.

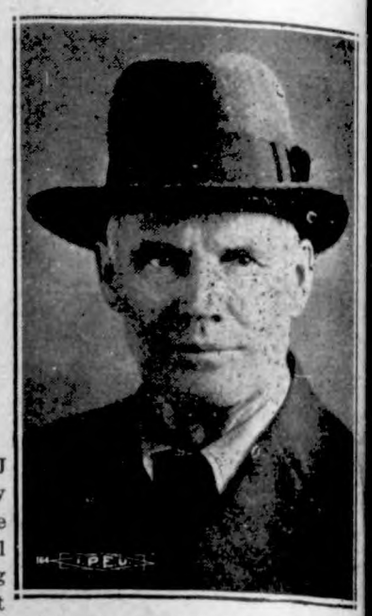
NEIGHBORS AND FRIENDS LET US COUNCIL TOGETHER

I noticed an article in a recent issue of your paper defining your position on State Representative from the eighty-sixth district. I therefore would like a few lines of space to in a manner present my views to my old friends and neighbors.



I began work on the farm of Brockway and Elder in the spring of 1876, near what is now the town of Miller. After assisting the farmer, C. W. Rogers, to put in his crop I began breaking prairie for my father on eighty acres of land about one and a half miles south of Klemme, on section six of Avery township, which I planted to sod corn. This was my first experience in raising sod corn and it turned out quite well. I followed farming for several years as my old friends and neighbors can testify.

Having been one to induce H. J. Klemme to lay out the first forty acres for the town site of Klemme and having furnished the capital to erect the first business building and also to promote the first home of the Klemme Times and furnish the equipment, and also to build and promote the first State Savings Bank I trust that my old friends and neighbors will not all agree in the position you have taken in your valuable paper.

What else are we fighting for, laborers and tillers of the soil? For the universal right of co-operation in selling our products. For the right to cooperate in buying the products of others, as well. And for the idea that all political power is vested in the great body of the people.

Laborers and farmers, you make all the money; do all the work. You plow all the land; cut down the forests. You produce everything that is produced. Who, then, shall say what shall be done with what is produced, except the producer? Is it the non-producing thief?

I know enough to know that agriculture is the basis of all wealth. In 1891 I knew that our business of farming could not pay 10 percent. I found a place where investors let the farmers have money at 7 percent in 1892. The general rate was 6 percent. And finally the general rate on farm loans was made 5 percent.

Our vacant lands were soon taken up and we prospered. Then along came the class of men who inflated the true producing value of our farming lands. What are the results? Farms have become so burdened with mortgages representing paper profits that men in desperation have taken their own lives, leaving widows and orphans robbed of the savings of a life time. Many a family have lost their all and must start over again.

I propose to stand by the Nation. I want the furnaces kept hot, the sky filled with the smoke of American industry. The ballot box is the ark of the Covenant.

The old way of farming was a great mistake. They used to fence 160 acres with two dogs and the rest was left to chance, accident and mistake. No man has a mortgage on what little brains I have, in this land of ours so fair, with its soil so rich and deep. I am going to tell my honest thoughts, for one man in the right will finally get to be a majority. Land has begun to be rated at its real value. Land is worth what it will produce and no more. The land will produce as much today as it ever would and is as valuable today as it ever was, and everything that adds to its productiveness adds to the wealth of the nation.

Here, at last, in the United States man is free. Here man makes the laws and all have an equal vote and voice. The rich cannot oppress the poor. The poor are in a majority. The laboring man, the one who in some way works for his living, can elect every Congressman and every Judge; and if labor is oppressed by capital, labor is itself to blame. Every man with good health is a capitalist; every one with good sense, every one who has had his dinner and has had enough left for supper is, to that extent, a capitalist.

There is no conflict and can be none in the United States between Capital and Labor. Men who excite the envy of the poor are the enemies of law and order. As a rule wealth is the result of industry and economy. Poverty is the result of idleness, extravagance, and inattention to business. Take for instance the young man who works and attends to business. He has made up his mind to be a man, to succeed. Next thing you know he is married, and has built him a house, and is happy. The laboring men of the United States have the power to protect themselves. The vote of a poor man counts the same as the vote of the millionaire.

People, you hold the power. If any corporation in any state is denouncing the substance of the people, every state has retained the power of eminent domain under which it can confiscate the franchise and property of such corporation by paying what such property is worth. There is no conspiracy against honest toil.

Believing in political economy and having voted the Republican ticket for forty-three years, I feel qualified to fill the position to which I aspire.

Voters, tell those with the "crooked tongues" that you believe in absolute intellectual liberty, absolute religious freedom, in equal rights, earned by the blood of our forefathers. Tell them you are going to stand by the flag the Patriots carried upon the field of death. Tell them you are going to vote exactly as Lincoln would have voted were he living now. And voters, we need a change. Make your decision June 2, 1924, at the ballot box.

I thank you for many acts of kindness and leave all in your hands.

Sincerely and truly yours.

RESULT OF MONDAY ELECTION

Voting Was Somewhat Light Over All This County

We are giving a brief election return of official figures on how the votes were cast in Hancock County.

Late returns are that Hammill is leading the field for Governor with 31 per cent. which, however, is not enough to put him over the fence. The governor will be nominated at the convention.

The votes we are giving on the county officers are for Ell and Liberty township and the total vote for the county:

CLEAR EXPLANATION

Teacher— "Johnny, what are the two genders?"

Johnny— "Masculine and feminine. The masculine are divided inine. to temperate and intemperate, and the feminine into frigid and torrid."

Calvin Coolidge

By Strickland Gillilan

Sane he stands despite the slander;
Sane he stand despite the rot
Vended by each red outlander
Who would cool the meltipg-pot.
Sane he stands amid confusion
Such as none before him knew.
Stung by traitorous collusion,
Yet unshaken, staunch and true!

Standing like some calm Gibraltar
While the storms about him seethe,
Sacrificed on country's altar—
Fumes of vile sedition wreathe
Round about, yet all unsmirching,
Steady still his tiller hand.
Though the ship of state be lurching,
Safe in harbor she shall land!

Snarling at his heels the rabble
Culled from every party's ranks;
Those who loudly, loosely babble,
All the bolshevistic cranks.
Yet a vastly larger, cleaner
Army from all parties drawn—
With a vision farther, keener,
Shouts: "God bless you—carry on!"

TREASURE ENVELOPE FOUND BY BRITT MAN

Britt, May 29. The pirates and the buccaneers of old never experienced a greater thrill than Orville Whitney experienced whtn he discovered envelope at the south elevator in Britt that contained about $2,000 worth of property in the form of gov ernment bonds and postage stamps.

Thel oot was apart of that stolen more than a year go in April 1923, when the post office at Crystal Lake was robbed. No trace of the lot property or the thieves had been found until Mr. Whitney, while making some repairs underneath the elevator. The bonds were in a good state of preservation. The dampness had caused the stamps to stick together in one mass. The property was turned over to Postmaster C. F Wigton.

"LICENSE APPLIED" TAGS ARE BUNK, SAYS SHERIFF MARSH

A "license applied for" tag on an automobile is the bunk as far as Sheriff Fred Marsh is concerned. He stated today that there was no such anmial.

It is unnecesary to "apply" for licenses, according to the sheriff. All that is necessary is to go to the office of the county treaurere and get the license.

The sheriff announced today that six cars were picked up Wednesday, all of them carrying one of the pasteboard "license applied for" tags. They were four Fords, one Buick and one Cheverlet.—Mason City Globe Gazette.

IOWA'S MAY COLDEST IN 17 YEARS, CLAIM

DES MOINES: —The current month of May is thec oldest Iowa has experienced since 1907, according to records of thel cal weather bureau. The mean temperature so far this month has been 57, three degrees higher than it was in 1907.

The cold area now hovering over western Oregon and Washington. if it shifted over to Iowa would bring a severe drop in temperature which might drp the average to the low est on record, but little is the possibility of this occuring.

ABANDON PARK AT CLEAR LAKE

The state board of conservation project for a state park at Clear Lake was abondoned yeterday when the board notified Attorney General Gibson to dismis the suit over the condemnation jury's award for the McIntosh tract which was to have come to trial in Cerro Gordo district court Monday.

The state park board, after another appraisal of the McIntosh tract, decided it was not worth more than the $30,000 awarded by the condemnation jury. Assistant Attorney General Neil Garrett was ready to resit the appeal of Mrs. Rose McIntosh for $88,400 for the land.

Dr. L. H. Pammell of the board of conservation wired the attorney general yesterday that the project might cost $100,000, in the end even if the land could be bought for $30,000. He said the board did not feel justified in paying $30,000 for the forty-five acre tract and would rather drop the suit and abondon the park project.

The proposed park was to be located on the paved road west of Clear Lake on the north side of the lake directly opposite the and bar.—Des Moines Register.

HEAD CUT OFF WHEN HE STEALS A RIDE

SIOUX CITY, May 29.— Donald Raynor, 15, is dead today as the result of trying to "hop" a ride on a Milwaukee freight train yesterday afternoon. Young Raynor, a student of the west junior high school, was thrown beneath the wheels of the moving freight and decapitated. Howard Speulda, a schoolmate was also thrown to the ground when he attempted to board the train, but sustained no injuries. Raynor and Speulda were in the habit of catching a ride on the freight train every afternoon on their way home from school

6 FOOT SNAKE KILLED BY CLARKSVILLE MAN

CLARKSVILLE —A six foot blue racer snake attacked Carl Polk while he was operating a corn planter in field on his farm Friday, driving him from the machine twice before Polk procured a weapon and killed it.

The man left the planter when the snake first threatened him thinking it would leave, but after he had gotten a board from a nearby fence and again mounted the planter it made a second attack. Polk again left the planter and during his absence the reptile wound about one of the planter wheels, where he killed it.

SANDY SOIL FOR SWEET SPUDS

Rich, Blank Dirt Maks Vegetables Too Stringy.

It is a waste of time to plant sweet potatoes in heavy black soil because the rootes will be stringy and elongated, but folks with sandy soil should plant this vegetable from May 25 to June 10, according to the department of horticulture at the Iowa State College.

A great many varities of this potato may be planted, but two are recommended, the Yellow Jerseys and the Nancy Halls. The large white of purple sweet potaties generally are poor in quality, but are grown by commercial growers to some extent, due to their early maturity.

BIG PROGRAM FOR HANCOCK ROADS

Klemme - Garner, Britt - Kanawha Hayfield. Woden, Corwith Roads Get Gravel.

Owing to the somewhat backward spring road work in Hancock county has been somewhat delayed but the Board of Supervisors has mapped out a great program to be carried out in grading and graveling in 1924

The initial step was taken when Chairman H. C. Meyer succeeded in getting the State Highway Commission to let primary road funds be used in building a road from Crystal Lake to Britt. This will take a long stretch of road out of the county road system and leave more money for improving side roads in the territory adjacent, and is a move that has long been sought by the people of Crystal Lake, Britt, and the territory between.

Contracts were awarded by the Board of Supervisors at Garner, Thursday for graveling of the Klemme-Garner and the Kanawha-Britt roads. H. E. Miller, manager of the Wright Construction Co., of Sioux Falls, S. D. was successful in geting most of the work. On the Garner Klemme road the gravel will come from the Kester pit north of Garner and the Johnson pit south of Klemme. The cost is 33 cents per cubic yard of gravel for the first mile of haul and 8½ cents per additional half mile.

On the Kanawha Britt road gravel will come from the Hutchins pit he cost being 31½ cents per cubic yard for the first mile of haul and 7.9 cents per additional half mile of haul.

The Belmond Construction Co. received the contract for three miles of he road from Kanawha north and will ship the gravel into Kanawha nd haul it out to the road from the railroad yard at 45 cents per cubic yard for the firstm ile of haul and 8½ cents per half mile additional haul. The gravel is being upplied for this work at $1.45 per cubic yd.

Sixteen bidders tried for this work nd competition was keen.

In addition to this work the road hat is now graded from the pavement at the first coner east of the County Farm running north will be graveled to Hayfield. The road from the Wieland school house in Orthel ownship and running straight north to Woden will be graded and graveled. Also the ungraveled stretch of he road from Hutchins to Corwith will be given a coat of gravel. And a road west of Kanawha is up for consideration as a secondary grading and graveling projtct.

This will not be all of the road work by any means but will cover the primary and county road systems for the present seayon. It is considered the greatest move ever attempted in Hancock county to life us out of them ud and when completed will give us a system of roads in addition o roads already and paved that will reach every corner of the county.

Supervisors Meyer, Lawhorn and Berhow have a busy season ahead Their plan of improvement will be well received in all parts of the county.—Britt News Tribune.

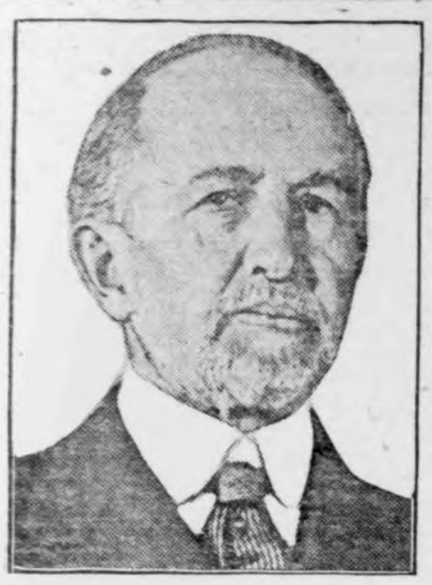
Prominent People

Gillett to Leave the Speaker's Chair



Speaker Frederick H. Gillett of the house has decided to become a candidate for the Republican nomination for senator from Massachusetts. The speaker reached his decision after several conferences with Massachusetts political leaders, including those in charge of the national campaign of President Coolidge. He will seek election to the place now held by Senator Walsh, Democrat.

Speaker Gillett has been a member of the house from the Second Massachusetts district since March 4, 1893, his sixteen continuous terms constituting a record of unbroken service not equaled by any other representatives now in office. He has been speaker since 1919, but was re-elected to that post last fall only after a long deadlock forced by the fight of the insurgent Republicans against the party organization.

His withdrawal from the house after March 4, next, regarded as a certainty no matter how the senatorial situation develops, means a realignment of the party organization there and probably a renewed effort by the LaFollette followers to secure additional recognition should they retain a substantial voting strength after this year's election.

Two Congressmen Stage Lively Scrap

Representative Thomas L. Blanton of Texas, Democrat, who has been in the limelight before, is in again. This time it's a fight between him and Representative William C. Hammer of North Carolina, also a Democrat. The fight, in which books and chairs were hurled around promiscuously and spectators scattered for cover, was staged in a meeting of the house committee that deals with District of Columbia affairs.

The battle was lively while it lasted, the two members swinging wildly and struggling to get at each other while spectators and other congressmen endeavored to keep them apart.

The trouble started when Blanton (portrait herewith) objected to the meeting being held on the ground he had not been previously notified.

Hammer said Blanton had "willfully misunderstood" an announcement about the meeting.

You're a garrulous old grandmother," retorted Blanton.

"That's not true," cried Hammer, "and you haven't the courage of a dog to say it."

"You're a liar," yelled Blanton.

Hammer swung and missed. Blanton swung and missed. All even.

As Blanton swung again—and missed—the North Carolinian picked up a folding chair and, reaching over the head of William F. Ham, president of the Washington Railway and Electric company, struck the Texan.

By this time the spectators that were not hunting cover were hanging on the coat tails of the contestants, and they finally succeeded in pulling them apart. Later on they went at it again and Representative Zihlman, Maryland, hastily adjourned the session.

Will the Vast Stinnes' Fortune Endure?

Dr. Edmund Hugo Stinnes (portrait herewith), who by the death of his father has suddenly become the monarch of one of the world's most gigantic industrial and commercial empires, is described by his associates as "a youth of engaging personality and winning urbanity." Although only twenty-eight years old, he served a rigorous technical and commercial apprenticeship under his father's unsparing tutelage, and subsequently was graduated from the Charlottenburg Technical school with the degree of doctor of engineering. He enlisted as a volunteer in the World war and advanced to a lieutenancy in the aviation corps.

Young Stinnes was constantly at his father's side during the latter's restless and manifold activities of the last five years and is possessed of first-hand knowledge of the mining, smelting and industrial branches of the Stinnes' enterprises. He will direct the properties in the Ruhr and Rhineland, while Hugo Hermann Stinnes, younger son, will oversee the family's interests at the headquarters in Berlin and care for the shipping and foreign properties.

The President's Oil Commission Reports

Here is a new portrait of Rear Admiral Hilary P. Jones of the special commission appointed by President Coolidge to study the problem of navy oil conservation. His colleagues are George Otis Smith, director of the geological survey, and R. D. Bush of the California state bureau of mineralogy. The commission has reported recommending that no more navy oil be exchanged for construction of navy reserve oil tanks by Doheny, Sinclair, or any other contractor. For the provision of such additional tanks in the Hawaiian islands and at other strategic points it will be necessary for congress to make large appropriations. Says the report:

"The prime purpose in retaining the oil in the naval reserves being safety, the administration of these reserves should be animated by principles of saving publicly owned oil for these future needs rather than of saving public funds from present expenditures. The choice between oil and dollars has to be made.

"The oil that now remains under governmental control, or that can be brought under such control, must be treasured not for its market value, especially in these days of low prices, but for its emergency value at some future date.

"Considerable funds will be needed to provide adequate tankage, considerable more to purchase oil to fill those tanks, and still more funds to test and develop possible additional reserves. Without money the existing reserves can neither be adequately protected nor fully utilized."

LEGION'S INFLUENCE

By N. S. SINNOTT, United States Representative From Oregon.

THE American Legion is here to stay. It has a patriotic mission in our private and public life. It is fulfilling that mission well, and will ever be an important factor in inculcating a deeper love for our country and its institutions. Composed of the best and most patriotic of our young manhood, who demonstrated their patriotism and willingness to sacrifice their lives in war; in peace, the same promptings of patriotism will ever make them zealous for their country's welfare. I know that congress gives careful consideration and weight to the views of the Legion. This is attested by the fact that much of the legislation passed by congress for the ex-service men, land laws, care and hospitalization for the disabled, was passed in compliance with the request of the American Legion.

KANSAS' BONUS LAW HOLDS UP MEMORIAL

Red tape confronting members of the American Legion in Great Bend, Kan., may defer erection of a memorial to Allwyn Harrison, a Barton county veteran for a short time, but the Legion will build a monument to this man who lost his life in the World war.

Under the Kansas bonus law, Harrison's heirs are entitled to his bonus. His parents are dead, and he had no brothers and sisters; only several uncles and aunts are living, all of whom are entitled to a share of the compensation.

These heirs suggested that a monument be erected in the boy's memory, and all made assignments of their share to the Legion. This was agreeable until the Kansas board got the case. The law specifically says that the bonus cannot be assigned to any purpose except for support of wife or children. As a result the bonus board will be required to make out 15 different checks to pay each of the heirs the small share of the claim they are to receive. Then the Legion must arrange to get these checks indorsed and paid into a fund for the memorial for the young man.

Needy German Soldier Cared for by Legion

At Chateau Thierry, with Americans too close for comfort, Herman Schmidt, a German soldier, suffered a shattered leg from the explosion of a shell. A few months ago Schmidt went to Chicago, where relatives obtained work for him in a grocery, but the old wound gave him considerable pain.

Schmidt kept his trouble to himself, imagining if it were known that he had been a German soldier members of the American Legion would have him deported. Infection set in and the man's life was endangered, so despite his protests a brother told a neighbor, a member of the American Legion.

The next day members of the Legion again surrounded Schmidt, but this time their presence was a comfort to him, as they carried him to an ambulance and sent him to a hospital. Now Schmidt regards his former enemies as men of human qualities, and the Legion as a ministering angel.

Iowa Flag Decoration Plan Given Approval

The Shenandoah plan of uniform flag decoration, originated in Iowa by a member of the American Legion auxiliary, is rapidly spreading to all sections of the country. This plan calls for placing of an iron receptacle in the sidewalks of the business districts of cities at regular intervals in which flagstaffs of equal height are inserted and from which emblems of exact size are flown. The plan was first tried in Shenandoah, Iowa, and reports now indicate that it is in use in Florida, California, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, the Dakotas and other states as well as in the state of its origin.

Texas Post Offers to Help Houston Mayor

Services of members of Dismuke post of the American Legion in Houston, Tex., have been proffered to Mayor Holcombe of that city by post officials to aid in fighting fires or in helping to apprehend "firebugs."

The offer was made following an epidemic of fires in the city, many of which are suspected to have been of incendiary origin. Firemen have been kept busy answering these calls.

Splash Pool Is Donated to City by Idaho Post

A splash pool for the children of Emmett, Idaho, has been donated to the city by the local American Legion post. The pool was constructed in a city park, but all expense was borne by the Legion members, who expect return of some funds from operation of park concessions during summer months. First work was done by a group of Legionnaires, to whom luncheon was served by women of the auxiliary.

Employing the Magic Crystal With Success

By SELINA E. HIGGINS

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

FOR a whole day our darling had moved about the house as one in some dreamlike trance.

Elida was listless. She would sit for an hour gazing at seeming nothingness.

I, her aunt and guardian, wondered if it was anxiety for her absent lover, Willard Hull, that had brought on this deep abstraction.

It was early that evening when a warm friend of the family dropped in. She was a music teacher and quite an attraction at local social entertainments. She had been out late the evening previous at a soiree that I knew Miss Evans had also attended.

We were close friends with the music teacher, and in my anxiety and perplexity I spoke of the strange mood that had held Elida in a strange thrall.

"My dear Miss Nettleton," spoke my visitor, when I had concluded, "I came purposely to see Elida. You understand me well enough to know that it would not be from any idle curiosity, but from motives of the purest friendly interest. Something happened at the soiree last evening that was inexplicable.

"Something happened?" I repeated, a trifle fearsomely.

"Yes. A young man, his name was given as Dalziell, attended the soiree last evening. He came with the Ritchies, whom I only know incidentally. He is a wonderful conversationalist and a marvel at the piano."

"And he met Elida?" I asked, dreading that something might shadow the love and loyalty of my darling and her fiance.

"Only as he did the others, as a gentleman of great attainments, courteous to everybody. He had just finished a brilliant musical composition of his own, however, when I saw him lean toward Elida, who sat nearby, and fix his eyes upon her. A light shone in them, I cannot describe."

"You are alarming me," I said timorously.

"I am sorry, but I must tell you all," replied Miss Evans. "I saw Elida start and a nervous tremor crossed her face. She was like one enrapt, fascinated. Suddenly, but without removing his glance, this Dalziell dashed both hands down upon the keyboard of the piano. There was a strain of wild, unearthly music. A look I cannot describe passed over Elida's face. Near to her was a stand containing a fragile glass receptacle for calling cards. She seized this, dashed it violently to the floor and it shattered to a thousand atoms. Then with a low cry she shrank back shuddering, covered her face with her hands."

"You astonish me!" was all I could gasp out.

"I glanced at young Dalziell," went on Miss Evans. "There was a strange, weird expression on his face. He dashed off into a quick, lively Polish mazurka."

I had gone two blocks from the house and was turning into an intersecting street, when I chanced to look back. A man was just going up the steps of our home. In a flash I recognized him as answering the description Miss Evans had given me of Dalziell. I hurried back to the house. I paused to take up a small revolver kept for security in the drawer of the hall rack. Then I proceeded to the parlor entrance.

An amazing spectacle met my view. Seated at a little stand, her face pale but placid, her eyes dreamy and glazed, was Elida. Standing before her was the stranger. He held a piece of faceted crystal in one hand. On that Elida's eyes were fixed.

"Who are you? What are you doing here?" I quavered impulsively, and the man turned to face the weapon in my trembling hand.

He was not in the least moved. He placed a warning finger to his lip, never lowering the crystal.

"For Willard Hull," was his astonishing announcement in low musical tones.

"From Willard Hull!" I cried.

"No—for him. Do not interrupt—it is a critical moment. Speak!" he added, directing the mellow insinuating word at the transfixed Elida and fixing his glance piercingly upon her. "The wall—is it east? And which wall?"

"No," came in a dreamy, faraway murmur from Elida. "Not a wall—but a well."

"Success!" gasped the stranger, and sank into the nearest chair as if exhausted after some superhuman effort.

In a few moments the man arose. He made some movements with his delicate hands toward Elida, whose face renewed its usual expression. Then he turned to me.

"Miss Nettleton," he said, "I have heard of you. I am a friend of Willard Hull, who has gone to look up the hidden fortune of his dead uncle. He did not find it at any 'wall,' as the hint was. I am credited with possessing certain occult power. Perhaps. At least, my mind filled only with honest motives, working on the pure crystal-clear mentality of this beautiful young lady, has evolved a clew—'well,' not 'wall.'"

It was a well, indeed—we knew it within a week, when Elida's fiance came back a rich man.

And Dalziell, the strange, mystic genius whom I at first so feared, we all love now as a loyal, devoted friend.

MONARCH DUTCH PROCESS COCOA

Monarch is a Dutch Process Cocoa. That accounts for the rich quality and smooth, delicious flavor. The big difference between Monarch and other high quality brands is in the price. Monarch costs you only about half as much. If you prefer Dutch Process Cocoa, always ask for Monarch.

Many American Process Cocoas cost twice as much as Farm House. Yet in Farm House you will find all the qualities that particular cocoa users demand—flavor, aroma, smoothness, solubility. You get quality cocoa and save money at the same time when you insist on Farm House.

SICK WOMAN MADE HAPPY

Entirely Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mart, Texas.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to build me up as I was all run-down, nervous and sick. I ached and hurt all over so that I was often compelled to go to bed, and I had to have most of my work done. No medicine seemed to help me until one of my neighbors who was taking the Vegetable Compound insisted on me trying a bottle of it. The medicine helped me from the first, and the best of all is that I can even sew again without that awful, nervous feeling I was used to having. And I used to take crying spells, with such a blue feeling that I cannot explain. Now all that has left me. I feel so cheerful, and I have gained in weight, sleep well and eat heartily. Oh! I wish I had words to express what this medicine has done for me! I am a housekeeper and do everything from the sewing to the washing and it doesn't hurt me. You may use my letter in any way you wish. I will be glad to help any suffering woman on the road of health and happiness."—Mrs. B. F. BRANNON, 404 Travis Ave., Mart, Texas.

Still Useful

Judge Lindsey, the friend of youth, is always interested in prison reform and a staunch advocate of vocational systems. It is his theory that a prisoner should, as far as possible, be allowed to follow the same line of work that had interested him before his commitment.

"Fine," said a friend one day, "but supposing the fellow was a dancing teacher?"

"Well," said the judge, "perhaps he could teach the boys a new lock step."

In the driveway down the yard the girl handed Brownie's rein to her father and ran into the house. When she returned a moment later, she had on a short riding skirt, and was buckling around her waist as she walked the holster of a small and very fancy revolver.

The preacher allowed his eyes to stray over the trim figure and rest on the weapon.

"A present from—Jack," the girl answered to his look, at the same time dropping her fingers to the neat holster—"he trapped mink t' git the money."

"Do they—girls, I mean—carry such—things in the Flatwoods?"

"Sometimes—y'u see, Jack and I ride t'gether, and shoot target s' much—"

"Why, I have one of those—things."

"Have y'u—bring it along and we'll shoot target."

The preacher handed Rex's bridle rein to her and hurried into the house. The old banker, grinning toward his daughter at the eccentric dominie's mincing step, suddenly seemed to remember something, tapped the breast pocket of his faded coat; drew out the formidable letter addressed to Jack Warhope and handed it to the girl, with the request that she deliver it at the first handy opportunity.

Wondering, the girl looked at the letter and put it away in her blouse, just as the preacher returned carrying in one hand the very dependable-looking ivory-handled six-gun that had thudded against the bottom of the skiff on the day of the seining trip. In the other hand he held a very serviceable holster, with its pouch for powder flask, bullets and caps hanging from the belt.

"I bought them just before setting out on my journey for the—West," he explained.

The girl took the beautiful weapon, fully loaded and freshly capped, and looked at it admiringly, while the old banker bent over her shoulder.

"W'y, this gun's be'n shot—a lot," she said, lifting the hammer a trifle and slowly revolving the cylinder.

The preacher dropped a quick look at the weapon.

"Gun," he repeated, with a mite of hesitation that escaped the others—"is that what you call them? The man who sold it to me called it a revolver. I do wonder if he sold me a second-hand one."

The old banker laughed—raspy raucous.

"Cheated a-plenty, parson. This Dolly Varden cannon o' your'n has seen service, 'r I ain't no judge of six-guns."

"Do you mean that it will not shoot?" the preacher asked in anxious tones.

"Lord, no!" the banker returned—"it would drop a man in 'is tracks,

"W'y, This Gun's Be'n Shot a Lot," She Said.

but they cheated y'u if they sold it to y'u f'r new."

Texie handed the weapon back to its owner. He thrust it awkwardly into the holster and stood fumbling the belt, wrong side out, around his waist. The girl laughed, showed him how to buckle it on under the somber frock coat, and sprang to the saddle, with an ease and grace that lifted his spectacled eyes.

After two or three unsuccessful attempts he finally succeeded in scrambling to Rex's back and followed her down the drive, where the old banker already had the gate open.

Just through the gate the girl fell suddenly thoughtful.

"Wait—I'll be back in a minute," she said and touching Brownie with the whip, dashed away up the River road. A moment later under the big elm by the barn-lot gate at the Warhope homestead, she drew rein. While Brownie stood prancing, still a mite resentful at the touch of the whip, the girl's head lifted, her throat and lips tightened, and the clear call of a king cardinal made the great elm musical.

A big man with a mighty spread of shoulder, at work in the cattle pens, lifted his head and listened. Next moment Jack Warhope appeared around the corner of a shed, vaulted the fence and came striding down the barn lot.

"Texie! W'y—"

He opened the gate and came out into the road. The girl smiled upon him curiously; fumbled in her blouse; drew out the letter in the formidable manila envelope and handed it to him. He took it; gazed at it, and then looked up at the girl.

"'Not to be opened until his twenty-first birthday,'" he read—"what d' y'u s'pose Pap Simon's up to now?"

"That's what I be'n wonderin'," was the thoughtful answer, "but I reckon we'll have t' wait till—till—"

"Six more days," he finished, as the girl tightened the reins and pulled Brownie's mouth up from the grass.

"How 'd y'u like t' go ridin'?"

"Me?"

The dimples flashed at him.

"Mr. Hopkins wants t' go."

"Hopkins?"

He shrugged his great shoulders and glanced down the road where the preacher sat on his horse awkwardly in front of the red-roofed cottage.

"Jack—"

He turned back to her; waited for her to go on.

"Be nice to 'im. He knows s' much, and he was good t' pore—Ken—"

He bent his head in respect for the minor note. The soft purr of the elm twigs came out faintly clear on the drowsy day; the girl sat drawing the cracker of the riding whip up and down between the stirrup and the toe of her shapely small shoe.

"Texie—"

He had looked up; the girl turned her eyes toward him.

"Don't let this—man git no holt on y'u. He ain't no man f'r—you. His ways ain't—our ways—"

The girl lifted her face and laughed—a trifle uneasily.

"Jack, you're alw'ys so—serious. Hurry up and git Graylock."

"How d' y'u know I'm goin'?"

"Ain't y'u?"

He smoothed the mane on Brownie's neck; half turned toward the gate.

"I am if he is."

"Bring y'ur r'volver—we're go'in' t' target shoot."

He wheeled back, for the first time he seemed to notice the holster at her waist.

"I 'low I will," he muttered.

CHAPTER XIII

A Face at the Smudged Window.

Aunt Liza happened to have "drapped a stitch" in her knitting and had stepped to the window the better to see to "pick it up" when the three riders came up the Eagle Hollow road. She looked up carelessly from her tedious task, but grew instantly attentive with the first glance.

"Come 'ere, Nick—ain't that Big Jack an' Texie an' the new parson?"

"Well, I'll be dern'd," grunted the old man, coming to the window and looking out, his pipe poised between his fingers—"what d' y'u think o' that?"

"What I think's a-plenty," the primly positive old woman snorted, "out gallantin' around like that, with two beaux a-traipsin' after 'er—an' that preacher in the Flatwoods bar'ly long enough t' git 'is chair warm. I use'n t' think right smart o' Texie, but I cayn't swaller no sich carryin's-on as she's a-havin' with the new parson. He ain't never be'n reg'lar installed, nohow, an' if he keeps on like this, 'e won't be.

"Texie Colin may live t' rue the day she draps a fine lad like Big Jack an' takes up with a teetotal furriner, jist 'b'cayse 'e happens t' be gallantin' an' full o' p'laver."

"Aw, I dunno," the old man interrupted, turning away from the window as the three riders disappeared behind a bend in the road a little above the house, "jist b'cayse she happens t' go out ridin' with 'im, hit ain't no sign she's a-goin' t' take up with 'im."

"That's jist your way," Aunt Liza retorted, still standing at the window and fussing with the snarled knitting, "alw'ys tryin' t' smoothen things over f'r everybody. Did you look how 'e set 'is hoss, 'longside o' Big Jack?—huh—I wonder the second best hoss in the Flatwoods would put up with sich ridin'. I knowed that preacher wouldn't do t' tie to the minute 'e lit. Hain't no sense in a preacher bein' that good-lookin', nohow—now there's the business of it, I-jeeminy."

Aunt Liza's grim lips twisted into an acid silence. She bent again over the "drapped stitch"; "picked it up" at last and came back to her rocking chair.

The old man, doubtless glad to rest after his long tramp in the woods that morning, sat with his pipe dangling between his fingers and tapping his chair, his head bent forward, pondering the three-angled drama—the eternal triangle—at that moment being staged within the narrow valley.

The click of the busy knitting needles, the muffled tapping of the pipe, fell at length into a sort of rhythm, which, with the tick of the dull-faced clock on the mantel-shelf, seemed to enhance the silence rather than disturb it, and to bring out the peace and repose of the room.

Meanwhile, the three riders leisurely followed the eccentric windings of the Eagle Hollow road. Seen through the tangle of vine and bush and tree in teasing glimpses on their left, the erratic little stream that inflicted on the road its many turnings, sparkled by in the sunlight. On their right, across a picturesque rail fence, rose the wooded bluffs that led to the uplands of the Warhope homestead.

Cleared only to the width of a wagon, so narrow that the bordering bushes sometimes raked their stirrups, the road itself was a thing to invite the wood fairies. It lay for the most part in checkered shade, the feet of the horses playing almost constantly among a delicate tracery of leaf and branch and stem, flung down by the sun in dancing patches upon the grassy track. The great trees of the bluffs reached their giant arms over it and hovered it in grateful shade, while cliff and scar unwound their successive pictures as the three rode along.

More than a mile up the hollow the road passed under the far-flung branches of an immense oak, towering so high above its fellows that the preacher reined in Rex and exclaimed:

"Grand! Magnificent! Surely its fellow is not to be found in the forest!"

"Eagle Oak," the girl observed, reining up Brownie by the side of the taller horse, "the king of the Flatwoods."

"It b'longs to the homestead," she went on. "The line runs right along here at the base of the bluff—that's the line-fence there. Black Rock and Eagle Oak, they're both on the homestead. Jack's—father had the original patent, 'r whatever they call it, made out t' his gran'father, and signed by General Andrew Jackson himself. They say—"

The woodsman fidgeted in his saddle; glanced around at her from under the edges of his eyes. She caught the look and paused.

"Ah, it must be fine to have such a holding as that," the preacher commented. "I confess to some such longings myself, sometimes."

The remark not seeming to call for an answer, the girl merely shook the reins on Brownie's neck and they rode on—out from the shade of the great oak; up the narrow ribbon of road, with the picturesquely broken valley unfolding its wonders; the preacher constantly reminded of something he had seen in the Alps, or elsewhere in his travels, and overflowing with effusive exclamations punctuated with a laugh so loud and blarey that it fairly made his horse shy.

The preacher's laugh was the most strikingly odd expression of his strikingly odd personality—a sort of hand-forged laugh that did not seem to come into existence naturally; a kind of sarcastic exclamation point that exploded at untimely and most unexpected intervals in his conversation.

As they passed the spot where the sadly winsome face of the mountain girl had flared forth from the copse that morning and he had picked up Uncle Nick's trail, Jack Warhope, sitting his horse as only a man trained to the saddle can and riding for the most part in silence, darted a quick look into the bushes—a look that quite escaped the others.

The one girl and the two men—a combination of infinite possibilities—had reached the point where the road left the hollow and picked its way through the broken passes of the bluffs to the uplands, when the preacher stopped his horse and sat gazing up and across the narrow valley.

One Type of Snake

Perhaps the only snake of importance that has been recorded in Porto Rico is of the boa-constrictor type. This can be partially explained by the fact that owing to the density of population many forms of animal life that once occurred are now extinct. It is known that this fact is true of some of the forms of bird life.

The manatee or sea cow is found rarely, and turtles are rare except in the east end of the island, where the hawk's-bill and green turtles are found. The lizards, on the other hand, are very prevalent. There are ten common types of lizards, ranging from the small tree lizard to the larger ground lizards.

Quickly Measures Crops

A measuring instrument for attaching to an automobile by which the linear measurement of fields in various crops bordering on highways can be easily and quickly made has been devised by the United States Department of Agriculture. Successful experiments have been made with the instrument, which will be used in a number of states during the current year.

To Grow Eucalyptus

The culture of eucalyptus trees may be largely extended in this country if experiments now being conducted by the United States forest service prove successful. A forest service scout recently found a species of the eucalyptus known as the "Snow Gum," growing in Australia under conditions that are fatal to the usual varieties of the tree. The "Snow Gum" is said to be able to withstand freezing temperature as low as 16 degrees below zero. The tree is now being raised at the forest service station at Asheville, N. C., and if it survives winter conditions other trees of the same species will be used to plant arid slopes in the Southwest where native trees have difficulty in becoming established.

Age 31 Has Tragic Meaning for Average Man or Woman

U. S. Life Tables show health span extends only from 18 to 31—Earnings fall off rapidly after 40

Physical freedom and full vigor—what are they worth to you? This is a question the average American can answer from his own bitter experience—for at age 31 the average American begins to slip. After 40 his earning power drops off rapidly. These appalling facts are shown by the United States Life Tables, 1920.

Age 31! The age at which men and women should be entering their period of greatest usefulness and happiness! The beginning of the supposed "prime of life."

Not the prime of life. The age of decay! What causes contribute to this fearful condition?

Unwise eating. Sleeplessness. The loading of the body with drug stimulants, which appear to give added energy, but actually borrow this energy from the body's own reserve.

Every school child is taught to avoid stimulants. Most mothers enforce the no-coffee rule for children. Then comes maturity—and the squandering of the reserve strength which the body has stored up. Figures show that the average American is able to stand the pace just 13 years. Then, with half his life yet before him, he hits the down grade.

Medical literature classifies caffein as a poison. Like strychnin, it is sometimes by doctors given in cases of heart failure. The average cup of coffee contains the usual dose of caffein administered in these cases.

Coffee contributes no nourishment to the body. Its only virtues, as a beverage, are its warmth and flavor. A hot, appetizing, drugless drink is a benefit with every meal.

People in 2,000,000 American homes enjoy such a drink in Postum. A drink with the rich, mellow, full flavor and fragrance of roasted whole wheat and bran—flavor which people in 2,000,000 homes like better than any other.

Try Postum for thirty days—you can't expect to rid yourself of the effect of a habit of years in a day or two. Know that you are enjoying a drink which contributes, rather than robs, reserve strength. We will give you—free—a full week's supply of Postum to start you on your thirty-day test.

Ask for either Postum Cereal (the kind you boil) or Instant Postum, the easiest drink in the world to prepare. Either kind costs less than most other hot drinks. KILL PHEASANTS

Bird Damage Corn Fileds, Farmers Retaliate

Alylison, Ia., May 29.— Here a new way to get a crowd in town—have some farmer arrested for killing a pheasant. A hundred or more farmers of the community northeast of Clarksville were in Allison last Wednesday afternoon in support of Howard Riden, who had been hailed before Justice Geo. R. Dennis by a game warden charged with the terrible crime of shooting a Chinese Pheasant. Riden claims the pheasants were playing havoc in his corn field and that he had caught them in the act of pulling up young shoots just coming through the ground. He shot the bird and the game warden happened along soon afterward and ordered him to appear here for preliminary hearing, Wednesday afternoon.

Justice Dennis litened to evidence from a few of the hundred witnesses and dismissed the case forthwith. Many farmers are complaining about the pheasants destroying large patches of their corn fields.

IS THE AVERAGE MAN BETTER OFF?

It is sometimes stated that the wonderful progress of business and science does not help the average run of people very much. It adds to the number of the wealthy, but it is claimed that the wage earners and the less successful business and professional men are pretty much where they were twenty-five years ago. Let the average man consider hi own condition compared with the way his parents lived. In the great majority of cases he is living in a better home. The majority of people have modern sanitary equipment that removes many disease dangers. They have improved medical and health service, and avoid many illnesses.

Labor saving devices have greatly reduced work. The majority of people used to have to lug water from wells. Today the majority have running water in their homes. A great deal of work has been saved by improved lighting, heating and cooking systems, and other conveniences. A multitude of people whose parents could never afford to own the most decrepit kind of horse are now riding in automobiles. Toil is lightened by amusements and diversions within reach of the masses. The people who used to wear themselves out by monotony and drudgery of their live are now kept cheerful by the movie and other shows, and by phonographs, radio music, etc. The educational opportunities have been broadened. The family that in former years could just barely read and write probably today has young people in the high school or college, going on to lift the family to prosperity. With all such gains, people are not working as hard. It is doubtful if the average wage earner gives half a much physical energy as his father did. But mechanical inventions make it possible for him to do more. Thus modern progress does wonders for the average person. — Traer Star Clipper.

DEATH OF THOMAS CASHMAN

Died at His Goodell Home of Cancer of the Stomach

The death of Tom Cashman occured at his home at Goodell Thursday, May 22. Death was quite sudden, Mr. Cashman having been confined to the house, but about a week. He was a long time resident of Goodell from where he moved to Polo, Ill. where he lived a few years returning to his Goodell home three years ago where he died. He leaves his wife and five children all of whom were with him at the time of his death. His sons Frances and Sylvester and his daughter live in Chicago while Carroll and Gertrude are still at home, Caroll having been a graduate of the Goodell High School this year, Gertrude of the eighth grade.

The funeral was held at the Catholic church Saturday morning. Rev. Father Eardly officiating. Interment made Belmond cemetery. The sympathy o the community goes out to the family in their bereavement.

STRAWBERRY NEEDS MOISTURE

Therefore Weed Competition Hinders Berry Production

Strawberry plants need all the moisture they can get and, consequently, do not do well with the competition of weed.

All weeds, many of them grown from seeds in mulching material, should be removed as soon as possible. Clover, timothy, wheat and weeds are all equally out of place in the strawberry bed.

The small grower has a reliable variety in the Dunlap, says C. V. Holversinger, extension professor of horticulture at Iowa State College. It is a splendid plant maker and the berries carry about the right texture to suit the palate of berry lover. The berries are quite soft for commercial use and must be hustled to market in refrigerator cars.

Folks who grow good berries frequently lose money by indifferent picking and packing. The stems should be pinchtd off rather than by grasping the fruit and mashing it in the picking proces. Ripe fruit should not be picked in large pails or pans. Containers of one or two quart size are less apt to cause crushing of the fruit.

Picking should be done every other day in order to prevent the fruit from becoming too ripe. When the last of the berries are harvested, the vines should be mowed and most of th old mulch carried from the bed. The row can then be cut down to a width of six inches with a plow. The ridge remaining should then be thinned. The space between the rows should be worked at intervals.

A few rows of berries may be transplanted even a late as June. When effecting a change, as much earth should be left on the clump of plants as possible. If the soil is dry, it will be well to water each plant at the time of transplanting. Beds can be put out after the crop has been picked and such plants will be far enough along by fall to withtand soil freezes.

SIX MILES A MINUTE

A record, it is believed ,in high head water-wheel design has been reported from Switzerland, where water flowing at the rapid rate of 540 feet a second. which is six miles a minute, has been harnessed to hydro electric turbines . Specially designed nozzles are used, the stream from which is only 1 3-8 inches in diamter and has the strength and rigidjty, as it isue forth of a olid bar of steel.

Persistent Advertising

Benefits the Advertiser And the Public as Well--

The advantage of advertising lies in the ability of the advertiser to place his goods before the people when they are most apt to want his merchandise.

The advertising columns of the newspapers are a certain index of the successful busines houses of a city or town. The rule holds good in every metropolis in the civilized world. Printers' ink made thousands of men rich. The bold advertisers are the successful business men. Those who launch out and scatter facts and figures, keeping their business ever before the people, never relaxing, never retreating, but always pressing forward, pushing ahead, never to regret "lost opportunities" or "what might have been" but unbounded success is theirs, to which the world pays homage.

Many a success is attributed to luck or a favorite of fortune when the real source of success was through the channel of judicious, persistent advertising.

Everybody may know you are in business but do they know what you sell and what you are selling it for? Or are they passing right by your place of business and paying more for an article than you are selling it for, because they do not know what your prices are?

Think it over.

MEN WILL HAVE TO HIDE THEIR SUNDAY BREECHES

The men will coon have too look well to their wearing apparel or go in natures costume. What with, grandmother, matrons, and maidens monopolizing the barbershops so a lowly man cannot get a shave or hair cut, and then the aping of man's wearing apparel by numerous females to such an extent that man will soon have to hide his Sunday Breeches or have them on dress parade not occupied by himself.—Corwith Hustler.

"Were you a good boy at the party?"

Johnny: "Yes mama."

"And you didn't ask twice for any thing at the table."

"No, I didn't; I asked once, and as they didn't hear me I helped myself."

Locals

Bert Mathews leaves soon for Penn sylvania where he will visit for a couple of months with his sister. Bert manages to take a good trip every year. Emil Patet will take his place behind the counter at the Wellemeyer Store during hi absence.

Ralph Blank and family drove from Esterville Saturday for a Sunday visit at the Tom Blank home. Miss Marie Blank accompanied them home as she will attend summer school at Esterville. The school at Esterville is a branch of the State Teachers College of Cedar Falls.

Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Hesselhuus, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hake, and Miss Rich of Algona, drove to Rochester Sunday. Dr. Hesselhuus remained there at the hospital to take treatments. Miss Rich will stay with Mrs. Hesselhuus while Dr. Hesselhuus is at the hospital.

A large number of friends of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Koerner gathered at their home last Thursday evening as a surprise on Mrs. Koerner, it being her birthday. All enjoyed a dance in Koerner's barn after which a lunch was served. Mrs. Koerner was presented with a nice gift. All report a good time.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Greismer and Mr. Ed. Eteil of Garner were visitors at the John Gruetzmacher and P. M. Greismer home last Friday.

Miss Annetha Schuldt of Reinbeck visited friends at Klemme last week.

Tthe young people of the Methodist Church enjoyed an Epwroth League social at the Church lawn last Tuesday evening. After the games came the buiness meeting of the League. New officers were elected and plans made to start a real live young people's Epwroth League in Klemme. Very nice refreshments were served at the close of the meeting. Everyone reports a fine time.

These news items were unavoidably left out of last week's issue but are still of interest to our readers—

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jacob from Adel, were visitors at the George Kessler home Sunday.

Mr. and Mr. Henry Bruns from Algona were visitors at the George Kessler home Sunday.

It turned cold enough last Friday morning to freeze a thin coat of ice.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Jorgenson of Garner, spent Sunday at the R. A. Jorgenson home.

John Suurballe was in town Saturday renewing acquaintances. John says he has been so busy in the treasurer's office that he has not had any time to campaign.

J. M. (Jack) Newberger returned Wednesday from the Mercy Hospital at Mason City where he had an operation for appendicitis some time ago. He is gaining nicely and will be his normal self soon.

Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Mitchell; W. C. Keraus and family; C. G. Waterman and family and R. A. Jorgenson and family, were entertained at the C F. Kerau cottage at Clear Lake Sunday evening.

The band concert Sunday was enjoyed by a large number of people from near and far. Cars were parked on all four sides of the park and the park benches were filled, so there must have been six or seven hundred pople present. A band is the best means a community can have for entertaining a crowd.

The fight against smoke has been going on for more than 900 years. In 1316, a royal proclamation was issued forbidding the use of coal in London on account of the "noisome" smell. In 1580, the use of coal was prohibited by Queen Elizabeth in London while Parliament was in session, because the "health o the knights of the shires might suffer during their abode in the metropolis. A large number of American cities now have smoke ordinances which are rigidly enforced.

PLANS MADE FOR SOLDIER BONUS

Sum Set Apart to Cover Expenditure for Next Fiscal Year.

Washington.—Appropriations totaling $131,943,138 for expenditures for the soldier bonus during the fiscal year 1925, which begins this July, are included in a deficiency bill reported to the house from the committee on appropriations.

The items include $100,000,000 for the sinking fund, $26,629,398 for adjusted service pay and dependent pay, $3,600,000 for administrative expenses of the War department, $1,188,500 for administrative expenses of the veterans' bureau, $450,000 for administrative expenses of the Navy department and $75,240 for administrative expenses of the general accounting office.

The $26,629,398 includes $8,178,174 for cash payments to those entitled to less than $50.

The deficiency bill will be passed by both houses before adjournment. The total carried by the bill for all purposes is $158,196,417.89, which is $1,898,408.15 less than recommended by the budget bureau.

Michigan Youth Dies; Five in Suicide Pact

Pontiac, Mich.—A suicide pact among five prominent high school boys, humiliated by a teacher's reprimand, startled the city.

Three of the boys backed down, another attempted his life, while the fifth, Joseph Muse, fifteen, carried through his resolve, dying a few minutes after he had swallowed poison.

School authorities will not discuss the pact at all. The shock of Muse's death has frightened and silenced every one. That five boys, intelligent and carefree, should solemnly swear to snuff out their lives upset temporarily at least the elaborate preparations the school is making for graduation exercises, and is a mystery to every one.

Pray for Dry Planks in Party Platforms

Washington.—Prayers will be delivered all over the country to keep "wet" or "damp" planks out of the platforms of the two major political parties under plans announced by the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, representing 11 women's organizations. Messages have been sent to Protestant ministers requesting that a brief period be devoted to silent prayer, and that this be supplemented by other exercises relevant to the subject.

Britain Will Spend Billions for Housing

London. — Thousands of British househunters who have been looking for permanent lodgings since the end of the war now have the new hope of finding homes within 15 years at least if the labor government's scheme to erect houses costing £1,376,000,000 ($5,816,800,000) is carried out. Ninety thousand houses are planned for erection in 1925, increasing to 225,000 annually during the period from 1934 to 1939, the cost to be distributed over 40 years.

Saskatchewan to Vote on Prohibition Again

Regina, Sask.—On Wednesday, July 16, a popular vote to determine whether Saskatchewan will remain bone dry or will permit liquor to be sold for beverage purposes under a system of government control will be recorded. The decision to submit the question to a popular vote was reached in the last session of the legislature, following receipt of a petition containing more than 80,000 signatures asking for a plebiscite.

Detroiter Wins Race on Motor Speedway

Indianapolis, Ind.—Joe Boyer, millionaire sportsman of Detroit, won the greatest race that has ever been staged on the Indianapolis motor speedway when he stepped from his new Dusenberg special to a team mate's car and drove it to a new track record at an average of 94.24 miles an hour for the 500 miles. Cooper was second in the race, with Murphy third and Hartz fourth.

TORNADOES KILL 41 IN SOUTHERN STATES

Second Disaster in Month Hits Dixie.

Atlanta, Ga.—Forty-one persons are known to have been killed, more than half a hundred injured, some perhaps fatally, scores made homeless, and property damage estimated at more than $1,000,000 caused by windstorms which swept portions of Alabama and Mississippi for the second time in less than a month.

Probability that the death toll will be increased as lines of communication are restored is seen in reports of persons killed and missing which continue to trickle in over crippled wires.

In one or two cases whole communities were wiped out, while in every section touched by the disturbance a path of ruin and desolation was left, marked by razed dwellings and farm buildings, damaged highways, and disrupted telephone and telegraph facilities. Railroad traffic is impeded in certain areas.

Driving rain which accompanied the twisters in most of the stricken communities swelled streams to overflowing and added to the havoc wrought by the storm.

With 21 dead in Mississippi and 20 in Alabama, both states set about relief and reconstruction work aided by the American Red Cross and local relief agencies. Local headquarters of the Red Cross sent several consignments of supplies to the stricken areas and said they were prepared to fill all orders.

Girl With Baby Holds Up Bank; Flees; Caught

Farmington, Ill. — Balancing her baby on her arm with one hand and brandishing a big revolver in her other, Norma Anderson, eighteen, a country girl, walked into the A. C. Steenburg bank here, held up the president, cashier and two other employees, and escaped with $1,500 in cash. She made her getaway in a taxicab, threatening the driver with her weapon. She was arrested by the police of Hanna City. All the stolen money was recovered.

Wild Opening for the Reichstag; Battle of Songs

Berlin.—A war of song between the Communists' "Internationale" and Ludendorff's National Socialist Libertyites singing "Deutschland Uber Alles" brought the opening session of the new German reichstag to an abrupt end, Deputy Beck, by virtue of being the oldest member, was temporarily acting as president. Being unable to cope with the disorder, he slapped his hat on his head and walked out, automatically adjourning the session

Deputies Hoot Yugo-Slav King and Cry "Republic"

Belgrade. — "Vive republic!" was cried for the first time in the Yugo-Slav chamber of deputies, when the opposition leader, M. BILL RESTORING NAVY IS ADOPTED

Butler's Special Measure Resurrecting Fleet Passes House, 166 to 138.

Washington.—The house passed a bill designed to bring the American navy up to the 5-3-3 ratio fixed by the Washington arms conference. The vote was 166 to 138. As sent to the senate, the measure would authorize construction of eight scout cruisers, six river gunboats, and extensive improvements to six battleships at a total estimated cost of $111,000,000. Approval was given a provision for the expenditure of $18,360,000 for converting to oil burners six coal burning battleships and affording them additional protection against submarine and aircraft.

The measure was introduced by Chairman Butler of the navy committee at the request of the Navy department.

An unsuccessful effort was made by Representative Britten (Ill.), ranking Republican on the naval committee, to provide $6,500,000 for the elevation of guns on 13 battleships. The proposal was opposed by Chairman Butler, who declared it would violate the arms conference treaty. It was rejected, 74 to 54.

Contrary to the expectation of some members no effort was made to amend the bill to authorize the construction of two additional airplane carriers.

In all $18,360,000 would be used for conversion of the battleships New York, Texas and Florida, Utah, Arkansas and Wyoming, from coal burners to oil burners and for the installation of additional protective devices against submarines and air attacks. These ships were among the 13, Mr. Britten asserted should have gun elevation, the others being the battleships New Mexico, Mississippi, Idaho, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Nevada and Oklahoma.

LaFollette Is Virtually Out for the Presidency

Washington.—Vigorously denouncing the St. Paul convention scheduled for June 17 as being controlled by the Communists, Robert M. LaFollette virtually announced his own candidacy for President as an independent. Petitions for puting his name on the ballots of the various states, with electors, are being sent out from Chicago, it was learned, and it is expected that millions of signatures will be obtained.

U. S. Balloon Mail Over Atlantic This Summer

Lakehurst, N. J.—The American dirigible ZR-3, now nearing completion in a German factory, will be put into transatlantic mail service this summer, said Admiral Moffat, chief of the bureau of naval aeronautics, who visited the naval air station with Secretary of the Navy Wilbur. The ZR-3 will operate between Lakehurst and London, the admiral said, to prove the commercial practicability of rigid dirigibles.

Postal Pay Raise Is Approved in Senate

Washington.—The Edge postal pay bill was passed by the senate by a vote of 73 to 3. The bill contained a rider ordering wide publicity for all political campaign contributions. The bill itself provides for raises amounting to $65,000,000 in postal pay. The dissenting votes were cast by Senator Borah of Idaho, Senator Fess of Ohio and Senator Willis of Ohio. Senator Borah's vote was against the pay raise, as he is the author of the rider.

Eight Known Dead in New Oklahoma Tornado

sed Quartz As Aid to Health

Healing Ultra-Violet Independent of Sun.

e all know that exclusion of light s in the blanching of plants," Doctor Bovie. "They may become succulent for table purposes, but tissues are not stout and well oped. This is because calcium hosphorus salts are not deposit- the absence of the ultra-violet n sunlight.

milarly, if babies are submitted e same absence of sunlight, or of violet rays, their bones do not and hence rickets set in. This common disease, how common is not generally realized. It is perhaps little realized, either, that it is prevalent among the babies of the well-to-do who are not allowed to play in the streets.

"Remember that playing in the sun, behind window glass, does not expose the children to these beneficial rays. However, quartz windows which do admit these rays are now entirely within the bounds of possibility as a result of Mr. Berry's work.

The Havoc of Rickets.

"But to get back to rickets. Autopsies on babies in Dresden showed that of those who were born in the fall and died in the spring, 96 per cent had rickets. Of those who were born in the spring and died in the fall only a very small percentage had rickets. The babies born in the spring were outdoors in the sunlight during the summer."

After remarking that the sun's effects could be obtained on cloudy days by the use of quartz bulbs, Doctor Boyle added: "Certain foods act sympathetically to sunlight. It is not inconceivable that we could light our restaurants with sources of ultra-violet light so that while partaking of foods rich in phosphorus and calcium we could partake of light energy that would enable us to utilize these salts in normal manner.

"There are diseases other than rickets which are due to faulty metabolism, the 'machine gun sneeze' is one. Such diseases might be alleviated by feeding calcium lactate and using ultra-violet light in connection with it.

"Altogether, the availability of quartz suggests very interesting possibilities. With Doctor Little we are undertaking the investigation of the effects of the ultra-violet rays on the calcium metabolism of milch cows. The object, of course, is to see if the rays can have any effect on the milk we feed our babies. It is not improbable. Other animals feel the effect of the lack of these rays. Deep-sea fish do not produce bones, though living in water prodigally saturated with calcium salts. Fish of the same species living in the upper water, where the sun rays strike through, have bones in profusion.

Ultra-Violet Rays for Poultry.

"Likewise poultrymen in the North are unable to grow chickens for early market satisfactorily. In the darkness of long winters the chickens suffer from 'weak legs.' This is nothing but rickets and ultra-violet rays cure them. Hughes of the Kansas experiment station exposed hens to ultra-violet rays ten minutes a day and doubled their egg production. Further, the weight of the individual egg was increased 20 per cent.

"I am personally convinced that pine trees in our forests, deprived of light, suffer from rickets just as humans do. We shall hang ultra-violet quartz lights about the woods in the course of our experiments and see what the result is."

Doctor Bovie pointed out that the employment of ultra-violet rays is not new, that they were used by Egyptians, Romans and Greeks, but that their chemical nature was not known. Their identification and control are of recent accomplishment. Among others, Finsen in Copenhagen succeeded in curing a skin form of tuberculosis and in showing the beneficial effects in the treatment of smallpox.

"In America, however, progress has been retarded and some such event as the production of this quartz has been needed to redirect attention to the subject," said Dr. Bovie. "American doctors did not understand the scientific side of ultra-violet therapy. Its use developed into a bad form of quackery. Apparatus called ultra-violent lamps which did not emit any of the rays Finsen relied upon were used. The result has been that many reputable physicians of America have refused to have anything to do with it."

Essence of Sunlight the Year Round.

Those conducting experiments with fused quartz point out that if the new quartz merely makes it possible eventually for the average home to have the essence of sunlight, artificial or natural, the year round, in bad weather and good, its meaning in health to countless thousands who, "grown under glass" have been deprived of the beneficial qualities of sunlight, heat excepted, is likely to prove measureless. It is believed that the action of the ultra-violet ray is sufficiently well known to make this possibility a prediction and that indoor living, or residence in regions overcast for long periods, need not be so hazardous in the future. If the views of some scientists are to be accepted, Mr. Berry will be regarded as the man who made "perpetual sunshine" possible.

"There are now opened possibilities of studying the effect of ultra-violet rays on the fundamental instinct of migration and hibernation and upon the inherited characters of animals and plants," according to President Little. "It will be possible also to compare the effect of ultra-violet and X-rays on identical material.

"Also, the fact that strains of mice at the university's laboratory have long been used for research with cancer lays open a field of prospective value in the relation between ultra-violet rays and biology and medicine."

"Wonder Child" Puzzle to Russian Physicians

Moscow.—Soviet Russia has produced a "wonder child," a boy four years and ten months old, named Victor, son of a Vladivostok physician, who already wears a full beard of whiskers and is able to throw a full-grown man in a wrestling match. The learned professor, Leontief, and his colleague, Doctor Bosik, who examined Victor, speak about hypertrophical development, the thyroid, pancreatic and other glands and a "mysterious malady" from which the child is suffering. But Victor continues to grow despite them and their treatment. The precocious infant, who walks stiffly and stumblingly, plays like a child and has a child's mentality, yet he can choke his small playmates black faced. He puzzles professors as the great country where he was born puzzles Western theorists.

ORD ONCE A SPEED DEMON

Few persons know that Henry rd probably was better know as a e car driver back in 1902 than as anufacturer, for it was about this mat his famous "999" car did ile at the then terrific speed of raction under a minute, with Ford the steering wheel . This record ich stood for years was made on mile straight-way course long the Lake St. Claire, near Detroit. Lat- when Ford couldn't participate a match race jn Detroit, Barney ldfield, then a mechanic covered mile in 55 seconds with the "999". hen officials doubted the accuracy the timing, Oldfield went around e more, this time in 54 and 3-5 conds. In 1903 a 20-horsepower rd won the international race in w York over best odds of 20 to it. Ford beieves he was e first licensed motor car driver the U. S. CALIFORNIA PITIFUL SIGHT TO IOWAN

Thousands of people are without work in California apartment houses and other residences are empty by the hundreds, according to a letter written by Cora Brett of Mason City to a friend.

Here is the letter in part:

The thing which grips the heart strings and tugs until the tears come is to see the thousands of people who have sold out homes and arrived in the land of sunshine with perhaps a few hundred dollars, many with less, and then find that they can get no work.

If they do get work jt is at a very meagre wage due to the fact that many are willing to work cheap, to barely live.

"Soon the money is gone, they have stayed on, hoping from day to day—hundreds of hundreds of them —in the auto camps, where one room is furnjshed, many of the families able only to sleep in the room; others find room to eat there, but a great many cok outside in the open ajr just as the Indians did in early days. The children are barefooted and all of them ragged. Every city has its slums, but somehow this strick me as very differnt.

"A large number of these people never expected to be reduced to this I assume. But now how to get back over all these thousands of acres of desert to where nature takes care of the country is a serious problem. Hundreds of people are coming into Los Angeles every day ,called by the boosting and advertiing of the city." —Globe Gazette.

The Little Things

By Lucile N. Tate

It is the little things that count so much—
The half-forgotten fragment of a song,
The memory of twilight hours, the touch
Of friendly fingers— warm and kind and strong.

A verse we read and dreamed with for a while,
The funny, futile games of child hood years,
All pass in swife review; and tho we smile,
The simle is touched with just a glint of tears.

These are the precious things of memory,
The pictures in the scrap-book of the heart—
The book whose pages we love so to see,
Faint jmage that tear the soul apart!
Some eyes perhaps would smile to know that such
As these few little things could count so much.

KEEP TOMATO CROP COMING

If tomatoes are grown from seed, they should bein at least two plantings, says C. V. Holsinger, extension garden specialist, Iowa State College

It is well to put out one lot of very early and one lot of medium early varieties as soon as it is safe to plant, thus insuring good plump representatives of the fruit thruout the season. The large number of lovers of tomatoe preserves will do well to add a few specimens propapated for this purpose.

Seed for the econd planting should e started about June 1 and the specimens should be in full fruit in from 85 to 100 days. The object of the second planting is to secure good specimens for table use and for canning. Soil of ordinary fertility is best. Under too rich conditions the vegetable may not fjll out properly.

To provide clean fruit, free from worms and cracks plant the seeds in rows 24 inches apart , allowing each plant about three main stems, and the train of vines on stakes or trellises. This insures better specimens of fruit and higher yjeld per plant.

For early lot grow plants, Earljanas, Chalks' Jewel and June Pink are reccommended — only for table use however. The main planting should include Bonny Best, John Bear, Matchless, Stone, for red specimens; Globe, Truckers and Ponderosa, for meaty and good keeping variety, is desirable or the first of June planting.

170 ACRE FARM IS GIVEN UNIVERSITY

One of the largest gifts that has ever been received by the University of Iowa was gjven at Iowa City last Thurday by W. O. and E. C. Finkine, brothers of Des Moines.

The donation was 170 acres of land bordering on the west of he land bordering on the west of the is to bec alled "Finkbine field," and used as a playing field.

An eighteen hole golf course is already being laid out in the field. The new addition will greatly faciliate the developemen of intra-mural ath ics at the university.

Other gifts presented by alumni includes a bust of former Governor arrabee, presented by Mrs. Williajm Larrabee, and a collection of paintings from abou fifty paintings by he donor and several original classics and copies which he got in Europe.

WIND. MEASURING INSTRUMENT TO HAVE NEW STANDARD

A new standard anemometer more accurate than the older instrument which has been in use in America during the past 70 years, and corections to be applied to records now existing are results of an investigation in which the bureau of standards cooperated with the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture. It is expected that the new standard will be adopted as soon as apparatus now in use cn be modified and replaced. In advance of publication of the complete investigatjon, which will occur at an early date, a description including plans of the new anemometer is in preparation and will be supplied to anyone interested in the use, contruction and maufacture of these instruments. The new standards of wind instruments should be of great importanct to meteorologists, engineers, and others desiring data more accurate than any availble up to the present time.

The investigation was one of a number made by means of modern wind tunnels in which arc rents move with velocities exceeding 150 miles an hour and controllable within 1 percent, are producted artificially. Patterson, of Canada; Brazier, of France and Fergusson and Covert, of the United States Weather Bureau have determined independently the rates of about 100 anemometers, comprising all patterns likely to be useful at velocities throughout the range of natural wind. It may be said that the differences between the old and new standards are unimportant at velocities below 8 miles an hour, but increase at higher velocities.

PHEASANTS CAUSING LOSS TO SOME FARMERS

The writer has heard at different times of the damage that is done in some places by the pheasants and has the authority of several prominent farmers that much damage has been done in some parts. Onefarmer told us Sunday that he had ten acres entirely ruined by them and said it would be no use to replant jt as it would be destroyed again as soon as the birds could get it. What to do is a hard question for it is illegal to kill them. These birds are rapidly multjplying and some action may have to be taken to prevent further loss to the farmer.—Parkersburg Eclipse.

HANCOCK FARMERS HOLD ANNUAL PICNIC

The annual meeting of the Hancock county farm mureau was held on the camp grounds south of Garner, Thursday and was a sucess. Some 2000 were in attendance and more would have been excepting for showers and threatening cloud.

Graduating exercises for the rural eighth grade was held in the forenoon when the fine appearance of these children from farm homes was a notable feature.

A picnic djnner at the noon hour with free coffee for all was followed by a farm bureau program. Music by the Garner band under the leadership of Harry B. Keeler was well received as also was a piano instrumental and v cal solo by Miss Margaret McCrodin of Forest City and as ong by the children of Ell center school under the direction of Mjss McCrodlin. The main address was given by Charles Hearst, president of the state farm bureau federation. Mr. Hearst emphasized the importance of organized effort along political lines to secure farm legislation. Mr. Hearst commended the work of the legislative committee majntained by the bureau of Des Moines , the past winter.

TITONKA GRAVELLING PROJCET NEARLY DONE

The ten miles of gravel from Titonka south to the pavement two miles wes of Wesley are expected to be completed soon, there having been less than two miles to be hauled and leveled according to Rasmus Hansen. the county treasurer.

Th contract was let the latter part of April to Kimball of Clear Lake and the work was started around the first of May. Kimball as eight trucks of his own and from n to twelve hired gravel trucks on the job most of the time. Theg ang also graveled several of the side stree s of Wesley. The gravel was hauled from the old Lloyd pit west of Hutchins and from the pjt located on the Pete Swartz farm south of Titonka.

HUNTERS CAPTURE THREE WOLF CUBS

About forty farmers between Galt and Dows engaged jn a wolf-hunt the morning after election and were uccessful in capturing three cubs. ne were brought to the auditor's ced by Thos. who received a bounty of $4.00 each. All of the cubs were chased into a drain tile and two of the dug out. A trap was set for the third and after about twenty fours he came out and sprung the ap as he emerged from the tile. It is claimed that nearly a dozen wolves jnhabit the above neighborhood and they have been doing considerable damage.

AN ESSAY ON PANTS

By Willie

Pants are made for men and not for women.

Women are made for men and not for pants.

When a man pants for a woman and a woman pants for a man, that makes a pair of pants.

Pants are like molasses; they are thinner in hot wether and thicker in cool weather.

There has been much discussion as to whether pants is singular or plural; but it seems to us that when men wear pants it's plural, and when they don't, it's singular.

Pants i singular at the top and are plural at the bottom.

If you want to make the pants last, make the coat first.

CONTINUOUS AIR MAIL BY JULY

One-Cent an Hour Will Take Letter Across Continent in 24 Hours, 8 Cents One-Third of Way, 16 Cents Two-Thirds of Distance — No Extra Postage for Cities Off Route— Red White and Blue Mail Boxes for Letters—Beacons Guide Night Fliers.

Continuous transcontinental air-mail service will become a reality by July 1. At noon of that day a postal service flier will take off from New York, arrivjng at Chicago at sundown. There another mail pilot will take off this cargo of mail and pursue the setting sun. When darkness falls, he will be guided by a line of searchlight beacons 1,000 miles long, between Chjcago and Cheyenne, Who.

Coming into Cheyenne at sunrise, the second pilot will be succeeded by a third who will wing tahe rest of the way over the rupped tops of the Rockies and Sierras and land in San Fransisco before sunet. At the same time a relay of three other mail pilots will be making the eastbound trip.

As it is upon the night flying between Chicago and Cheyenne that the fate of this cross-the-continent air-mail service depends, automatic acetyline lamps have been placed every 3 miles. Every 25 miles there is an emergency landing field, equipped with a revolving electric earch light. At intervals of 250 miles are regular landing fields of searchlight beacons of 500 milijon candle-power, casting their beams 150 miles.

The route has been divided into 3 zones—between New York and Chicaga; Chicago and Cheyenne; and Cheyenne and San Franciso. An 8-cent stamp will carry a letter anywhere within one zone, a 16-cent stamp within two zones and a 24-cent stamp within three zones. Letters for cities off the air-mail route will not require extra postage. They will be taken from the planes at the nearest point to their destination and sent from there by train. Special air-mail post boxes, now under construction, will be painted red, white, and blue and be visited regularly by a special collector.

An auxiliary air-mail ervice has been in operation for several years. Its duty chiefly has been to pick up belated letters, overtaking mail trains which had left the day before, letting the traine carry this mail the rest of the way. Now we are to have continuous air-mail across the continent and the Amerjcan eagle spread a wider wig.

GOOD ROADS HELP FARMER

Farmers living on or near hard roads are discovering that they can hitch one good team to two loads of corn, wheat, hay or whatever they have to sell and go to market easier than they formerly did with one load hitched to the same team. Even good gravel roads in condition permit the hauling of much heavier load than on the old dirt roads. Farmers find that by buying another new wagon, they can cut their distance from market in half, and one man can to the haulink formerly requiring two. By hauling salt, lumber, new farm equipment, etc., on the return trip, the profit in time and labor gained from good roads is again increased.

Motorcar For Every Four Persons In Iowa

Cedar Rapid Republican— Iowa stays well in the lead in the number of automobiles per capita. She is exceeded only by California which has one motor vehicle for every three persons. Iowa has one for every four. NewYork, Pennsylvania, and Maryland each have one automobile for 9 persons, and the state of Alabama come in last in the list with one for every 19 persons, Iowa ranks ninth in the number of total registratjons, New York, California, Ohio and Pennsylvania having over a million, Michigan, Texas and Indiano coming next and then Iowa wth 571,061 registrations.

The fewest are in Nevada which has but 3,583. The figures are a strong tetimonal to the wealth and the comfort jn this state, although Senator Brookhart's speeches have led some other states to believe that Iowa is on the verge of being 'broke'.

Words Failed to Express Benefit Received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Greenville, Texas. — "Words cannot express how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. Every month I would have cramps and headache, and I felt like I was freezing to death. I suffered in this way from the time I was a young girl, and all the doctors said was 'operation. For months I had a tired, sleepy feeling all day, and when night would come I would be so nervous I couldn't stay in bed. Our druggist recommended the Vegetable Compound to my husband and he bought four bottles. I have taken every one and I think I have a right to praise your medicine."—Mrs. J. B. HOLLEMAN, 2214 E. Nerves Warn Woman of Earth's Shocks

"An Englishwoman of peculiar sensitiveness has for many years past been able to report almost every earthquake in all parts of the world before any news came in," writes Prof. H. H. Turner in the Quarterly Review.

"She suffers from a curious nervous tension, as though under the influence of electricity, which almost incapacitates her while it lasts, but leaves suddenly. She has consulted several doctors, but none of them has been able to relieve her."

The woman had a "bad attack" on September 9 last year. On September 11 came news of a considerable shock in India two days previously.

"The testimony is unexceptionable and indicates a line of inquiry which has hitherto not been explored. It may supply unsuspected information both to seismology and to physiology."

WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness are oftentimes symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

"Talk" With Eyelids

Detectives in Canada are being taught a code by means of which they can communicate with one another by dropping, raising or other movements of the eyes, and also how to "talk" secretly by means of finger touches, by twisting of a cigar, fingering of a mustache and twiddling fingers behind the back. This is being done, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, so that they can transfer their thoughts when in the presence of criminals or prisoners. It is declared that communication with the eyelids can be as rapid as the ordinary man typewrites.

Appalling Problem Confronts Americans, Life Tables Show

Average health span extends only from age 18 to age 31—Earning power dwindles rapidly after 40

Health—physical freedom and full vigor—ends at age 31 for the average person. Maximum usefulness ends at 40. These facts, shown by the United States Life Tables, 1920, form the most appalling problem every human being has to face!

What are the years after 40 going to mean to you? Will they be worth living? Can you earn your way during those years?

Not if you are "the average individual." What sort of person is "the average individual" in America? He works hard. He eats unwisely. He loads his body with drug stimulants, which appear to give energy, but actually borrow this energy from his own reserve.

Age 31—and he begins to slip. The reserve strength which his body sought to store up against these later years, has bit by bit been robbed. Age 40—he suffers loss of income. Age 50—what?

Remember the simple laws of health which everyone learned in school. Avoid stimulants. Avoid the sleepless hours, upset digestion, warning headaches, taut nerves and muddy complexions which so often accompany the use of the drug caffein.

Caffein is classified as a poison. Like strychnin, it is sometimes given by doctors in cases of heart failure. The average cup of coffee contains the usual dose of caffein administered in such cases. The alarming foolishness of taking this poison regularly into the system is borne out by the frightful limitation of health and usefulness as compared with the length of life.

You need the digestive aid and comfort of a hot drink. You can get such a drink without drugs. You can get it with a flavor which millions of people consider more delicious than any other. You can get it in a form which contributes, rather than robs, reserve strength.

Those Fellows Who Think Out Winning Games

By JOHN SEFTON

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

AS THE car doors were closing a man, hatless, breathless an disheveled, dashed down the platform and forcibly wedged them open Following him came a second, wearing a plain uniform and a peaked cap. He caught the first man at the doors and strove to drag him backward. The train was already moving.

"Stop him!" yelled the pursuer. "He is an escaped—"

But the first man had gained the car, and clung, breathless and triumphant, to a strap, while the second, seeing that he could not drag back the fugitive, followed him.

"Say, what's the trouble?" demanded the conductor, coming through the throng of excited passengers. "You fellows might have been killed. Ain't you got no better sense than to do a thing like that?"

The first man had not yet recovered his breath, but the second gasped:

"I am an attendant from the insane asylum, and this man is an escaped lunatic. He had been there nine years—"

"Ten, you cur!" snapped the other, glaring at him.

"He was a trusty," said the pursuer bitterly. "He ran away this morning. As soon as we had found he had gone I was sent after him—and now I've got him."

"You have, have you!" sneered the other. "Well, you'll find out your mistaken, McCormick. I may be a lunatic in New York, but I am sane in Jersey until the courts decide otherwise, and don't you forget it."

"That's right!" "That's the boy!" "You're safe now!" ejaculated a score of passengers.

"I know," answered the fugitive. "I'm Jim Barnes, a sane man, and I'm not going back to New York with you."

Meanwhile the train after one or two stops, which added to the crowd and to the excitement also, was plowing its way into Hoboken station. As it slowed to a standstill the two men stepped off and stood glaring at each other, while the crowd gathered once more around them.

"Now, Jim," said the man in the cap, touching the other on the arm, "you come home like a good boy. There's stuffed turkey for supper, stuffed with creamed oysters."

"I say I'm sane," yelled the other to the crowd in exasperation. "Ten years they had me in that asylum, because my family wanted my property. I've never been insane for a moment. Do I look insane? Do I act insane? And I'm going to bring suit right away to secure my rights and punish the conspirators."

"You leave that fellow alone!" exclaimed a portly gentleman. "I'll see that justice is done, Mr. Barnes. Here is my card, and I shall be pleased to give evidence in your favor at any time."

"I wish you'd make him give me my watch," said Barnes, pointing to the gold chain which hung across the attendant's coat. "I left it behind me and I guess he picked it up. I want to pawn it. Those scoundrels got all my money."

"He's lying," declared the attendant. "That is my watch, and if any man touches it or lays a finger on me I'll have him arrested. And let me tell you," he continued, addressing the portly gentleman, "you'll be sorry for your part in this work."

"That's all right," jeered the portly man. "I'm a lawyer, and I don't think I'm altogether without influence in this community." He addressed the crowd again. "We can't touch that fellow's watch without proof that it was stolen," he said, "but no doubt you will all be glad to assist our friend to get shelter until something can be done for him."

He took off his hat, drew a fat wallet from his pocket, and extracted a twenty-dollar bill from it, placing it in the hat. "This is going to be the sweetener," he said.

Bills and silver coins rained into the hat from the sympathizing crowd that now filled the entire platform. Up and down went the portly gentleman with the hat, and he did not cease until it was nearly all full. Then he counted the amount of his collection.

"One hundred and nineteen dollars, ten cents," he announced. "I guess that this will give our friend here a more hopeful view of life."

"I couldn't take it," faltered the fugitive.

"Take it!" exclaimed the portly gentleman. "Of course you'll take it or I'll know the reason why. Come, now, put this into your pocket or I'll ram it down your throat."

The fugitive accepted the money with a shame-faced air, and the portly gentleman turned upon the attendant.

"Come, now, get out of here," he said, "and make no further trouble!"

The portly gentleman conducted his companion round several blocks and led him to the Tunnel station again, this time upon the opposite side. Upon this platform the asylum attendand was waiting.

"I thought you guys were never coming he growled.

"Ninety-nine dollars," said the portly gentleman, withdrawing his own bill from the loot. "That's thirty-three each. Not bad for a morning's work. But say! It's worth it, thinking out these new games every day."

"How picturesquely that cabin nestles there in the pocket of the hills."

"A man named Belden, and his sister, lives there," the girl said, following the direction of his upraised arm. "They're Kentucky mountain folks that jist moved in—they say the sister's quite pretty."

The preacher seemed to be studying the place, with its wild wealth of nature about it, his eyes straying at length from the cabin to its tumbled setting of cliffs and down along the opposite bluffs, mantled with half-sprung leaves, abloom with haw and dogwood and wild apple, until, as he twisted around in the saddle, the whole beautiful panorama of the narrow valley had passed in review before him back to the winding road by which they had entered.

As the girl followed his roving eyes, a black dead limb at the top of Eagle Oak, towering high above the quickening foliage, came into view. She raised her arm and pointed up and away to the lofty landmark.

"That's where the big gray eagle's be'n comin' every summer—sence white men first come t' the Flatwoods, I guess. Look—jist over the top o' that scrub poplar, stickin' up ag'nst that white cloud."

"I see it!" the man of books exclaimed, the simple gesture of pointing out to the distant landmark revealing the native grace that might still have been his but for the stooped and studious air that life had imposed upon him. "It stands out against the fluffy whiteness plain as a flagstaff."

"Nobody in the Flatwoods would think of harmin'—"

She stopped, with a low exclamation, for the woodsman had suddenly straightened in his saddle and had jerked his hand toward the cabin squatting against the bluffs up the hollow. The others followed the motion of his hand and sat staring.

Loge Belden's sister had appeared from behind the cabin and was running toward them. She had nearly reached the bushes that fringed what might be called the front of the yard, when Belden appeared in the open door. He threw up his hand and called out a word or two, which did not quite carry to the three riders.

The mountain girl stopped and hesitated; turned and went slowly back. Belden stood aside; she entered the door; Belden closed it.

Jack was watching the preacher. He saw his quick grip on the bridle rein; saw him stiffen in the saddle and glance uneasily about.

"Astonishing! Quite extraordinary!" escaped him as the tense brief drama closed.

"Mercy!" Texie exclaimed, "I never knowed she was—crazy."

"She ain't," the woodsman muttered.

The preacher glanced around at him; threw up his head and exploded his blarey laugh. It was a queer moment for a laugh, and a queer laugh for the moment.

"Not bad philosophy, that," he said. "People are not always as crazy as they—act."

That the preacher was acting, the woodsman fully believed, but the acting was just a shade overdone—a circumstance that could hardly escape such a man as Jack Warhope, particularly after the chance clues that had first set his suspicions going. Why he was acting and what part, the woodsman was not missing any chances to find out.

The three riders sat for some time looking toward the cabin in the pocket, Texie and the preacher discussing the astonishing drama that had flared up for its tense moment in the elbow of the hills.

But the drama evidently had but one act, and that act was closed. It seemed to the woodsman, as he covertly watched the preacher, lolling with overdone awkwardness in his saddle, that he showed just a shade of relief that it was closed.

The sun, a red warrior on the homeward trail, had journeyed far down the paling fastnesses of the sky; had ducked behind a huge cloud bank piled like a breastworks across the west. Presently, finding a loop-hole in the turreted cumuli, he glared back at the pursuing shadows; launched a shaft that fell spent and quivering upon Eagle run and shivered into glittering splinters upon the riffle.

Glum at the missped shaft, the red warrior took his eye from the loop-hole; drew farther back behind the massed fortifications; unstrung his bow. The pursuing shadows stole down the bluffs; dulled the water; dimmed the woods; waked the breeze and shook the wild apple twigs till the white blossoms snowed the grass—symbol of the hopes of men, that bloom, promise fruit, die.

The girl noticed the shadows. Her eyes left the cabin; glanced up and down the opposite bluff, where, under the brow of the wooded escarpment, objects were already beginning to dim.

The girl's roving glance stopped at a black walnut tree ten or fifteen yards away, where some frost-blasted walnuts of the season before still clung to a blighted limb. She swept a finger toward them, dropped her hand to the revolver at her belt and looked around at the woodsman. He caught the challenge in her eye, grinned and nodded.

With a quickness and skill that showed her mastery of the weapon, she plucked the revolver from its holster, raised it and fired. The first bullet cut a twig close to a walnut, the second brought one down.

Every horse there had been trained to stand under gun-fire. Rex merely pointed his ears sharply forward and stood to his tracks, but, even with such a firm saddle under him, the preacher flinched so at the first shot that he almost lost his balance. The second brought an effusive exclamation from him.

The slow eyes of the woodsman livened.

"Good!" he cried. "Ther' ain't another girl in the Flatwoods can do that."

With a little wisp of a smile in her eyes she glanced around at him, and turned to the preacher.

"Now, Mr. Hopkins, you can try y'ur new six-gun."

The preacher almost set up a breeze in the little valley with the gesticulations of his expressive hands; made a heavy draft on his ample stock of effusive exclamations, and finally fumbled the ivory-handled six-gun out of its holster.

He committed the blunder of cocking it with both thumbs—a bit of overacting that did not escape the man backing Graylock in apparent stolidness.

After a deal of coaching from Texie, the preacher poked the revolver forward and pulled the trigger. There was nothing to indicate that the bullet even came near the target. He threw his head back and exploded his raucous laugh. Rex had stood firm under the shot; he shied at the laugh.

The preacher brought the horse back alongside of Brownie and fired again—the bullet smacked somewhere against the opposite bluff, but apparently did not even fan a walnut. He studied the revolver a moment, fixed his spectacles tighter on his nose, and settled seriously to the task; held the weapon in both hands, and aimed a long time—result the same.

"It's the Cabin of Dead Henry Spencer," She Said.

Then the girl threw up her revolver and fired again. The bullet cut a nick in the rotted outer hull of a walnut, and she turned to the woodsman.

"Now, Jack, it's your turn."

"Aw, I couldn't hit one of 'em."

"Come on," she coaxed, "I ain't seen y'u shoot none since—let's see—'way b'fore corn plantin'."

He looked at her curiously, and shifted in his saddle. The preacher had half turned and watched him narrowly.

Suddenly the revolver leaped from the woodsman's side and darted about over the blighted limb. Three shots rang out; three walnuts flew into fragments and crumbled down upon the leaves.

The preacher had straightened in the saddle and sat watching the wonderful marksmanship with an eye that suddenly kindled to flint and flame; but as the third walnut shattered to dust and crumbs, the stoop came back to his shoulders, the air of tired studiousness to his face.

The girl turned to the woodsman, her fine eyes alive.

"You could 'a' got three more!"

The light in the brown eyes kindled a response in the gray; a slow smile crawled across his bold features.

"It's ag'in the law o' woods t' be caught with an empty gun," he said, with a seriousness that set her wondering, as he felt for the powder flask and bullets in his pouch.

In the dusk of the evening, as they rode back to the village, the girl stopped her horse in front of the old cabin, deserted and gloomy, squatted against the side-hill yards back from the Eagle Hollow road—the uncanny hovel that the woodsman had gazed down upon from the top of the bluff that morning while watching the swallows dart in and out of its ruined chimney.

"That place is enough to give one the—creeps," was the preacher's comment as he reined in Rex beside Brownie.

The girl turned in her saddle and sat for some time looking the place over—the gate now long unused, its hinges black with rust; the ranks weeds and sprouts growing close up to the sagging door; the single small front window now yellow with clay that the rains had washed from between the logs; the rude clapboards of the roof warped, loosened, displaced—the crumbling remnants of what had once been a home, now desolate and forsaken under its sombre canopy of trees.

"It's the cabin of dead Henry Spencer," she said, "where he murdered his wife and infant daughter with 'is own one bitter cold night when 'e was drunk, and then wandered out and froze t' death in the snow."

"I've heard the story—from your—ah—brother—and so this is the place?"

"This is the place."

"But not all the story—"

He glanced around at her quizzically.

"No, not all"—she spoke slowly, her words half a question—"they say he—comes back."

The preacher's teeth gleamed white through his heavily bearded lips; his sarcastic exclamation point of a laugh jarred the silence of the placid valley.

"Why, Miss Texie, this is the Nineteenth century, not the Fourteenth."

"Yes,"—in red embarrassment—"but that's what they say."

He looked around at her again, with that same half-cynical expression that came so easily to his face, as he gathered up the reins.

With the mountain girl's hurried warning still fresh in his mind, the woodsman glanced covertly about him as they rode on—something he had been constantly doing since first entering the hollow. As he did so, the uncanny cabin happened to come again under his eyes. A sight met them that for the instant shook even his iron composure—a face at the window was peering at them through the clay-smudged pane.

The face ducked out of sight, and without so much as a flick of the bridle rein—precisely as if he had seen nothing at all—the woodsman rode on. He glanced at the preacher, but apparently he had not seen the face. If he had he gave no sign.

CHAPTER XIV

The Scrape of a Match.

While grooming Graylock in his stall that evening Jack Warhope thought of the face that had appeared for its startling instant at the smudged window of Henry Spencer's unhallowed cabin. As a matter of fact, he had been thinking of it ever since riding out of the jaws of the hollow.

He hung up the curry comb and stepped to the barn door. The sun glared red through a slit in the cloud-bank, and still cleared the trees on the distant foothills by a yard—enough for the purpose he contemplated.

A moment later he was climbing the rough path that led to the uplands. Pausing, to search critically the woods in every direction, he then stole away toward the ill-reputed cabin of the dead woodchopper.

The sun just edged the tree-tops when he came opposite the place. Down in the bottom of the hollow the shadows lay heavy, but the light still touched the uncanny hovel squatted against the hillside.

Stealing through the bushes and brambles, he crept up to the place under cover of the fallen oak, with its festoons of wild cucumber vines. Near the corner most densely hidden by the vines a chink had dropped out from between the logs, leaving a narrow crevice. Shading his eyes, he peeped within. The cabin was empty.

Hugging the wall closely, he crept around to the sagging door; softly pushed it open. His eyes lifted at what he saw—an old box on end near what had once been the fireplace. an empty whisky bottle on the box, with a lamp standing beside it ready to light; a blanket ready to hang over the smudged window.

The dusty floor was covered with tracks—man tracks—one man's. Stepping so as carefully to set his feet in the tracks, he entered the cabin and closed the door.

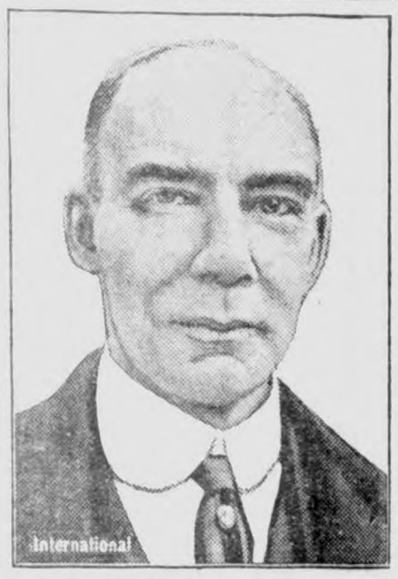
WHO'S WHO—and WHEREFORE

Smith, Leader of American World-Flyers

Here is an up-to-date portrait of Lieut. Lowell H. Smith, acting commander of the American airmen in their around-the-world flight. Lieutenant Smith took the place of Maj. Frederick L. Martin, who was lost for ten days when his plane was wrecked in Alaska. So it was he who led the flight from Alaska to Japan. The crossing of the Pacific by air was a real feat. Cablegrams signed by Secretary Weeks and Major General Patrick, congratulating them on the successful crossing from Alaska to Japan, make this clear. Secretary Weeks' message said:

"Congratulations. Yours is the honor of being the first to cross the Pacific by air. Through its army and navy our country has the honor of having led in the crossing of both great oceans. The army has every faith in your ability to add the circumnavigation of the globe to its achievements." General Patrick, the army air service chief, cabled: "Your flight to Japan was epochmaking and second only in importance to the completion of the entire flight."

Congress Asked to Buy Lincoln Relics



Representative Henry R. Rathbone of Illinois (portrait herewith) has a bill in congress providing for the purchase for $50,000 of the famous Oldroyd collection of 3,000 Lincoln relics, pictures and documents in the house in Washington where Lincoln died. Oldroyd is eighty-one. He has refused much larger offers for the collection, but he wants it to be the property of the nation and he wants it kept where it is. He cannot bear the thought of the collection being removed from its historic setting or of its being broken up. Said he:

"You know, it was in that back room yonder that Stanton said, 'Now he belongs to the ages,' when Surgeon Taft looked up and said that Mr. Lincoln's pulse had stopped. It was in that room that Robert Lincoln fell a-weeping on Charles Sumner's shoulder when he heard those words. The floor of the room is the same as it was on that April night fifty-nine years ago. The wall paper is the same, the old steel engraving of the village smithy that hung above the bed on which Mr. Lincoln died still hangs on the wall."

Rathbone's father and mother were guests in the Presidential box the night Lincoln was shot and his father, an army officer, was wounded by Booth.

Uncle Sam to Pay Senator's Doctors?

A bill appropriating $7,500 to recompense Senator Frank L. Greene, Republican of Vermont, for medical expenses incurred as a result of being shot on a Washington street several months ago was introduced in the senate by Senator Lodge, Republican of Massachusetts. Lodge offered no explanation, but it was said there were ample precedents for the passing of such a bill, which is certainly out of the usual run. It was passed.

Senator Greene and his wife were walking. Several shots were heard close by. He sprang in front of his wife, received a bullet in the head and fell into his wife's arms. It was thought for some time that the wound was fatal. A prohibition agent was shooting at some alleged bootleggers.

Senator Greene served in the house, beginning with the Sixty-third congress and entered the senate in the Sixty-eighth congress, succeeding Carroll S. Page. His term ends March 3, 1929. Senator Greene was born in Vermont in 1870 and left the public schools of St. Albans at thirteen to become a messenger boy in the Central Vermont railway. In 1891 he left the chief clerkship of the freight department to become a reporter for the St. Albans Daily Messenger. In 1899 he became editor. He left his desk to recruit a volunteer company for the Spanish-American war and served as a captain in the First infantry, Vermont volunteers. He has been prominent in the politics and public affairs of his state.

Must Railroad Heads Begin at Bottom?

When Patrick E. Crowley became president of the New York Central upon the death of A. H. Smith, it was duly set forth that he began his railroad career as messenger boy on the Erie. His predecessor also began as messenger boy. This started a discussion as to whether it was necessary for railroad presidents to start at the bottom. Certainly a good many of them have done that very thing.

C. H. Markham (portrait herewith), president of the Illinois Central, started as a track laborer. So did Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio. E. Pennington, president of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie, began as a warehouse man. William Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific, was a freight clerk, and W. G. Besler, president of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, was a trainmaster's clerk.

C. R. Gray, president of the Union Pacific, and T. M. Schumaker, president of the El Paso & Southwestern, got their introduction to the industry as telegraph operators. F. D. Underwood, president of the Erie, and C. E. Schaff, president of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas, started as brakemen. J. H. Hustis, president of the Boston & Maine, began as a messenger. J. E. Gorman, president of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and W. T. Noonan, president of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh, were office boys at first. H. E. Byram, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, was a call boy. A number of railroad presidents began as engineers and as attorneys.

"Sick Men" of Game Hold Odd Reunion

Frank Chance back in Los Angeles, smiles as he tells of his brief experience in Chicago.

"I went to the hospital to see Charley Comiskey the day I arrived," he said. "I was so sick that I could hardly walk.

"'Well! I'm glad to see you,' said the Old Roman. 'Now you can take some of this worry off my hands.'

"'Well, I'm going to fool you,' I retorted. 'I'm sicker than you are. Move over and we'll whack up the bed.'"

GROVER ALEXANDER RETAINS GREATNESS

Cub Star Has Never Finished Below .500 Mark.

There were just 12 major league hurlers to reach the 20-victory class in 1293. The National furnished seven of them. Luque, with 27 wins, led the pack in both loops.

Outside of Grover Alexander, of the Cubs, and Urban Shocker, of the Browns, however, none has displayed any great degree of consistency in turning in 20 triumphs. Fact is that pitchers capable of that many victories over a season's stretch are fewer and farther between than in the old days. They are rare jewels now!

The lively ball with the resultant heavy hitting has tended to curb the mastery of the moundsmen to an appreciable degree, but even so, didn't Eddie Rommel take 27 games for the seventh-place Athletics two years ago, and didn't Howard Ehmke win 20 frays for the cellar Red Sox last season? Hence, the rabbit sphere can't be blamed for all the mediocre work of the gunners.

Let's glance at the record of Alexander of the Cubs. Alexander came up to the big tent in 1911. He's been in 13 major league campaigns—quite a stretch, as pitchers go. Last year Alex won 22 games. But the performance was nothing new to the veteran. Winning more than 20 bouts a season has been his specialty.

Alexander, in his 13 big league campaigns, has passed the 20-mark in games won eight times. Another time he came in with 19 triumphs. In one of those years—1918—he entered the service, working in but three tilts. In the other three seasons he won 16 battles twice, and 15 once.

Let's go further. For three consecutive years—1915-16-17—Alexander won more than 30 games each campaign. He had 31 wins in 1915, 33 in 1916, and 30 in 1917. All told, he grabbed 94 tilts in a three-year sweep. Where are hurlers nowadays dishing up a menu of that particular brand? They aren't.

And further—Alexander, in all the years he's been playing big time, has never finished a campaign below the .500 mark. Few pitchers can point to such a record along a trail as lengthy as that of Alexander's.

Housekeeper— You say you always feel fatigued? I can't understand that.

Hobo. — It's heridity, mum. Me father was the original tired business man.

"I do wish I could get a good house maid."

"You might interview mint. I think she'd be delighted to go to you."

"But why don't you keep her?"

"Oh! she won't stay. She says he wants a place where she won't have so much silver to clean.

The lark is an early riser, but rising early is no lark.

HER PRAYER

Gladys had lost two of her front teeth and for her comfort she had been told that God would give her new ones. She was to take part in some Sunday school exercises and in spite of all her wishing the new teeth refused to put in their appearance. One night after Gladys had retired, her mother entering the room quietly, he saw the child kneeling beide her bed. "Oh, God," she was saying, 'if you haven't got my new teeth done won't you please drop my old ones down again until after next Sunday?"

TOO MUCH FOR STUTTERER

A master in a large school room called upon Smith, who stutters, to parse the sentence: "The propinquity of the porcupine made pot shooting at the hippopotamus virtually impossible."

Smth gave a wild glance around the room and said· "Professor, now ain't t-t_that a d-duece of a question to ask me.?"

FRESH EVERY DAY

"Minnie, who was the nervy young man who just left you?"

"He's the boy who clerks at the grocery store, Mamma.'

"Uh-huh! Now I know what they refer to when they advertise 'Fresh every day,."

VERY GOOD REASON

Visitor: "Why didn't you arrest that fellow who just drove his flivver up the wrong side of the street?

Village Constable: "An' have me get his meals for him for a week? No Sir— I know that feller — he won't pay a fine."

Old Lady— "Son, can you direct me to a bank?"

Boy— "Yessum, for a quarter."

Old Lady — "Isn't that mighty high pay, my boy?"

Boy— "No ma'am, not for a bank director."

"I was so confused, I don't know how many times he kised me?"

"What! with the thing going on right under your nose?"

Unlucky Motorist (having killed the lady's puppy):: "Madam, I will replace the animal."

Lady: "Sir, you flatter yourself."

An editor received this letter from a fresh youth:

"Kindly tell me why a girl always closes her eyes when a fellow kisses her."

To which the editor replied.

"If you will send us your photograph we may be able to tell you the reason.

The "Ad" that Saved A City and its People

ROME was being attacked. The massive walls were breached. The enemies pressed hard on every side. To the north, the invaders crept steathily through the night to storm the gates. In the dark, hey stumbled on a flock of geese. The fowls cackled loud and long——the sentries heard——and Rome was saved.

ADVERTISING is continually saving something for someone. It is not partial, saving for both merchant and buyer; producer and consumer. It would save the American farmer and make his dollars equal the manufacturer's dollar or the dollar used in other industries. The proper use of it will put on its feet any legitimate business or industry. The lack of it will send any institution, industry, city or town to the "business scrap heap."

IT SAVES the buyer and consumer money in pointing out real bargains, by telling them of true values, by giving them prices to compare, and by telling them how much they should pay.

IT SAVES the producer and manufacturer money in finding a market for their products and in creating a demand.

IT SAVES the buye and consumer time and effort by telling them exactly where and when to go for what they want to buy.

THE COLUMNS of any local newspaper is an open door of opportunity to any legitimate business or industry of that community. People read the advertisements as a plain everyday business proposition.

OF WINDMILL

Little Jean Lynes, two year-old daughter of Mrs. W. S. Lynes, could qualify as the youngest human fly in captivity as one day the past week she spyed the ladder leading to the windmill tower and decided to inves tigate the workings of the wheel that goes round and amuses so many other babies from their mother's lap in au omobiles as they drive through the country.

But jittle Jean iss a baby of different so kind so she climbed to the top o the 45-foot tower. Mrs. Lynes was a home alone when she saw the child at the top of the tower, and there was nothing else to do but to climb up and bring the baby down. A superhuman ability is given o mother's when their babies are in dangerous places and so she negotiated the perjlous trip up and down in safety.

Needless to add, the lower part of he ladder has been removed and the little climbing prodigy will do her investigating nearer the ground level.

He wondered why his wife suddenly turned cold on him and remained so for several days. For all that he said in reconsrance was:

"My dear, you'll never be able to drive that nail with a flatiron. For heaven's sake use your head."

FARMERS CULTIVATING CORN; WORMS AT WORK

Farmers have began the cultivation of corn despite the fact that the crop is coming slowly because of cold weather. Some corn is being replanted, especially in sod ground where the cut worms have been more destructive than cold weather, according to county Agent Marion E. Olson. A few davs of warm weather however will put the crop in condition, it was stated.— Globe—Gazette

STREAM OF LIFE

I saw two clouds at morning,
Tinged by the rising sun,
And in the dawn they floated on,
And mingled into one;
I thought that morning cloud was bless'd.
It moved so sweetly to the west.

I saw two summerc urrents.
Flow smoothly to their meeting,
And join their course, with silent force,
In peace each other greeting;
Calm was their course thru banks of green,
While dimpljng eddies play'd between.
Such be your gentle motion,
Till life's last pulse shall beat;
Like summers beam, and summer's stream,
Float on, in joy, to meet
A calmer sea, where storms shall cease—
A purer sky, where all is peace.

FARMER MAY GET STRAW GAS

Science now can take a ton of straw and turn it into 10,000 cubic feet of gas for lighting the home nd cooking the meals.

the straw yields such by-product as 10 gallons of tar, 625 pounds of carbon, ammonia, etc.

This is announced by Department of Agriculture. However it cautions the straw converting machine is not yet practical enough for farm use. But there is hope.

The farmer of the future will be a labratory chemist. This tendency is realized from comparing modern farming with that of the past .

Records of the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture are frequently required to settle court case . An unusual instanct of this kind occured when a motor cyclist colloded with a work team and farm wagon in broad daylight on an unpaved roadway. He very narrowly escaped the fnial summons, and repined in the State hos-tal hospitol for some months because of an aberration resulting from the accident. But he subsequently knew enough to enter the courts armed with weather records to prove that heavy rains prior to the colsjlion had muddied the road, which became rutted, preventing his turning aside for the team. Being in the right-hand path, it was decided that he had a legal right to expect the teamster to yjeld. The teamster's memory was that the road was smooth.

COOLIDGE SIGNS NEW TAX BILL

Chief Executive Criticizes Many Features of Measure.

Washington. — President Coolidge signed the tax bill. As he did so he issued a statement describing the bill as providing tax reduction but not tax reform and severely criticizing many of its features. He pledged himself to devote his energies toward the passage of a tax bill "less political and more truly economic" at the next session of congress.

The President said that in its administrative features the bill represents generally an improvement over existing law; that it will provide sufficient revenue for the fiscal year 1925, and probably thereafter if unforeseen expenses do not arise; that the retroactive tax cut of 25 per cent is expected by the people, and should be promptly given, and that it is desirable to have a definite determination of the taxes as applying to 1924 incomes while the income is still being received.

The bill becomes effective immediately as to the repeal of various excise taxes, changes in estate tax rates, and administrative provisions. Certain excise tax changes become effective in thirty days. These include the repeal in the tax on admissions of 50 cents or less, the repeal of the tax on telegraph and telephone messages, the reduction and repeal of portions of the automobile tax, the repeal of taxes on jewelry below certain amounts, and the reduction of the stamp tax on grain and other produce exchange transactions.

The income tax changes, including the new normal tax rates of 2, 4, and 6 per cent, and surtaxes with a maximum of 40 per cent, are effective on income of 1924, payable in March, 1925.

The retroactive cut of 25 per cent on incomes of 1923 payable in 1924 makes it possible for taxpayers to make a deduction from their June 15 payment.

In making the June 15 payments taxpayers may take off one-fourth of the March 15 payment and one-fourth of June 15 installment. The effect is to permit the June 15 installment to be cut in half. A 25 per cent reduction will then be permitted for the Sept. 15 and Dec. 15 payments.

It is estimated that the treasury will have to refund from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 to taxpayers who paid the full amount of their tax on March 15. Taxpayers who desire to finish up their tax payments for the year on June 15, may obtain the benefit of the entire reduction at that time.

Postal Bill Passes; Goes to President

Washington.—The conference report on the postal salary increase bill, carrying as a rider the Cable corrupt practices bill, was adopted in the house by a vote of 362 to 6.

Opponents of the measure stressed the point that it did not carry increases in postal rates to provide additional revenue to meet the salary advances.

Increases of $300 a year are provided for post office and railway mail clerks, carriers, supervisors, inspectors and assistant postmasters. The night differential carried in the house bill, in accordance with which an hour's pay would have been given for 50 minutes' work, was stricken out in conference after consideration of the Post Office department plea that it would cost $12,000,000.

As the measure stands, Chairman Griest of the house post office committee said it would put an additional cost of $64,000,000 a year to the expense of operating the postal service.

Senate Passes Bill for Naval Increase

Washington.—In less than thirty seconds and without a word of debate, the senate passed the Hale bill appropriating $111,360,000 to start America's navy back to the 5-5-3 plane agreed to in the disarmament conference.

The bill provides $18,360,000 for alterations to front line ships, construction of eight cruisers, not to exceed $11,100,000 each, and six river gunboats not to exceed $700,000 each.

With the new ship, the United States will have cruiser tonnage totaling 155,000 tons against 298,370 for Great Britain, and 170,980 for Japan.

Resignation of Tokyo Cabinet Is Expected

Tokyo, Japan.—The cabinet agreed to meet in extraordinary session within a few days. This is understood to mean that Premier Kiyoura means to tender the resignation of his cabinet.

Measure Goes to President

Washington.—The conference report on the legislative appropriation bill, carrying $14,350,000, was accepted by both the house and senate. The measure now goes to the President for his approval.

Volcano Still Seething

DR. MARION L. BURTON

Dr. Marion Leroy Burton, president of the University of Michigan, has been selected to make the speech placing Calvin Coolidge in nomination at the Republican national convention.

CHANGES IN G. O. P. NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Roy O. West of Illinois New Secretary.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Roy O. West of Illinois was selected as secretary of the Republican national committee, succeeding George Lockwood of Indiana.

Fred Upham of Chicago, who for years has been in charge of the finances of the party, decided to withdraw as treasurer of the committee. His successor has not been chosen.

A third big figure in the control of Republican party organization is to retire as soon as the national convention ends. This is John T. Adams, the chairman.

It is expected that Mr. Upham will be made national committeeman from Illinois, succeeding L. Y. Sherman.

Mr. West, who has gained a name for silence, won the favorable notice of Mr. Butler during the Illinois primary race between Senator Medill McCormick and Deneen. West was Deneen's manager.

The selection of Mr. West for the national secretaryship, while only tentative, is said to have the strong approval of the White House. He formerly has been a member of the national committee.

Reichstag Gives Marx Vote of Confidence

Berlin. — The reichstag expressed approval of Chancellor Marx' declaration on the Dawes report by a vote of 247 to 182. Communists, Nationalists and members of the Deutsch Voelkische party voted against it. The poll may be regarded as tantamount to a vote of confidence in the government, at least so far as its foreign policy is concerned.

The victorious resolution, which was presented by the Middle Parties, was deliberately couched in a limited form, embracing only the approval of the cabinet's foreign policy in order to make possible its support by the Socialists. A prior resolution presented by the Nationalists, expressing no confidence in the government, was defeated by a vote of 239 to 194. A resolution presented by Herr Graefe, of Ludendorff's party, expressing confidence in the government, was sidetracked on technical grounds.

The reichstag adjourned until June 24 when it will consider legislation designed to put the Dawes plan into effect. From sources very close to the government it was learned that the work of drafting legislation requisite for executing the Dawes plan is proceeding favorably in close cooperation between German and allied experts.

Treaty to Suppress Bootlegging Signed

Washington.—A treaty designed to suppress smuggling of liquor and narcotics across the Canadian boundary was signed here by representatives of the American and Canadian governments.

Each government is to furnish information, on request, regarding clearances of vessels or the transportation of cargoes, shipments, or loads of articles across the international boundary when the importation is subject to duty.

Seven Dead in Mine; Many Others Injured

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—Seven men are dead, four others are missing and seven were injured in an explosion in the Loomis colliery of the Glen Alden Coal company. Sparks from a blast are believed to have ignited a gas pocket. Forty-one men were working in the section. Some of these made their way to the foot of the shaft, all more or less burned.

Washington.—The senate adopted the conference report on the postal salaries increase bill, which carries a provision requiring periodical reports from political parties on campaign expenditures.

Molla Mallory Defeated

Stamford Hill, Eng.—Molla Mallory was defeated by Miss P. H. Dransfield in the fourth round of the north London tennis championship. Scores were: 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

FRANKS' SLAYERS HELD FOR TRIAL

Chicago Grand Jury Returns Indictments Charging Murder.

Chicago.—Indictments charging murder and kidnaping for ransom were voted by the grand jury against Nathan F. Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb, nineteen-year-old University of Chicago post graduate students.

They had killed Robert Franks, fourteen, on May 21, after kidnaping him and demanding $10,000 from his father, the grand jurors charged in the two true bills of which the murder indictment contains ten separate counts and the other has sixteen counts.

Following the indictments the grand jury voting a total of twenty-six counts on the two crimes, State's Attorney Crowe gave out the confession of Leopold, an amazing criminal document, the revolting details of which have been made public.

The confession was made to Assistant State's Attorney Joseph Savage and Chief of Detectives Hughes early in the morning of Saturday, May 31, as a consequence of hours of questioning. At the same time Loeb was undergoing a quizzing by others of Mr. Crowe's staff and made a confession substantially the same as Leopold's.

Leopold's narrative, however, was regarded as the more explicit and coherent, and for that reason his confession was the one presented to the grand jury.

Two Capital Charges.

If Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb escape capital punishment in their trial for the murder of Robert Franks, they will immediately be tried again.

This determination on the part of State's Attorney Crowe came upon reflection that the slayers of young Franks stand indicted of two crimes, both punishable by death.

One charge is murder. The other is kidnaping for ransom. Thus plans are going forward for formulation of two distinct and complete prosecutions.

Would Stop Payment of Soldiers' Bonus

Washington.—Suit to halt the payment of the soldiers' bonus was filed in the District Supreme court here by Benjamin Catchings, who described himself as a taxpayer of the United States residing at 144 West Fifty-seventh street, New York city. The court is asked for an injunction to prevent the accomplishment of the provisions of the World war adjusted compensation act, commonly known as the soldiers' bonus.

The plaintiff asks the court to decree that the public revenues of the United States are a public trust and to hold that the bonus act is in fact and truth a mere bonus gift by the federal congress and not a provision for the payment of any debt or compensation owing in money by the United States of America.

The court also is asked to say that the bonus act, if executed, would accomplish a waste and unlawful diversion of the public funds.

House Bill Favors Prohibition Bureau

Washington.—Dry forces, by a vote of 275 to 90, rushed through the house, under a suspension of rules, the Cramton bill creating a prohibition bureau in the Treasury department, separate from the internal revenue bureau. A two-thirds vote was required.

The Cramton bill has been actively advocated by the Anti-Saloon league as one of the most important measures of the dry program. The drys want to get prohibition enforcement away from the internal revenue bureau.

The Cramton bill, of course, had no chance of consideration by the senate at this session.

Veterans' Charges Are to Be Investigated

Washington.—Following the strike of 150 students at the United States Veterans' rehabilitation school at Perryville, Md., on a charge of unsanitary living conditions and poor food, Gen. Frank T. Hines, director of the Veterans' bureau, sent Davis G. Arnold, assistant director, in charge of control service, to Perryville to investigate conditions there.

INDORSES LEGION

THE Michigan department of the American Legion recently held a concentrated membership drive and called upon the governor of the state for an indorsing statement. Governor Groesbeck declared he was not only willing but eager to indorse an organization which he believed was one of the most constructive forces for good now at work in this country.

From my observation," said Governor Groesbeck," the American Legion is a most worthy organization. It has accomplished much that is of benefit, and the longer it exists the more good I believe it will bring about.

It should not be a difficult matter for the organization to secure the application of every man entitled to a place on its rolls. Through a greater membership you will not only be able to better your own conditions but can be of much more assistance in every effort which has for its purpose a better and more patriotic citizenship."

LEGION BOY SCOUT TROOP MAKES GOOD

Possibilities of a troop of boy scouts, when sponsored by the American Legion are seen in the recent report of the Legion's troop in Collinsville, Okla.

During the past year the troop acquired a building of its own, through the generosity of one of the local church congregations and the boys, assisted by the Legion men placed this in shape, wiring, painting and redecorating and furnishing the building.

One of the principal activities of the troop was undertaking of a religious census of the entire city. This was prepared for use of the local churches.

The Legion maintains a free scout camp at Lake Euchee, which is made the center for hikes and other activities. One of these hikes was a "father and son" hike, on which the scouts were hosts.

The troop is entirely interdenominational and closely resembles the makeup of the Legion in this respect. Eight Baptists, thirteen Methodists, eleven Presbyterians, eleven Christians, two Assembly of God, one Nazarine, and one Christian Scientist are in the troop.

Will Plant Wild Rice to Feed Game Birds

In order to provide a feeding place for migratory game birds, and for preservation of wholesome conditions in Beaver Dam lake, a large amount of wild rice will be planted in the lake by Wisconsin Legionnaires.

The rice is a great feed for wild ducks, and is said to restore healthful conditions wherever planted. Its planting will be made by a group of Legion men under supervision of state experts.

The Beaver Dam veterans take a great interest in the lake and its surroundings, hoping to keep it as a location for game fish, bird life and plant life. A few months ago, the Legion men seined the lake free of carp and rough fish, selling five carloads in eastern markets as a result of their efforts. Then the state game and fish conservation commission provided a carload of "rescue fish," mostly game fish, which were planted in the lake.

Veterans of Virginia Approve Registration

Success has attended efforts of Commander John J. Wicker and other Legionnaires in Virginia in securing registration of veterans in that state, that all might vote in regular elections.

This was made one of the principal objectives of the Legion during the past year, and according to reports from the state's posts furnished Commander Wicker, only a few members of the Legion have not availed themselves of the opportunity to exercise their right of franchise. At least eight posts of the state have qualified with every member as a voter. These are located in Strasburg, Louisa, Capo Charles, Smithfield, Berryville, Abingdon and Marion.

The work was under direction of a citizenship committee, headed by Allan S. Clarke of Danville, and with members in every congressional district in the state.

Plan Georgia Convention

Among attractions listed for the annual department convention of the American Legion in Georgia this year were addresses by Wilder S. Metcalf, member of the Legion's national finance committee, and Gen. Robert L. Bullard. The convention was held in Savannah, June 5-7. Dances, boat rides and other events provided entertainment for the visiting Legionnaires.

Bronze Medal for Courage

A bronze medal for the most courageous act during the year in the community has been offered by the Cleo J. Ross post of the American Legion in Titusville, Pa. The award will be confined to the city schools and candidates will have their standing in honor scholarship, leadership and service taken into final consideration as well as that of courage.

The engineering theory of the project is quite simple. The Mississippi is a widening, more or less intractable stream that spreads itself out over the entire river bed. This is done at the expense of the main channel through which the boats must travel. To curb this wanderlust on the part of the Mississippi, the government engineers are building this system of dams on both sides throughout its course. They serve to discourage the river from spreading its waters over the wide valley and by contracting the stream within narrower limits the dams help in washing out the main channel and making it deeper. The engineers aim to provide a channel ranging from 300 feet wide at the upper end to 1,400 feet at the mouth of the Missouri.

River Solidifies the Sands.

Dams are made of brush and stones, the brush to divert the water and the rocks to hold the brush in place. The longer the dams stand the firmer and more impenetrable they become. At first the river spreads out between two of the new dams, finds itself obstructed, and recedes, depositing sand between the dams. As this process keeps up eventually a new river bank is built up, vegetation appears and nothing short of a flood will drive the river up over the new bank.

At some points along the river the engineers find it advisable to riprap the banks with brush and stone to prevent them washing out and at other points, where the stream has wandered off into a slough, closing dams have been constructed, blocking the river from such forays. All of this work tends to throw the main body of water into a narrower, deeper channel with the ultimate aim of providing a navigable waterway throughout the season to the head of navigation, the Twin Cities.

This goal is in sight. For the first time in years a barge carrying a cargo of freight from St. Louis and other down river points reached the Twin Cities this spring. There are three or four other barges in this fleet, and the company operating them hopes to maintain a regular schedule throughout the season. How well they will succeed is a question. All the rivers and streams in this section are low this year and will be yet lower before the summer is over, when the spring freshets and rains have spent themselves. Then will come the real test of the river.

Last year a passenger boat from St. Louis tried to reach the Twin Cities. It made fairly good progress until it got beyond Winona, the first real "port of call" in Minnesota. Then it began to encounter difficulties and finally had to abandon its trip entirely at Hastings, Minn., some 20 miles below St. Paul. With due allowance for the extremely low stage of water last year the army engineers in charge of the river work nevertheless maintain that a boat properly built and handled can navigate to St. Paul today at low water stage.

The new barges going in service this year are designed especially for the upper Mississippi river. They are built to operate in less than a six-foot water stage. But before there can be a genuine revival of river traffic, say the engineers, there must be more adequate terminal and transfer facilities at the cities and towns along the river. A start has been made in that direction, but that is about all. At Alton, Ill., a transfer unit has been installed with railroad connections, and an expeditious method of moving freight to a from cars or wagons and boats has been provided. This transfer is owned by a railway company. A commencement has been made by construction of sea walls and in some cases installation of railway tracks at St. Paul, Minneapolis, Davenport and Muscatine. All of these proposed terminals are municipally owned and will be available for public use.

Ford Plans to Use River.

A recent factor in the revival of this river traffic is Henry Ford. He is now constructing a $10,000,000 manufacturing and distributing plant at St. Paul. It stands on the banks of the Mississippi and his engineers have indicated that they propose to utilize the river to the fullest practicable extent in transporting materials and products to and from the St. Paul plant.

After the enforced winter layoff, government crews have resumed their work of "straitjacketing" the upper Mississippi. Crews with dredges are working out of St. Paul and Rock Island. There is a stretch of about 665 miles between the head of navigation at St. Louis, and the progress of the work depends largely on the appropriations made each year by congress. It is expected that all funds now available will be exhausted by June 30, 1924, and an appropriation of $1,500,000 is now being sought to carry on work for the next fiscal year. It is estimated that the amount of money needed to complete the project is $11,703,000.

This work applies only to the upper Mississippi, that is, between the Twin Cities and St. Louis. From St. Louis on down another and greater project is under way. When both are completed, which will not be for some years to come, there will be a commercial waterway approximately 1,900 miles in length. The upper portion of this waterway is navigable about eight months of the year. And some river enthusiasts hope to see the time when Lake Superior will be connected by water with the Gulf of Mexico, 2,000 miles to the south.—New York Times.

Off the Streets After 8 o'Clock in This Town

Weston, W. Va.—Bright lights, dancing and jazz are not to be tolerated in certain sections of West Virginia under an ordinance passed by the town council of Glenville, seat of the Glenville State Normal school.

The ordinance prohibits any boy or girl under eighteen from being on the streets after 8 p. m. unless accompanied by parents, or going to or from church.

Permission is granted to those under that age to attend public gatherings with written permission from their parents. A curfew bell is to be sounded each evening at eight o'clock.

Holland Begins to Fill Up the Zuider Zee

The government of The Netherlands has begun the colossal task of filling in the Zuider zee, thereby converting that expanse of useless shallow water into about 500,000 acres of fertile soil. The job was started near Ewijcksluis and Den Helder and probably will not be finished in less than thirty years. The total cost will be many millions of guilders. Long dikes are built out into the water of the zee and then the interspaces are filled with earth brought from other parts of Holland, where new canals are under construction, and with stone from Germany and Belgium. The photograph shows the building of a strong dam barrier with the use of sea weed.

Save California Forests of Redwood to Posterity

San Francisco.—Redwood trees with a value of approximately $1,000,000 have been saved for all time in central and northern California through the efforts of the Save-the-Redwoods league.

The league was organized less than four years ago. Individuals and lumber companies have donated lands valued at $500,000 to the movement. The state, Humboldt county and citizens have contributed $475,000 in money to the movement for purchasing other lands.

"And yet the movement has just begun," said Dr. W. F. Bade, an official of the organization. "While 14 miles along the Redwood highway have been preserved, there are several hundred miles, many of them heavily timbered, which should be preserved. We look forward to the establishment of a national redwood park of at least 20,000 acres."

To Use Radio to Teach Africans How to Farm

Washington.—Natives in the heart of Africa will be able soon to perform their ancient ceremonial dances to the strains of jazz through a radio loud-speaker, and will be given instructions in modern agricultural methods in the same way under plans of British officials of Kenya colony. Trade Commissioner R. A. May at Alexandria, Egypt, has advised the Commerce department that plans already have been made to install a radio set with loud-speaker in every village. Besides daily musical programs, he said, farming instructions will be sent to the natives in their own language.

For some unaccountable reason or other Dr. Zinn had his car wahed last Thursday morning. This is rather unusual and we thought maybe our neighbor had fallen in love, but later we learned he attended the big farm bureau picnic at Garner.

It is reported that a beet weeder was killed near Corwith last week Wednesday night. It is said he was intoxicated and was returning to his home when he fell or lay in the road and wa run over by a car driven by a young man from Kossuth county. The beet weeder lived but a couple of hours after the accident. He is a Russian Pole and leaves a wife and four children.

Wellemeyer's banana tree is growing some more new leaves so the climate here must agree with it. He says he will treat everybody with bananas when it bears. And that reminds us. We also have a freak of nture growing in our bck yard. It is a bamboo fish pole, in fact there are now three fish poles growing. Eventually we hope to supply the entire community with fish poles and thus solve the high cost of fishing.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Children's Day Exercises will be observed next Sunday during the Sunday school hour. The usual Children's Day collection will be taken. Let every child contribute toward thisfi as it helps worthy, but poor young people to prepare for some form of Christian work.

During the regular hour of the morning service the pastor will speak on higher education—who should and whos hould not seek a higher education. We believe there are some who should not as well as some who should seec such higher education. Who is who in this line?

Instead of the evening service, we will have a Memorial service at the cemetary for the fallen heroes of the Cross—for the pastors and pastor's wife who areb uried in that sacred spot.

This service will beh eld at four o'clock when the graves of both those of the N. W. Iowa and N. W. German conference will be decorated by our Epworth Leaguers and in connction with this a brief serivce will be held. This service is open to all.

ARTHUR BROUWER AND SYLVIA MOBERLY MARRIED LAST WEEK THURSDAY

Last Thursday morning, June 5, at 9:30 o'clock at the Methodist Parsonage in Klemme, Miss Sylvia Moberly and Mr. Arthur Brouwer were united in marriage; Rev. A. W. Gauger, Pastor, officiating.

The bride was attended by her sister, Mis Goldje Moberly and Mr. Clifford Brouwer, brother of the groom, was best man. They were the only witnesses present at the ceremony.

In the evening a large number of young friends of the bride and groom gathered at the Moberly home and tendered the newly-weds with a reception in honor of the happy event.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. G. Moberly who reside on a farm southeast of Klemme.

The groom is a on of Ralph Brouwer of Garner and i employed by the Ford Motor Company at Detroit.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brouwer have a host of friends who extend to them best wishes for a happy and prosperous future, the Times also joining with them on this greeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Brouwer will visit in this community for about a week when they will depart for Detroit to make their home there.

PASTOR'S MEMORIAL

Impressive Service Held for Deceased Pastor's and Pastor's Wives Sunday Afternoon

A very impressive Memorial service was held at the cemetery on Sunday afternoon, at four o'clock when the graves of the two pastors the three pastor's wives, and one pastor's daughter were decorated. This is by an arragnement with the Northwest Iowa Conference that such be done and usually is done in connection with Children's Day.

A large crowd had turned out to participate in this service. The service began at the graves of the Rev. and Mrs. Hans Nissen and their daughter, who all came to an untimely death some seven years ago. After singing several verses of Rock of Ages, Mr. George Grueztmacher offered a feevent prayer. Thereupon the pastor spoke on thel abors of these men and women of God, basing upon the words: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings", terming these men and women as mountain top men or real sky pilots that pointed the way to heaven.

The obituary of Rev. Nissen was read by Mr. Earl Josten,. that of Mrs. Nissen by Mrs. A. D. Gimer and that of the daughter by Miss Marie Gauger. Hereupon the third vice-president of the Epworth League, Miss Ethel Wellemeyer and her committee decorated theg raves.

All present nextp roceeded to the graves of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Koerner, where a verse of "Jesus Lover of my Soul" was sung. The sketch of the life of this hero of the cross was read by Mrs. Poul Greisemer, and that of Mrs. Koerner by Mrs. George Gruetzmacher when again the again the decorating committee functioned. From here the concourse proceeded to the grave of Mrs. Rev. Berg where a verse of "Nearer my God to Thee" was sung and the obituary was read by Mrs. Albert Fuller. The girls then stepped forward to decorate this grave Thep astor then concluded the service with a prayer and the pronouncing of the benediction.

Altogether it was a servicel ong to be remembered.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

A full house greeted the pastor last Sunday morning worship. This was followed by a packed house for the Exercises for Children's day. Report comes to us that a good program was rendered.

The same can be said of the exercises of the Liberty church where the pastor spoke briefly at the conclusion of the program. A fine Children's Day collection was raised in both places.

Some of our recent General Conference legislation has called forth a great deal of cemment on thep art of thep ress—both secular and rellious. This is especially true of the notable paragraph 280, which deals with the so called amusement question. Is Methodism on the Onward March to retrograding? The pastor will deal with this vital question during the morning service. You will want to hear this sermon!

It will not be too early to talk Institue matters at this meeting as the Institue at Clear Lake will be held from July 21-27. We hope that at least a dozen of our young people can attend. Will the parentes kindly cooperate!

Corn Growers To Meet in Klemme Next Wednesday Night

COUNTY BEING ORGANIZED TO GET BETTER CORN PRICES

Habenicht Will Tell Farmers About Organization Here June 25th

Last week the Times carried an article telling of the Corn Growers Association and of the meetings being held over the county.

Mr. J. H. Habenicht, a Calhoun county farmer and corn grower will be in Klemme Wednesday evening, June 25th to open a meeting at 8:30 o'clock when he will tell farmers in this community about the association, its benefits and purposes. The place of meeting will be announced over the phone.

Other meetings next week over the county will be at Crystal Lake Monday night; Hayfield on Tuesday night; Klemme on Wednesday night and at Goodell on Thursday night. The time in each instance is 8:30 P. M.

The meeting at Corwith was attended by a large crowd and a large number there joined the organization.

All farmers, as well as businessmen are urged to attend the meetings as everyone is interested in an organization working for better corn prices.

The Association is incorporated under the cooperative marketing law of Iowa to stabilize the price of corn at a point which represents cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

RAPE AND CORN FOR HOGGING DOWN

That rape and corn make agood combination for hogging down is indicated by the results of the tests made at the South Dakota experiment station. Rape was seeded in the corn just after the last cultivation. Three different varities of corn were concerned in the experiment and the best growth of rape was secured with flint corn, while with dent varieties the shading of the heavy growth of corn reduced the yield of rape somewhat.

As an average the rape increased the gains of the hogs from 1.06 pounds daily on corn alone to 1. 28 pounds. In the case of flint corn the rape was responsible for an increase in daily gains of one-third of a pound. In the case of the dent varieties, the increases were somewhat less.

BIG STATE FAIR THIS YEAR

Des Moines, Special:— Elobarate plans have been started by state officials for celebrating the 70th anniversary of the founding of the Iowa State Fair, which will be commemorated here this summer, Aug. 20-29, in connection with the state exposition.

There will be a real. old-fashioned jubilee, and the fair itself will be know as the "70th anniversary jubilee State Fair".

It will be a long way from the state big five million dollar exposition as it will be seen this summer and the little fair held at Fairfield, owa, seventy years ago. Plans are also being laid to honor "old-timers" who attended some of the earlier fairs held by the state, and valuable historical records are to be made of the event.

A greatly augmented educational and amusement program is being prepared this year, to make this the outstanding state fair of the last decades. Thel ive stock and agricultural departments, it is said, will be the largest ever witnesses at any state fair in the country. Premiums this year total nearly $138,-000.00 and are $17,000 larger than in 1923.

FOUR BEAN PLANTINGS

Continuous Crop for Summer is Thus Assured

Now is the time to think of summer gardens. The only method of obtaining peas at all times during the summer is by planting different varieties, but with beans it is possible to have plenty of them coming along all summer by different plantings through the season.

The first two plantings should already have been made for Iowa and the second two plantings should be made June 15 to June 25 to maintain a continuous supply.

Among the grean beans the round podded are better than the flat and less likely to be stringy. The string less green pod is especially good and free from fiber. Most varieties reccommended by leading seadsman are good, say the garden experts at Iowa State College.

For folks with ambition the climbers will make more than one crop. This is not true of the bush beans. Among the climbers the Kentucky Wonder is especially good.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC AT WEST LAKE NEXT THURSDAY

USED BUTTER AS A SALVE

Early Uses of Well Known Food Product Show Developement

When it comes to life history. butter is just as old as man himself. References to butter date far back in the early dawn of history. Meno Martin refers to butter in 2000 B. C. Butter is mentioned in Greek, Roman and Tueton history. There are references to it in Genesis, 18: 8, and Proverbs, 30:33.

At first, says Miss Ruetta T. Day, home economics division, Iowa State College, butter was made in eart hernware vessels, by heating the cream with the hands. The next developement was a wood stirring stick, then a stick with radial spokes was used. It was then churned in a high earthern ware vessel with a lid which had a dasher. This was the dasher type. The dash type and the turning type were both in early use.

Early uses of butter are very inter. Hindoos and Greeks used it as their holiest sacrifice. Greeks and Romans used it as the standard skin remedy and eye sore remedy, also as an ointment toenrich the skin and hair.

Butter early was used in theb ath. for wounded elephants , smearing sheep and as a lamp oil.. In Spain butter formerly was found in shops, labeled "for external use only". In many countries yet it is used as a cooling salve for burns.

In countries with the caste system, such as Indja, butter indicates wealth. Butter was stored sometimes for years in caves, the more store butter owned the wealthied the owner was supposed to be. If it became rancid it was used as and appetizer.

Butter is simply an example of a common everyday food product that humans seldom think has any history behind it.

FARMERS LIKE ALFALFA

Tours Interest Many—Will Grow on Poor Soil

Iowa's alfalfa tours are meeting with hearty response from the farmers. In the Wayne county tour there were as high as 75 farmers at some of the farms visited and it has been estimated 150 persons saw for themselves what alfalfa will do for the farmer.

In Van Buren county 12 alfalfa fields were visited. and five of these fields were on land which was so poor that corn growing had been abandoned entirely or had been considered unprofitable for corn growing. The farmers and the county agents have demonstrated that alfalfa can be grown in the poorest as well as the richest of soils. Manuring, liming and inoculation are necessary in this county.

These tours show the possibility of growing a very valuable crop on land too rolling and too poor for growing cultivated crops, says H. W Warner, soils expert, Iowa State College, who has been directing the tours in cooperation with the county agents. On nearly every tour some farmers have expressed themselves determined to give alfalfa a try, after having seen the fields and learned how to grow it.

PLANS NOW BEING MADE FOR BIG CELEBRATION

Pack Up Your Lunch And Join The Happy Throng Next Thursday

BAND WILL BE THERE—SURE

Ball Game Between Liberty And Klemme Sunday Schools

Plans are now well underway and committees appointed and at work making arrangements for a big Sunday school picnic at West Twin Lake for next Thursday, June 26th.

It is planned that both the Klemme and Liberty M. E. Sunday schools will join in making this a great big day for everybody and all are invited to come and bring your friends.

All that is necessary is to pack up your lunch and join the crowd next Thursday. Some families are no doubt planning a picnic with several families in a group, others will enjoy their own family picnic, but in any case come!

There will be lots of amusements for the kids, big kids and kids that are grown up. A ball game between Liberty and Klemme Sunday schools will furnish plenty of thrills. We asked Paul Griesemer if he was going to pitch for Klemme; he told us he would umpire—Paul is undertaking a dangerous venture, but he is quite a diplomat and may pull through with a whole hide.

We presume barn yard golf will also be on the program; and perhaps races of various kinds. The amusement committee just says to "tell 'em there will be something doing."

And it looks very much like the Klemme Band will be on hand to furnish music for the day.

The complete program will be given out Sunday at Sunday school. But we have given you plenty of information so all that is necessary is to bring your picnic dinner and be there to join the fun.

SPRAY POTATOES FOR LEAF HOPPERS

Now is the time to get after the leaf-hoppers which cause "tipburn" in potato plants, says Entomologist Fred D. Butcher of Iowa State College. The best spray is bordeaux mixture, made by disolving copper sulphate and lime in water. For a small garden the following mixture is advised.

Disolve one pound of copper sulplate in water. being careful not to use metal containers, as copper sulphate corrodes metal. In another container slake one pound of lump lime. Then dilute each solution with fiveg allons of water. When ready to apply pour the two together. The vines should be sprayed within twelve hours after the mixture is prepared, as it loses its effectivesness if spraying is very long delayed.

In case potato beetles are found in the plants it is a good plan to add about six ounces of arsenate of lead to the bordeaux mixture.

CABBAGE HURTS ROUGE SELLERS

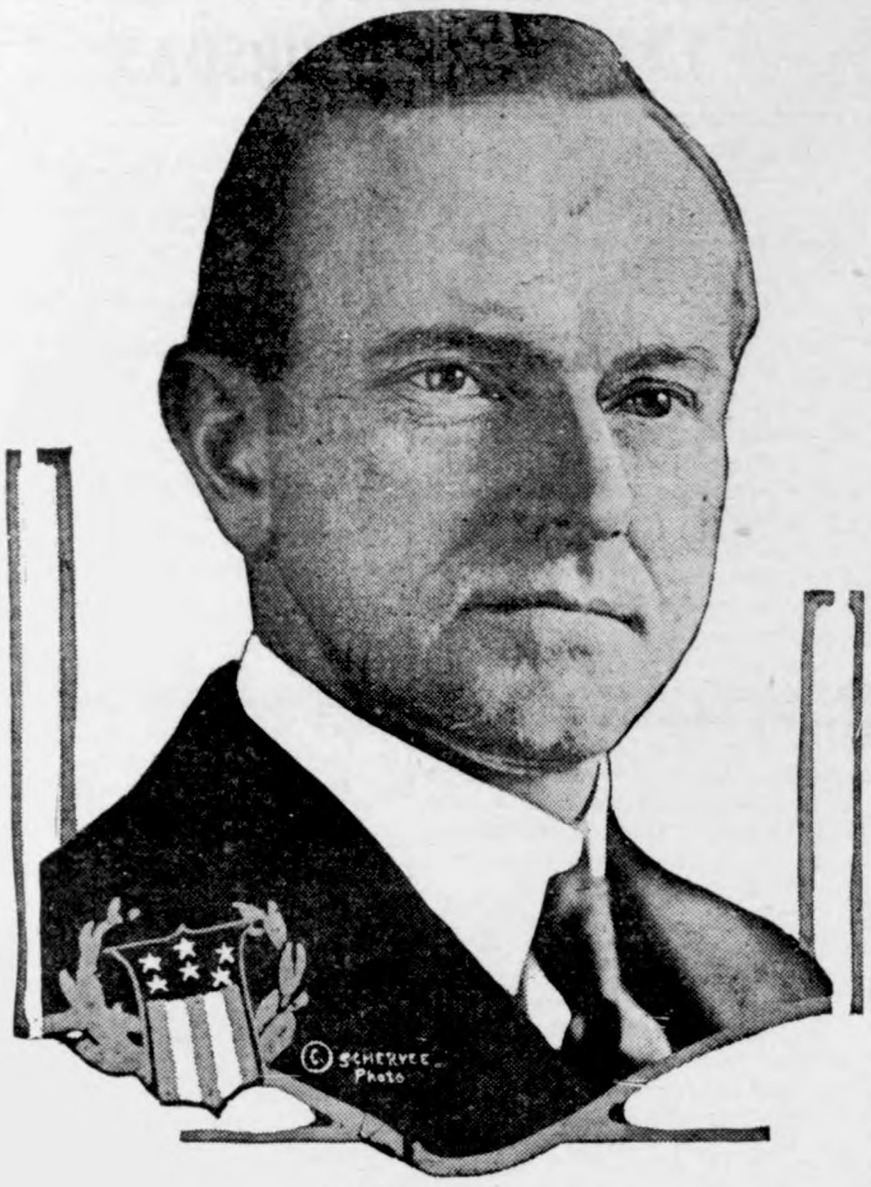
Vegetable Should Be Cooked With Cover Off to Avoid Odors

"Chief enemy of the sellers of rouge," say home economics authorities of Iowa State College in regard to the use of raw cabbage as a health food. A recent discovery of ther eally remarkable vitamin content has elevated this vegetable in the eyes of the food specialists.

"Cabbage properly cooked will not scent up the house. The advised practice is to cook it quickly and with the cover off the kettle. The odor of the cooking vegetable is due to chemical reaction when the cover is on.

COOLIDGE AND DAWES G. O. P. TICKET

Illinois Man Selected for Second Place After Lowden Refused Unanimous Nomination—From Start to Finish It Was All Coolidge—Platform Sets Forth G. O. P. Principles.



Calvin Coolidge

For President,
CALVIN COOLIDGE
of Massachusetts.

For Vice President,
CHARLES G. DAWES
of Illinois.

Cleveland.—The above is the ticket selected by the Republican national convention to make the fight for the party in the forthcoming Presidential election.

Before the roll call had been half completed the story had been told. The vote resulted: Coolidge, 1,065; La Follette, 34; Johnson, 10.

Thomas Scott, the lone Coolidge delegate from Wisconsin, moved to make the nomination unanimous.

"With the exception of a very few voices the nomination of Calvin Coolidge is made unanimous," announced Chairman Mondell.

The first ballot for vice president showed Lowden in the lead, with Burton, Dawes, Hoover and Kenyon following closely. On the second ballot the convention turned to Lowden and he was unanimously nominated. In a telegram to the convention the former governor of Illinois absolutely refused to accept the nomination.

After a three-hour recess another ballot was taken and before it was finished Dawes was so far in the lead over Hoover that the nomination was made unanimous amid the wildest enthusiasm.

With President Coolidge's nomination a foregone conclusion and everything else prearranged, there was really nothing to do but give the stamp of official party approval when the various matters were brought before the convention.

President Coolidge's name was placed in nomination by Dr. Marion Leroy Burton, president of the University of Michigan. He presented a scholarly eulogy of the President, which was frequently interrupted with wild demonstrations. His first mention of the President's name was all that the crowd had been waiting for. It was the signal for the wildest orgy of noises that the convention had yet experienced. It made previous outbursts pale into insignificance and has been equalled seldom in the history of party conventions.

As One Who Knows Him.

"I shall speak as one who for years has known the President," said Doctor Burton. "I follow this plan, because I believe you want to hear from one who has a first-hand knowledge of his subject. The people have an unsatiable desire to learn about the life and ways of this man. The better you know him the more you will trust him. The more carefully you study his written words the more certain you will become of the clarity of his mind, the depth of his thought, and the soundness of his judgment.

"There is no real statesmanship without these qualities. My function is to present the man. The emphasis must be just there.

"He is not a superman, and would be the last to think so. There is not a trace of show or ostentation about him, for he does nothing merely for appearance. He may be an example, but he would never set one. His quiet, unobtrusive, and natural way of doing things was beautifully and graciously illustrated during the sad days of last August when he assumed the duties of the Presidency. He personified the plain, simple virtues of our citizens at their best.

"Yet this is not all. If it be said that he is rarely common, it must also be known that he is nobly uncommon. A great man is always simple and direct. About this man there is something elemental. He 'can see into the heart of things.' He knows that every person has a soul and that the greatest thing about America is her spirit. He never lacks dignity. The office he occupies is exalted, for when he performs a public duty it is a ceremony."

Only One Problem.

The vice presidential nomination was the hard nut to be cracked. Days and nights of milling, maneuvering, canvassing, conferring, deciding and undeciding had failed to crystallize sentiment for any considerable length of time on a candidate for second place on the ticket. Time and again a name would be proposed that seemed to solve the problem only to have the whole thing upset either by the declination of the gentleman in question or for geographic reasons. One after another, the party leaders went down the list of names advanced. Some objection was found to each one. So it went on and on, jumping from one name to another, and getting nowhere.

The Republican national convention of 1924 will go down in history as one of the most unique gatherings of the kind ever held. Old-timers who have been attending conventions for years never saw anything like it. It was much like a prayer meeting. With everything settled long before the convention met, save only the name of the man to be chosen running mate for President Coolidge, there was nothing much to get excited over. The President completely dominated the convention. The delegates were there to carry out his wishs, eagerly, willingly. Not that he attempted to interfere. They had accepted him as their leader, and were whole-hearted in their purpose of following his leadership.

The so-called "old guard" had no hand in this convention. They were there, of course, but just as privates in the ranks.

Burton Sounds Keynote.

Theodore E. Burton of Ohio was the keynoter. Assuming the gavel as temporary chairman, he delivered an oration that held the delegates in their seats for an hour and a half. The aged Ohio statesman is one of the last of the old school type of orator. He has had vast experience in politics, and he knew exactly what to say. His allusion to President Coolidge as the man to whom the peopel looked for leadership, rather than to congress, gave the convention its first chance to break loose. Every mention of the President's name was the signal for a demonstration.

"Much of the blame which is visited upon Republicans in the present congress is not deserved," said Congressman Burton, "because on many major questions their party has not commanded a majority in either branch. Let us not for a minute forget the importance of a Republican majority in the next congress, made up of members tried and true, who will stand united.

"The people—and all the people—have confidence in Calvin Coolidge. It is a time when there is a hunger for simple, robust virtues, for a leadership which shall be based on no cheap or selfish motives.

"As a candidate for the Presidency, and this in the midst of temptations stronger than those by which the angels fell, he has shown no truckling, no scheming for votes, but has gone calmly and steadily on his way unaffected by the lure of expediency or the promise of success."

Mondell Is Chairman.

Frank W. Mondell, former congressman from Wyoming, was chosen permanent chairman. His speech was short and was mainly a plea for a Republican congress. Every serious fault of recent legislation and every failure to round out a satisfactory program could and would have been avoided," he declared, "had there been dependable Republican majorities in congress."

The first big demonstration of the convention came when Coolidge's name was mentioned by Charles F. Warren in the introductory to the report of the committee on resolutions. The delegates from Wisconsin, sole dissenters from the platform as presented by the committee, sat silent amid the bedlam o fnoise that broke loose. Round and round the Wisconsin delegation the frenzied crowd of delegates smiled, shrieked, howling, jeering, waving banners and threatening and cajoling. The uproar lasted for nearly an hour and only subsided when physical endurance reached its limit.

Turn Down Wisconsin Plank.

The convention was disinclined to listen to Congressman Cooper when he took the platform to present the minority report of the committee on resolutions which contained the Wisconsin or LaFollette planks. He was jeered and booed while Chairman Mondell pleaded that the Wisconsin man was entitled to the courtesy of a fair hearing. Mr. Cooper was a good sport and was not ruffled by the violent antagonism of the convention. He proceeded with the reading of his resolutions in a calm, clear voice, and then offered them as a substitute for the report of the majority. The Wisconsin delegation alone voted for this motion and the majority report was adopted with a roar.

Charles G. Dawes

The platform is said to embody the Coolidge program for legislation which the President thinks will keep the country on the way of prosperity. Much is made of governmental economy and tax reduction. A proposed solution of the financial burdens of the people is offered.

The first session of the convention was taken up with preliminaries, the reading of the call for the convention and the keynote speech of the temporary chairman.

Permanent organization was effected Wednesday. The committee on resolutions was reported to be still laboring with the platform, but the reports of all other committees were quickly disposed of and the convention took a recess until evening, when the platform was presented.

Countless Pleas Offered for Planks in Platform

Martin B. Madden of Illinois, who was an important member of the committee on resolutions, figures out that spokesmen and spokeswomen of nearly 300,000,000 Americans made pleas for platform planks. Madden says he is forced to the conclusion, therefore, that about one out of three of Uncle Sam's children is interested in at least a trio of outstanding public issues. The women, the churches, organized labor, the colored race, the Filipinos, the drys, the wets, the klansmen, the anti-klansmen, the high tariff folks and the low tariff folks, the proponents and the opponents of nearly every 'ism that federal flesh is heir to, constituted the 300,000,000 on whose alleged behalf platform favors were sought.

The "keynote prayer" is one of the convention innovations that Cleveland introduced. Almost every one of the distinguished clergymen who opened proceedings with an invocation lapsed, perhaps subconsciously, into political supplication.

Ring Oddly Restored

Some thirteen years ago, while Miss Lena Piper was employed in an office at Laconia, N. H., she lost a diamond ring down a partition. At the time the floors were torn up and a search made, but no ring was found. Just lately, workmen who were at work enlarging the building tore down a back wall, and the ring was found and returned to Miss Piper.

BLAST KILLS 48 ON BATTLESHIP

Turret on U. S. S. Mississippi Blows Up During Target Practice.

San Pedro, Cal.—The lives of three officers and forty-five enlisted men have been snuffed out aboard the dreadnaught Mississippi in the navy's greatest peacetime disaster which brought to a tragic climax a week of sham battles and target practice.

Aboard the hospital ship Relief lay the dead, killed by a premature explosion in the Mississippi's No. 2 turret, and the injured were aboard the New Mexico, flagship of division No. 4 of the battle fleet, while members of a naval board of inquiry prepared to open investigation.

It was a flareback from one of the guns that shot death in flames and poisonous gases back into the turret through its open breech. A second gun, the breech locked, let loose in the harbor here as the Mississippi steamed home with its dead and injured from the drill grounds and hurled a steel projectile dangerously near to an outbound passenger liner.

Just how the fatal explosion occurred is as yet undetermined.

A partial list of the dead compiled unofficially follows:

Lieut. Thomas Zellers, twenty-five, Long Beach, Cal.; Ensign Marcus Erwin, Jr., twenty-five, battleship Mississippi; Ensign William G. McCrea, twenty-three, battleship New Mexico; Christenson, seaman, first class; Lawrence Henry Willis, seaman, first class; Vernon Brumfield, coxswain; Andrew Rubin Kinney, seaman, second class; Albert Darazio, seaman, second class; Brigham Foster Smith, gunner's mate, first class; Leslie Malone, gunner's mate, first class; Doyle Shaw, seaman, first class; Edward Homer Huffman, seaman, first class; John Albert McCormick, seaman, second class; Stanley Joseph Skrnas, boatswain's mate; Albert Leonard Lawson, seaman, first class; Fred Graham Ever, seaman, second class; William Howard Ward, quartermaster, third class; James Thomas Wood, fireman, first class; George Allen Byers, boatswain's mate, first class; James Durvard Holliday, seaman, first class; Philip Cunningham, seaman, first class; Wallace Waltham Keyes, boatswain's mate, second class; Frederick William Zacharias, seaman, first class; William George Cook, seaman, first class; Stephen Beto, seaman, first class; Frank Leo Kolonski, seaman, first class; Bartholomew David Kinley, seaman, second class; C. C. Caldwell, seaman, first class; Joseph Berg, engineer, second class; George Eugene Magill, seaman, first class; William F. Lubo, seaman, second class; Peter A. Flynn, seaman, first class; Howard A. Walkup, seaman, first class; Frank B. King, seaman, first class; John D. Sharkey, seaman, first class; Clarence T. Bourgeois, seaman, first class; Floyd B. Kimball, seaman, first class; Claude N. Sullivan, seaman, second class; Andrew J. Sloan, fireman, second class; Rodney L. Anderson, seaman, first class; Floyd A. Raymond, seaman, first class; Paul Green, chief yeoman; Cederic Kerr, seaman, second class; Bradford W. Smith, seaman, first class; Ted Carlyle Reagan, seaman, second class; Norman Lee Barbee, coxswain; Forbes Carlton Hopkins, seaman, first class; Homer Sylvester Bridges.

The explosion occurred while the battleship was practicing high elevation firing, taking advantage of the roll of the sea to gain distance. According to reports from members of the crew, one sailor called for electricity to be turned on for the charge and the switch was thrown open before the breech of the gun was closed, causing the terrific charge to fire backward into the turret.

The explosion also ignited four bags of highly explosive powder in the turret, adding to the catastrophe. A number of men in the handling room above the turret were terribly burned by the escaping flaming gasses.

Admiral Pratt, who in the absence of Admiral S. A. Robinson, is in command of the battle fleet, said that the disaster was the worst in the history of the navy. Other tragedies in which great loss of life occurred, he said, were to the U. S. S. Missouri in 1905, to the Kearsarge in 1905, and in the Honda (Cal.) destroyer wrecks last September.

Ill Health Results in Writer's Suicide

San Francisco.—Peter Clark Macfarlane, noted author and playwright, committed suicide in front of the coroner's office, adjoining the hall of justice. He fired a bullet into his left temple from an automatic and died instantly. Long-standing ill health is given as the cause of the suicide.

TRAIN ROBBERS' LOOT MILLION AND A HALF

Bandits Hold Up Train and Make Rich Haul

Chicago.—Four autoloads of bandits held up Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul mail train No. 57 about one mile south of Roundout, Ill., rifled the registered mail sacks carried in the six-car train, and escaped.

According to reports there were 20 highwaymen. They flagged the train at a crossing. As the engineer slowed down his locomotive the crowd of highwaymen surrounded the coaches and forced the mail clerks to open them.

It is estimated that the robbers got between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 in cash.

Federal officials said the holdup promised to take rank as the biggest and most daring in the history of railroading.

The robbers worked for 55 minutes in the collection of the loot, which amounts to between 42 and 45 pouches of registered mail.

Currency consigned by the Federal Reserve bank in Chicago to banks in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Seattle, Spokane and other cities of the Northwest was contained in practically all of the bags taken by the bandits.

War Department Will Find Funds for Bonus

Washington.—Responding to President Coolidge's request to bend every effort toward finding some way to go ahead with the administration of the soldiers' bonus law despite the failure of congress to appropriate the necessary money, the War department announced officially that the bonus would go forward as originally scheduled.

All unappropriated funds in the possession and under the control of the War department, amounting to several million dollars, will be utilized for this purpose.

The decision to use these funds was reached by Acting Secretary of War Dwight Davis following a conference with Budget Director Lord and Comptroller General McCarl.

Similar plans are being developed by the Navy department and veterans' bureau.

Will Avoid Special Session If Possible

Washington.—There will be no special session if it is possible to meet the financial needs of the government without one. President Coolidge believes that can be done and he has instructed government department heads to use every legal means to meet the emergency.

EPUBLICAN PLATFORM

leveland.—The following is the text the Republican platform as adopted the convention:

We, the delegates of the Republ- party in national convention as- bled, bow our head in reverent mory of Warren G. Harding.

A staunch Republican, he was first all a true patriot, who gave un- tingly of himself during a trying critical period of our national life. His conception and successful di- tion of the limitation of armaments ference in Washington was an ievement which advanced the world g the path toward peace.

favor the classification of post- masters in first, second and third class postoffices, and the placing of the prohibition field forces within the classified civil service without necessarily incorporating the present personnel.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

"The Republican party reaffirms its stand for agreement among the nations to prevent war and preserve peace. As an important step in this direction we indorse the Permanent Court of International Justice and favor the adherence of the United States to this tribunal, as recommended by President Coolidge. This government has definitely refused membership in the League of Nations and to assume any obligations under the covenant of the league. On this we stand.

"While we are unwilling to enter into political commitments which would involve us in the conflict of European policies it should be the purpose and high privilege of the United States to continue to co-operate with other nations in humanitarian efforts in accordance with our cherished traditions. The basic principles of our foreign policy must be independence without indifference to the rights and necessities of others and co-operation without entangling alliances.

Judgment Is Vindicated.

"This policy, overwhelmingly approved by the people, has been vindicated since the end of the great war. America's participation in world affairs under the administration of President Harding and President Coolidge has demonstrated the wisdom and prudence of the national judgment. A most impressive example of the capacity of the United States to serve the cause of world peace without political affiliations was shown in the effective and beneficient work of the Dawes commission towards the solution of the perplexing question of German reparations.

"The first conference of great powers in Washington called by President Harding accomplished the limitation of armaments and the readjustment of the relations of the powers interested in the Far East.

"We firmly advocate the calling of a conference on the limitation of land forces, the use of submarines and poison gas, as proposed by President Coolidge, when, through the adoption of a permanent reparations plan, the conditions in Europe will make negotiations and co-operation opportune and possible.

"By treaties of peace, safeguarding our rights and without derrogating those of our former associates in arms, the Republican administration ended the war between this country and Germany and Austria. We have concluded and signed with other nations during the last three years more than 50 treaties and international agreements in the furtherance of pence and good will.

Latin-American Affairs.

"New sanctions and new proofs of permanent accord have marked our relations with all Latin-America. The long standing controversy between Chile and Peru has been advanced toward settlement by its submission to the President of the United States as arbitrator, and with the helpful co-operation of this country a treaty has been signed by the representatives of 10 American republics which will stabilize conditions on the American continent and minimize the opportunities for war.

"Our difficulties with Mexico have happily yielded to a most friendly adjustment.

Succor to Russia and Japan

"Our policy, now well defined, of giving practical aid to other peoples without assuming political obligations has been conspicuously demonstrated.

FOREIGN DEBTS

"In fulfillment of our solemn pledge in the national platform of 1920, we have steadfastly refused to consider the cancellation of foreign debts. Our attitude has not been that of an oppressive creditor seeking immediate return and ignoring existing financial conditions, but has been based on the conviction that a moral obligation such as was incurred should not be disregarded.

"We stand for settlements with all debtor countries similar in character to our debt agreement with Great Britain. That settlement, achieved under a Republican administration, was the greatest international financial transaction in history. Under the agreement the United States now receives an annual return on $4,600,000,000 owing to us by Great Britain, with a definite obligation of ultimate payment in full.

"The justness of the basis employed has been formally recognized by other debtor nations.

"Great nations cannot recognize or admit the principles of repudiation. To do so would undermine the integrity essential for international trade, commerce, and credit. Thirty-five per cent of the total foreign debt is now in process of liquidation.

THE TARIFF

"We reaffirm our belief in the protective tariff to extend needed protection to our productive industries. We believe in protection as a national policy, with due and equal regard to all sections and to agriculture, industries and occupations. It is only by adherence to such a policy that the well being of consumers can be safeguarded, that there can be assured to American agriculture, to American labor, to American manufacturers a return to perpetuate American standards of life.

"A protective tariff is designed to support the high American economic level of life for the average family and to prevent a lowering to the levels of economic life prevailing in other lands.

"It is the history of the nation that the protective tariff system has ever justified itself by restoring confidence, promoting industrial activity and employment, enormously increasing our purchasing power, and bringing increased prosperity to all our people.

Raises Standard of Living

"The tariff protection to our industry works for increased consumption of domestic agricultural products by an employed population instead of one unable to purchase the necessities of life. Without the strict maintenance of the tariff principle our farmers will need always to compete with cheap lands and cheap labor abroad and with lower standards of living.

"The enormous value of the protective principle has once more been demonstrated by the emergency tariff act of 1921 and the tariff act of 1922.

"We assert our belief in the elastic provision adopted by congress in the tariff act of 1922, providing for a method of readjusting the tariff rates and the classifications in order to meet changing economic conditions when such changed conditions are brought to the attention of the President by complaint or application.

AGRICULTURE

"In dealing with agriculture the Republican party recognizes that we are faced with a fundamental national problem, and that the prosperity and welfare of the nation as a whole is dependent on the prosperity and welfare of our agricultural population.

"We recognize our agricultural activities are still struggling with adverse conditions that have brought about distress. We pledge the party to take whatever steps are necessary to bring back a balanced condition between agriculture, industry and labor, which was destroyed by the Democratic party through an unfortunate administration of legislation passed as war time measures.

"We affirm that under the Republican administration the problems of the farmer have received more serious consideration than ever before both by definite Executive action and by congressional action not only in the field of general legislation but also in the enactment of laws to meet emergency situations.

More Being Consumed Now.

"The restoration of general prosperity and the purchasing power of our people through tariff protection has resulted in an increased domestic consumption of food products while the price of many agricultural commodities is above the war price level by reason of direct tariff protection.

"Under the leadership of the President at the most critical time, a corporation was organized by private capital making available $100,000,000 to assist the farmers of the Northwest.

"In realization of the disturbance in the agricultural export market, the result of the financial depression in Europe, and appreciating that the export field would be enormously improved by economic rehabilitation and the resulting increased consuming power, a sympathetic support and direction was given to the work of the American representatives on the European reparations commission.

"The revival in 1921 of the War Finance corporation, with loans of over $300,000,000 averted in 1921, a complete collapse in the agricultural industry.

Financial Help Provided.

"We have established new intermediate credit banks for agriculture, and increased the capital of the federal farm loan system. Emergency loans have been granted to drought-stricken areas. We have enacted into law the co-operative marketing act, the grain futures and packer control acts; given to agriculture direct representation on the federal reserve board and on the federal aid commission.

"We have greatly strengthened our foreign marketing service for the disposal of our agricultural products. The crux of the problem from the standpoint of the farmer is the net profit he receives after his outlay. The process of bringing the average prices of what he buys and what he sells closer together can be promptly expedited by reduction in taxes, steady employment in industry and stability in business.

One Cure for Depression.

"This process can be expedited directly by lower freight rates, by better marketing through co-operative efforts, and a more scientific organization of the physical human machinery of distribution and by a greater diversification of farm products.

"We promise every assistance in the reorganization of the market system on sounder and more economical lines, and, where diversification is needed, government assistance during the period of transition.

"Vigorous efforts of this administration toward broadening our exports market will be continued. The Republican party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industry to assure its prosperity and success. We favor adequate tariff protection to such of our agricultural products as are threatened by competition. We favor, without putting the government into business, the establishment of a federal system of organization for co-operative marketing of farm products.

"The mining industry has experienced a period of depression as the result of the abnormal economic conditions growing out of the war. This administration has accomplished much in improving the conditions affecting this great fundamental industry, and pledges itself to continue its efforts in this direction.

Highways.

"The federal aid road act, adopted by the Republican congress in 1921, has been of inestimable value to the development of the highway system of the several states and of the nation. We pledge a continuation of this policy of federal co-operation with the states in highway building.

"We favor the construction of roads and trails in our national forests necessary to the protection and utilization. In appropriations, therefore, the taxes which these lands would pay if taxable should be considered as a controlling factor.

LABOR

"The increasing stress of industrial life, the constant and necessary efforts, because of world competition, to increase production and decrease costs has made it specially incumbent on those in authority to protect labor from undue exactions.

"We commend congress for having recognized this possibility in its prompt adoption of the recommendation of President Coolidge for a constitutional amendment authorizing congress to legislate on the subject of child labor and we urge the prompt consideration of that amendment by the legislatures of the various states.

"There is no success great enough to justify the employment of women in labor under conditions which will impair their natural functions.

High Standards for Women.

"We favor high standards for wages, working and living conditions among the women employed in industry.

"We pledge a continuance of the successful efforts of the Republican administration to eliminate the seven-day, twelve-hour work week, in industry. We regard with satisfaction the elimination of the twelve-hour day in the steel industry and the agreement eliminating the seven-day work week of alternate thirteen and eleven hours, accomplished through the efforts of Presidents Harding and Coolidge. We declare our faith in the principle of the eight-hour day.

"We pledge a continuation of the work of rehabilitating workers in industry as conducted by the federal board for vocational education and favor adequate appropriations for this purpose.

"We favor a broader and better system of vocational education, a more adequate system of federal free employment agencies with facilities for assisting the movements of seasonal and migratory labor, including farm labor, with ample organization for bringing the man and his job together.

RAILROADS

"The people demand and are entitled to have prompt and efficient transportation at the lowest rates, consistent with good service and a reasonable return on the value of the property devoted to public service.

"We believe that the American people demand, and we favor, a careful and scientific readjustment of railroad rate schedules with a view to the encouragement of agriculture and basic industries, without impairment of railroad service.

"The present law regulating railroads which were enacted to meet post-war conditions should be modified from time to time as experience shows the necessity therefor.

"The consolidation of railroads into fewer competitive systems, subject to the approval of the interstate commerce commission, should be provided for.

Labor Board Flexibility.

"The labor board provisions of the present law should be amended whenever it appears from experience that such action is necessary. Collective bargaining, mediation and voluntary arbitration are the most important steps in maintaining peaceful labor relations and should be encouraged. We do not believe in compulsory action at any time in the settlement of labor disputes.

"Public opinion must be the final arbiter in any crisis which so vitally affects public welfare as the suspension of transportation.

"Therefore, the interests of the public require the maintenance of an impartial tribunal which can in an emergency make an investigation of the facts and publish its conclusions. This is essential as a basis for popular judgment.

"We favor a stable, consistent and constructive policy toward our railroads.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL

"The prosperity of the American nation rests on the vigor of private initiative which has bred a spirit of independence and self reliance. The Republican party stands now as always, against all attempts to put the government into business.

"American industry should not be compelled to struggle against government competition. The right of the government to regulate, supervise and control public utilities and public interests we believe should be strengthened, but we are firmly opposed to the nationalization or government ownership of public utilities.

Plank on Coal Prices.

"The price and a constant supply of this essential commodity are of vital interest to the public. The government has no constitutional power to regulate prices, but can bring its influence to bear by the powerful instrument afforded by full publicity. When through industrial conflict, its supply is threatened, the President should have authority to appoint a commission to act as mediators and as a medium for voluntary arbitration. In the event of a strike the control of distribution must be invoked to prevent profiteering

MERCHANT MARINE

"The Republican party stands for a strong and permanent merchant marine built by Americans, owned by Americans and manned by Americans, to secure the necessary contact with world markets for our surplus agricultural products and manufactures; to protect our shippers and importers from exorbitant ocean freight rates and to become a powerful arm of our national defense.

GREAT LAKES WATERWAY

"Fully realizing the vital importance of transportation in both cost and service to all our people we favor the construction of the most feasible waterways from the great lakes to the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico, and the improvement and development of rivers, harbors, and waterways, inland and coastwise, to the fullest extent justified by the present and potent tonnage available.

"We favor a comprehensive survey of the conditions under which the flood waters of the Colorado river may be controlled and utilized for the benefit of the people of the states which border thereon.

"The federal water power act establishes a national water power policy and the way has thereby been opened for the greatest water power development in history under conditions which preserve initiative of our people, yet protect the public interest.

WORLD WAR VETERANS

"We reaffirm the admiration and gratitude we feel for soldiers and sailors.

"The Republican party pledges a continual and increasing solicitude for all those suffering any disability as a result of service to the United States in time of war. No country and no administration has ever shown a more generous disposition in the care of its disabled, or more thoughtful consideration in providing a sound administration for the solution of the many problems involved in making intended benefits fully, directly and promptly available to the veterans.

"The confusion, inefficiency and maladministration existing heretofore since the establishment of this government agency has been cured and plans are being actively made looking to a further improvement in the operation of the bureau by the passage of new legislation. The basic statute has been so liberalized as to bring within its terms 100,000 additional beneficiaries. The privilege of hospitalization in government hospitals, as recommended by President Coolidge, has been granted to all veterans irrespective of the origin of disability and over $50,000,000 has been appropriated for hospital construction which will provide sufficient beds to care for all.

Proof of Party's Intent.

"Appropriations totalling over $1,100,000,000 made by the Republican congress for the care of the disabled evidences the unmistakable purpose of the government not to consider costs when the welfare of these men is at stake. No legislation for the benefit of the disabled soldiers proposed during the last four years by veterans' organizations has failed to receive consideration.

"We pledge ourselves to meet the problems of the future affecting the care of our wounded and disabled in a spirit of liberality, and with that thoughtful consideration which will enable the government to give to the individual veterans that full measure of care guaranteed by an effective administration machinery to which his patriotic service and sacrifices entitle him.

CONSERVATION

"We believe in the development, effective and efficient, whether of oil, timber, coal or water power resources of this government, only as needed and only after the public need has become a matter of public record, controlled with a scrupulous regard and ever vigilant safeguards against waste, speculation and monopoly.

"The natural resources of the country belong to all the people, and are a part of an estate belonging to generations yet unborn. The government policy should be to safeguard, develop and utilize these possessions. The conservation policy of the nation originated with the Republican party under the inspiration of Theodore Roosevelt. We hold it a privilege of the Republican party to build as a memorial to him on the foundation which he laid.

IMMIGRATION

"The unprecedented living conditions in Europe following the World war created a condition by which we were threatened with mass immigration that would have seriously disturbed our economic life. The law recently enacted is designed to protect the inhabitants of our country, not only the American citizen, but also the alien already with us who is seeking to secure an economic foothold for himself and family from the competition that would come from unrestricted immigration. The administrative features of the law represent a great constructive advance, and eliminate the hardships suffered by immigrants under the emergency statute.

"We favor the adoption of methods, which will exercise a helpful influence among the foreign born population and provide for the education of the alien in our language, customs, ideals and standards of life. We favor the improvement of naturalization laws.

ARMY AND NAVY

"There must be no further weakening of our regular army, and we advocate appropriations sufficient to provide for the training of all members of the National Guard, the citizens military training camps, the reserve officers' training camps, and the reserves who may offer themselves for service. We pledge ourselves to round out and maintain the navy to the full strength provided the United States by the letter and spirit of the limitation of armaments conference.

Anti-Lynching Law.

"We urge the congress to enact at the earliest possible date a federal anti-lynching law so that the full influence of the federal government may be wielded to exterminate this hideous crime. We believe that much of the misunderstanding which now exists can be eliminated by humane and sympathetic study of its causes. The President has recommended the creation of a commission for the investigation of social and economic conditions and the promotion of mutual understanding and confidence.

ORDERLY GOVERNMENT

"The Republican party reaffirms its devotion to orderly government under the guarantees embodied in the Constitution of the United States. We recognize the duty of constant vigilance to preserve at all times a clean and honest government and to bring to the bar of justice every defiler of the public service in or out of office.

"Dishonesty and corruption are not political attributes. The recent congressional investigations have exposed instances in both parties of men in public office who are willing to sell official favor and men out of office who are willing to buy them in some cases with money and in others with influence.

"The sale of influence resulting from the holding of public position, or from association while in public office, or the use of such influence for private gain or advantage, is a perversion of public trust and prejudical to good government. It should be condemned by public opinion and forbidden by law.

"We demand the speedy, fearless and impartial prosecution of all wrongdoers, without regard for political affiliation or position; but we declare no greater wrong can be committed against the people than the attempt to destroy their trust in the great body of their public servants. Admitting the deep humiliation which all good citizens share, that our public life should have harbored some dishonest men, we assert that these undesirables do not represent the standard of our national integrity.

"The government at Washington is served today by thousands of earnest, conscientious and faithful officials and employees in every department. It is a grave wrong against these patriotic men and women to strive indiscriminately to besmirch the names of the innocent and undermine the confidence of the people in their government. It is even a graver wrong when this is done for partisan purposes or for selfish exploitation.

"The Republican administration has already taken charge of the prosecution of official dereliction, and it will continue the work of discovering and punishing; but it will not confuse the innocent with the guilty, nor prostitute for party advantage the enforcement of the law.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

"We must have respect for law. We must have observance of law. We must have enforcement of law. The very existence of the government depends on this. The substitution of private will for public law is only another name for oppression, disorder, anarchy and the mob rule.

"Every government depends on the loyalty and respect of its citizens. Violations of the law weaken and threaten government itself. No honest government can condone such actions on the part of its citizens. The Republican party pledges the full strength of the government for the maintenance of these principles by the enforcement of the constitution and of all laws.

Greet Women Delegates.

"We extend our greetings to the women delegates who, for the first time under federal authorization, sit with us in full equality. The Republican party from the beginning has espoused the cause of woman suffrage, and the presence of these women delegates signifies to many here the completion of a task undertaken years ago. We welcome them not as assistants or as auxiliary representatives, but as co-partners in the great political work in which we are engaged, and we believe that the actual partnership in party councils should be made more complete.

"The Republican party reaffirms its unyielding devotion to the Constitution and to the guarantees of civil, political and religious liberty therein contained.

Ask a G. O. P. Congress.

"With us parties are essential instrumentalities of government. Our government functions best when the Chief Executive is supported by a majority in the congress of the same political faith, united by party principles and able by concerted action to carry out in an orderly way a definite, consistent and well balanced program.

"In urging the people to elect a Republican President and vice president we urge them to elect to the senate and house of representatives men and women who believe in the Republican principles, acknowledge party responsibility, and who can be relied on to keep faith with the people by carrying out the program which the Republican party presents and pledges itself to fulfill."

DID THE ENGINTER SEE IT?

Terry, riding with Tim in the letter's flivver, began to worry as they approached a grade crossing neck and neck with an express train.

"Wouldn't ye better stop and let her go by first?" he asked.

"Aw, what's the matter wid ye"? demanded im. "Can't ye see the sign tellin' the ingineer to look out fer th' cars?"

YELLOWSTONE PARK DANGEROUS

Stage drivers in Yellowstone Park reports a tourist, are asked many foolish questions. A woman deeply interested in the hot springs inquired, "Driver, do these springs freeze over in winter?" "Yes madam," was the reply "A lady was skating here last winter and broke thru and got her foot scalded."

RESISTING TEMPTATION

CONTRARY HOPES

A motorist who had run out of gas on the outskirts of a country town saw a youngster coming along the road carrying a longish tin can.

"Say, boy!" called the motorist. "I hope that's gasoline you have in that can."

"Gee! I hope it ain't,' returned the youngster. It'd taste like the dickns on ma's pancokes.

STAVING OFF DISASTER

A negro laundress had four boys who were so polite and well behaved that they excited the interest and admiration of one of her patrons.

"Mandy," said the mistress one day, "how did you manage to rajse your boys to be so mannerly and obedient?"

" Well, Ah'll tell you, missus," replied Mandy thoutfully. "Ah rais ed dem boys wid a barrel stave, an- Ah raised 'em frequent."

Pat and Mike were passing the butcher's stall where there were a pair of chickens for sale.

"We'll buy them, said Mike, "and whoever has the best dream tonight can cook them for himself tomorrow.

When they awoke that morning, Pat related his dream. He said:

"I dreamed that angles carried me up to heaven."

"You're right,' chimed Mike. "I saw you going up and thought you would never come back, so I got up, cooked the fowls, and ate them.

YES, WE HAVEN'T ANY

A young matron in whom the shopping instinct was strong asked a German grocer the price of lard

"Twenty-five cents a pound," he replied.

"They sell it for twenty cents down the street." she haid.

"But" asked Otto, "vy don't you buy it down there?"

"They haven't any," she explained.

"Oh, I see, replied the grocer. "Ven I don't have any I sell it for ten cents."

OR A SHAMROCK TREE

An Englishman, a Dutchman and on Irishman had been convicted of a crim and sentenced to be hanged. In passing the sentence, the judge informed them they would choose the tree from which they would swing into eternity. The Englishman decided upon an elm, the Dutch man a linden.

"All right, my good man," said the judge turning to the ill-fated son of Erin. "now what tree do you choose?"

"Faith, your honor, ye may give me a gooseberry tree."

"Come, come," said the judge, "you know a gooseberry bush is not tall enough."

"Well, then, sure Oi'll wait until it gr-r-rows."

EVEN ABOVE SUSPICION

In Georgia they tell of an old cook who was horrified to discover that one of the young Negro women, a helper in the kitchen, had been caught stealing.

"Now," said Aunt Mandy, "I don't believe in stealin'. I never takes nothin' 'cept it's something to eat or something to wear. or something what I thinks the missus won't miss or something the boss is too blind to miss."

HERE BIRTH CONFERS CITIZENSHIP

A child born of American parents on the high seas or abroad becomes an American citizen A child born on American soil is an American by right of birth and may vote when he becomes of age, whether his parents are naturalized or not. If born abroad and his parents become naturalized before he is of age their naturalization gives him all the rights of citizenhip.

SHORT CUTS IN HAY HARVEST

The piling up of the labor peak from hay harvest, corn cultivation and small grain harvest has been incresed in the lt few years becuse of the farm labor shortage and more clover and alfalfa crops. The legume crops demnd fast and prompt handling if full value is to be gotten from them. Thoe farmers having tractors are hooking up two or more mowers, side delivery rakes, hay loaders, wagons for hauling hay from field to barns, etc. Wider cutting mowers are also in order. Where storage in the barn is the rule, the hooking of two or more loads of hay behind the tractor for hauling distances from field to farm has proved an econony. Baling the hay on a moving wagon as it comes from the hayloader i practiced by one ingenious Kansas farmer, the tractor pulling the outfit. This permits a big saving in hay of 20 per cent to 33 per cent as it can all go in to the barn instead ofbeingstacked out.

SHATTERED DREAMS

A farmer lad was playing Robin Hood.
An elm stick his horse a string the rein,
A broken shnigle was his sword, 'T was good
To see the baby charge with might and main.

The little lad too soon to school days grew;
The rural school a senate forum made,
In the three R's all of his soul he threw,
In memory' silent halls hs toys were laid.

To high school now he prouldly made his way,
His desk a counting room, a bar, a bank;
The world to his own genius soon must sway;
He now began to scorn the file and rank.

Imagination, fickle, fled away,
To earth he came on graduation morn;
Positions did not sally forth his way
He now is up at daylight plowing corn.

EIGHT YEAR OLD WONDER

The celebrated wonder child, Adele Aarons of Philadephia, continues to amaze scientists. She began to walk at 3 months. At the age of one year had the intelligence of an 8 year old child, and said to a visitor: "I am annoyed, you see. I'm cutting my teeth. I have never had molars before, you know. The pain is excruciating." There are hundreds of thousands of grown ups who will have to look in the dictionary for the meaning of "excrucjating." Maybe these rare wonder-children are forerunners of a super-race in the distant future. The boy of 10 today knows more than graybeards of 5000 years ago. Knowledge and wisdom are not the same however.

They spent the night at the home of John Tanner and left the next morning and expected to reach Pearl City, Ill. by that night.

Most boys like to take a long chance and Orvis Poort is one of them. The other day he lit a firecracker but it didn't go off. So he broke it in two to make a sizzler and lit the powder, still it didn't sizzle so he blew on it—it DID. That big scab on Orvis' nose is where the powder did the sizzling business. But that's part of the fun of shooting fire crackers. When we were kids they had cannon crackers over a foot long and two or three inches in diameter and they furnished some real thrills. Shucks! fire crackers aren't half dangerous anymore to suit the American boy.

Dr. Missman experienced a thrilling auto accident Tuesday afternoon about two miles north of Klmeme on the east road. Doc was driving W. F. Pavey's Ford sedan as his own car was being repaired. The road had been newly dragged and as near as Doc can figure it out he got in a rut that was covered throw the car into a deep ditch. The car then came up in the road agani and landed on the radiator and turning over, coming to rest on the top with the wheels up. Doc crawled out of the wreck badly shaken up but not a scratch on him. The car was badly wrecked; the top being smashed off, windows broken and doors off. Doc must have lost the art of "flivver" navigation and it did not behave like his Buick.

GOOD YEAR FOR VINE CROPS

Plant Lice Will Be Mostly Eaten by Midsummer.

One of the most important things to the growing of vegetables, according to C. B. Fitch, extension professor of horticulture, Iowa State College, is the insect population and the losses he may suffer as a result of that population. Thel osses can be foretold. as well as the weather, he says.

At present there is a very heavy population of plant lice, in Iowa, due to the cool weather, which is favorable to their production. Nature has so timed plant lice that appear in the spring shortly after the vegetation which they feed upon, and the insects that eat lice appear shortly after the lice themselves appear. This year however, the cool weather has been favorable to the plant lice and has not been favorable to the insects that eat them. However, the vast population of plant lice now assures an abundant crop of lice eating insects in midsummer. The lady beetle is the out standing example of this class of insects.

It is in years with backward springs that cucumbers, cantaloupes and watermelons, do best, because the very condition which favor plant lice in early spring and make them so abundant merely assures a good crop of lice eating insects in midsummer, when plant lice might be most destructive.

REMOVE THE ROOSTERS

The breeding season is over or very nearly so and there is no use whatever in keeping the male birds with the flock any longer. We long ago learned that an infertile egg is a far better keeper than a fertile one at any season of the year and during hot weather the advantage of the infertile product is greatly increased. The hens will lay just as well or perhaps better without the males in the flock and if a really high grade summer egg is to be produced the males must be removed.

There is nothing theiretical about this. Several of the experiment stations, notably Kansas, have conducted tests and out of these tests have grown the "Swat the Rooster" campaigns which have already done much to improve the quality of summer produced eggs. On all too many farms the roosters are allowed to run with the flock the year around and altogether too many fertile eggs are finding their way to the summer markets. We do not advocate killing off all the roosters. Some of them are too valuable as breeders for such drastic action. Nevertheless the greater number of breeding males to be used next spring will be crockerels and the quicker the old males not intended to be kept over are disposed of the better. Even when a male is kept over it is better to confine him and keep him away from the main flock. He be a better spring breeder if so handled.

The production of infertile eggs has a very important bearing on an economic phase of the poultry industry which merits consideration at this time. The poultry population is on a rapid increase and in spite of the rather poor hatch over much of the counrty this spring we are soon to see a surplus of poultry productis. unless all signs fail. In order to dispose of this surplus we have got to teach the people of the country to consume greater quantities of poultry produce. And the first step in bringing about an increased consumption is the production of a higher quality product. To get a higher quality product on the market we must begin in the farms where the poultry produce originates. Producing infertile eggs will do a great deal toward increasing the attractiveness of the eggs which finally reach the consumers table. By doing our part we can help incourage a greater demand for high quality eggs at profitable prices and thereby help to maintain our industry on a money making basis. — The Iowa Homestead.

TO ELIMINATE BOVINE T. B.

Twenty- six Iowa counties already have adopted the county area plan of bovine tuberculosis eradication whereby the county, as a unit, cooperates as a unit, with state and federal authorities in eradication of the disease In addition to these 26 counties, indications are that as many more will adopt the plan this summer. The following recently have made preliminary organization of county-wide committees to get work started: Story, Marshall, Benton, Fayette, Mitchell, Lyon, Paige, Dallas and Iowa.

The rush to get the county area plan adopted this summer is due, according to Dr. K. W. Stouder, extension veterinarian. Iowa State College, to the necessity of getting the plan across in time for the September tax levy.

To get the county area plan adopted it is necessary that an egreement with the state and federal authorities, in the form of a petition, shall be signed by the majority of the owners of breeding cattle. If 51 per cent of the owners sign the petition, the county supervisors must levy a tax, not to exceed three mills, for a fund to be used in the conjunction with state and federal funds for that purpose.

If 75 per cent of the breeders sign, every breeder is compelled to have his breeding cattle tester for tuberculosis.

All taxpayers in the county pay the levy, since occasionally the breeder is compelled to sustain losses from condemned herds and the city man is benefited by the assurance of wholesome milk and butter.

A Tale of the Flatwoods

By DAVID ANDERSON
Author of "The Blue Moon"

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Co.

The tracks had been made by a boot much worn and frayed. The man that made them must have been large and heavy, for his boot heel had dented deep into the floor boards, and the length of his stride indicated him to be little, if any, under six feet. The profusion of tracks, together with a number of half-burned matches scattered about the floor, indicated that he had been there some time—possibly several times.

The woodsman found himself wondering what manner of man he could have been, and what his purpose. And why did he bring a lamp instead of a candle? Lamps were none too plenty in the Flatwoods. Again there came over him that strangely disquieting premonition of danger—intangible; indefinable; deadly deliberate.

Everything pointed to the conclusion that the cabin's unknown visitor would come again—probably with the night. The lamp on the box, the blanket ready to hang over the window, were not without a purpose. What that purpose might prove to be could only be conjectured—possibly horse stealing. But no, or why a lamp instead of a candle?

He glanced up at the loft—except for a few boards lying loose and scattered about upon the joists, the cabin was open to the roof; he looked around into the dim far corner back of the door—it was half filled with a clutter of rubbish, broken boxes and the like—but no tracks led that way.

Using the greatest care to conceal his footprints, he opened the door, stepped cautiously out, closed it and, after a critical look about the surrounding weeds and bushes, slipped away up the side of the timbered bluff, through the woods and back to his unfinished chores.

After a hasty supper, he drew out his revolver; bent over it a brief but thoroughly competent instant of inspection by the candle; tried the trigger-pull; twirled the cylinder; dropped it back in the holster; blew out the candle and laid his hand to the door-latch. The warning of the mountain girl crossed his mind—he turned back; closed the hearth of the cook stove to hide its light; opened the door softly and stepped out into the gathering night toward the dead woodchopper's cabin.

The cloud-bank had dissolved in the west when he again reached the ill-omened hovel and the sky was hanging out its stars—the big ones already out, and the little ones coming.

He again crept down the wooded face of the bluff and, under cover of the fallen oak, festooned with the wild cucumber vines, stole up to the chink in the wall and peeped between the logs. The cabin was apparently empty of its unknown intruder.

After listening intently for some time he again stole around the wall to the door, pushed it slowly open and entered. As soon as his eyes grew accustomed to the gloom, he saw that the room was just as he had left it a few hours earlier.

Not daring to venture out on the floor, the light being too dim again to risk hiding his trail by stepping in the tracks, he reached up, caught one of the joists and, swinging from hand to hand, crossed to the far corner of the room; concealed himself behind the old boards and boxes of the rubbish heap and sat gripping his sore shoulder—the exertion had opened the gash, and he could feel the blood crawling down his side.

There is something depressing, fearsome, about entering an old deserted house—especially after nightfall. And this was the cabin of dead Henry Spencer. Few flatwoodsmen would care to go near it—much less into it—at such an hour.

Jack watched the last faint light from the west die out in the smudged window—so foul with clay that he had not been able to make out more than the bare outline of the face that had peered through it a few hours before. He knew the bats were darting about in the cabin, for the dark was alive with the click of their teeth. A screech owl shivered his lonesome wail from an upstanding branch of the fallen oak.

The woodsman half started, listened closely, smiled. The sound was genuine—it was a screech owl.

The low wash of Eagle run, lapping the rocks in its shallow bed, came up across the lonely road; the melancholy note of a whippoorwill carried down out of the woods.

A sound fell upon the night—the low swish of weeds in the yard—and the woodsman grew tense and strained. There followed a guarded footfall; a hand fumbled over the door. It opened; a heavy step creaked the sagging floor; a form bulked huge and black in the gloom; a hand and arm passed across the window and hung the blanket into place.

A match scraped—one of the old-fashioned kind that sputter a while before making much light—the chimney of the lamp was raised; the match laid to the wick. Out of the dark flared the powerful form and truculent face of—Black Bogus.

After a somewhat close study of the tracked floor, he went around on the other side of the lamp to the ruined hearth, lifted up a loosened slab of stone and felt under it.

Apparently what he expected to find was not there, for he swore, put the slab back, rose and slouched across the floor toward the rubbish heap. The man hiding behind it crouched still as one of the cabin logs and fingered the pistol butt at his hip. But the ruffian only rummaged out an old box, carried it back to the light and sat down.

Drawing a short pipe from his pocket, he filled it from a grimy tobacco sack, lighted it with another of the sputtering matches, and, with the air of a man quite at his ease, began to smoke.

As he smoked, the bitter lines of his face relaxed a trifle, and its half-haunting resemblance to a face that dwelt—and would ever dwell—in his memory again stole across the mind of the watcher.

But Black Bogus had not smoked long until it became apparent that he was anything but a man at his ease. Every sound outside received his strained attention, and when not listening, he smoked viciously.

At last he shuffled himself erect, felt of his elbow where it had rested heavily upon the larger box, knocked the ashes from his pipe, dropped an arm across his knee, bent forward and seemed lost in thought.

Shifting his pose after a time, he straightened, put away his pipe, reached into the inside pocket of his faded coat and drew out a thick bunch of greenbacks—a handful of bills that appeared to be an assortment of tens and twenties.

The woodsman guardedly shifted his position so as to get a better look. As he did so, his knee accidentally jostled the rubbish heap.

With an oath Black Bogus chucked the money back into his pocket and leaped at one bound into a corner out of range with the window, a heavy revolver balanced in his hand, his eyes sweeping every nook and cranny from which the alarming sound might have come.

At that tense instant a bat, darting about under the rafters, blinded by the light, dashed itself against the cabin gable and fell almost at the desperado's feet.

"Damn the thing!" he growled, placing his foot upon the half-stunned creature and grinding it to death, at the same time thrusting the heavy revolver into his pocket and turning back to the light.

He slouched down on the smaller box; took the money out of his pocket again and began a close inspection of each bill, one by one. Ten of the bills—the ones that appeared to the man watching him to be the newest—he laid out upon the box. The others he put back in his pocket.

Then an astonishing thing happened to the ten new bills. He took from his greasy, wrinkled trousers a plug of tobacco and snipped off a chew with his powerful teeth; drew from the side pocket of his coat half a handful of what looked to be ordinary black soil of rotted leaf mold; moistened it very slightly with tobacco juice; rubbed a little of it on each bill and scoured them between his hands, rumpling and crumpling them in every conceivable way. He rolled the corners between his fingers and thumbs; bent the corners down; twisted and scoured the bills as if he would wear them out.

It soon appeared that to wear them was the very thing he was attempting to do, for as he worked them and broke them in his powerful hands, they lost their newness and took on the look of bills that had been long in circulation. He was making old money out of new. Light began to dawn on the man watching him.

An hour or more he spent at the task. When at last it appeared to be finished to his satisfaction, he examined them all close to the light, bill by bill.

They appeared to pass the very painstaking and critical inspection, for, with a satisfied grunt, he picked up his pipe, relighted it and smoked nervously.

Another hour or more he smoked and fidgeted; finally turned the lamp low; strode to the door, opened it a narrow slit and peeped out.

But apparently enough of the night had not gone for whatever purpose he had in mind, for with a muttered grunt, he closed the door; strode impatiently back and forth across the floor a time or two; slouched down upon the box and, without turning up the light, again hunted his pipe.

It must have been well toward midnight, and the cramped position of the man behind the rubbish heap had grown almost unbearable, when, after many peeps through the narrow slit at the door, Black Bogus blew out the light and very softly slipped out of the cabin.

The woodsman rose, listened to the low swish of Black Bogus' receding steps among the weeds until there came the creak of the rails as he climbed the fence into the Eagle Hollow road. Opening the door with the utmost caution, Jack slipped out and stood listening—the steps had turned down the road toward the village. He closed the door and followed.

He had not shadowed the renegade far until it became plainly evident that he was a very indifferent woodsman. Sticks snapped under his feet, bushes slapped back into place as he brushed against them, and once or twice his boot struck the ground with a clumsy thud. Clear down to the mouth of the hollow Jack stalked him. He took the path that led along the east bank of the stream, and, when he came to the fork, followed the branch that led to the little park.

The woodsman stole after him, taking the path himself this time and grinning dryly at the compliment he had paid the fellow the night before in thinking he might notice the croaking of the frogs. It was a refinement of woodcraft of which Black Bogus had probably never dreamed.

Down into the little park and to the seat at Whispering spring the hulking shadow crept; again, as on the night before, the man crouched down among the gnarled maple roots by the rustic seat.

The windows of the red-roofed cottage were dark. The place lay serene and peaceful, with no spark of light alive to show that it was awake to the sinister web of evil slowly weaving about it.

After an interval spent in listening, the crouched figure among the gnarled maple roots lifted his hands to his mouth and again the lonesome wail of the screech owl shivered out upon the night. The woodsman seized the favorable moment to steal closer and to conceal himself in a clump of shrubbery much nearer than he had ventured the night before.

Black Bogus had given his rather clever imitation of the screech owl three times, and was on the point of giving it again, when the parlor door opened and the tall figure of the preacher, without his glasses and with the stoop gone from his shoulders, came out on the porch. With a step that carried no suggestion of mincing nervousness he came down across the yard. The white butt of the six-gun at his side looked as if it belonged there.

He went straight to the spring; took down the dipper, making a very obvious amount of clatter in doing so; dipped himself a drink; hung up the dipper; turned back toward the house; stopped by the rustic seat, and held out his hand.

Black Bogus reached in the breast of his coat, drew out a package, the bunch of bills, without a doubt—and laid it in the waiting hand. The preacher put it inside his shirt bosom; turned away; hesitated; came back a step.

"Bogus, be ready any night now"—the hurried tones barely carried to the man hidden in the shrubbery—"there's a barrel o' money in there. I wouldn't 'a' believed any man would risk so much about 'im, and that old, out-o'-date safe—a horse jockey could open it. It's all right slippin' the goats"—he patted his breast—"in among the sheep like we're doin'; and it's lucky we printed a-plenty down the river off o' them new plates; and that was a great idea of mine—mussin' 'em up in leaf mold dampened with tobacco spit so's they'd look like old bills. The devil 'imself couldn't tell 'em.

"It works, and we'd carry it through, only for one thing—Warhope! He's suspicious. I saw it that first evening at the supper table. That's why I went on that fool seinin' spree—t' throw 'im off; and that's why I couldn't leave no notes under the slab at the old cabin as we'd planned. Where he got his clue I don't know, but he's got it. I had the devil's own time blindin' them hawk eyes of his this afternoon.

"Warhope!—and t' think Loge had 'im right at the point of a six-gun and let 'im beat 'im on the draw."

"An' me—had 'im at the point of a knife there in the schoolhouse," the man among the maple roots broke in—"why didn't y'u let me alone?"

The other whirled on him, and his voice thickened.

Vesuvius always has a plume of smoke waving over it. This caught the eye of one visitor to Naples to the exclusion of all else.

For days he viewed it from his hotel window with a telescope.

Proceeding then to make the acquaintance of some city officials, he asked the name of the mountain. They told him it was Vesuvius.

"Well," he stated, "I'm a revenue officer at home, and I'll just give your police a little tip. I have been watching that hill for a week now. I've had experience in such matters. They can't fool me. Somebody is running a still.—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

HALF-MILLION GET NEW YORK'S BONUS

New York's more than a half-million soldiers, sailors and marines are in line for payment of the state bonus, payment of which, according to announcements made to Legion officials, will soon begin.

As the American Legion is to have a primary part in disbursement of the big fund, posts have been supplied with full information, here passed on to those native New Yorkers, who, though entitled to the bonus, are now residing in other sections of the country.

1. Briefly, the provisions of this legislation are as follows: Forty-five millions of dollars have been appropriated to provide payment of bonuses to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors and marines of the World war. A commission, composed of the adjutant general as chairman, the attorney general, state comptroller and the state treasurer will be the distributing agents of the state of New York.

2. Honorably discharged soldiers, sailors and marines of the World war include every person, male or female, who was enlisted, inducted, warranted or commissioned and who served in active duty in the army, navy or marine corps of the United States at any time between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918, and who was honorably separated or discharged from such service, or who is still in active service, or has been retired, or has been furloughed to a reserve. Also every person who was enlisted in the army nurse corps or the navy nurse corps, and who served in active duty therein at any time between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918, and who was honorably discharged or separated from such service or is still in active service.

3. Every honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine, as above defined, who, at the time of enlistment or induction to the military or naval service of the United States, was an actual resident of the state of New York, is entitled to receive $10 for every entire month that such person was in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States during the World war; the maximum to any person being $150.

4. The widow or widower, child or children, mother, father, brother and sister, in the order named, and none other, of such soldiers, sailors, or marines who, without having received payment of this bonus, dies after the act takes effect, shall be paid the sum that such deceased would have been entitled to under the provisions of the law if such veteran had lived.

5. All payments made under the provisions of this law are exempt from all taxation and from levy and sale on execution.

6. All applications for benefits under this law must be filed with the commission before the first day of July, 1925.

7. No agent, attorney or any other person shall demand, be entitled to or receive any compensation for his services in prosecuting any claim for any bonus under this law. Penalties are provided for false statements.

8. The bonus is not transferable, except assignments to any corporation formed prior to the passage of the legislation and organized solely for aiding disabled or incapacitated veterans, shall be valid. As an example, assignments may be made to the Veterans' Mountain camp of the American Legion, Department of New York; and provision has been made on the application blanks for such assignments.

9. Payments of this bonus will be made in one lump sum.

10. Veterans who were actual residents of the state of New York at the time of enlistment, but who are now residing in other states, are entitled to the benefits of this law. They should make application to the adjutant of the American Legion of the state in which they now reside, as application blanks will be distributed to the state headquarters of all states for the convenience of veterans residing in such states. Any American Legion post will advise the name and address of the department adjutant.

11. Veterans of the World war residing in the state of New York should communicate with the American Legion post in the community in which they live, for arrangements have been made for distribution of applications through these posts, and assistance will be rendered in the filing of the applications. A certified copy of the discharge must accompany application, and this copy may be certified by a notary public, commissioner of deeds, justice of the peace, etc.

12. A bill has been introduced, at the request of the American Legion in the legislature to provide for payment to the next of kin of those who made the supreme sacrifice, and those who have died since the signing of the armistice, for the amount due for each full month of active service and it is expected this bill will pass. It provides for $1,500,000 to be handled by the bonus commission.

13. Provision is made in the application form for filing of claim by a guardian or committee of veterans who have been declared to be insane or of unsound mind.

14. The American Legion posts throughout the state have made arrangements to assist veterans in filing applications. Get in touch with the Legion posts in your community and they will take care of you.

15. The entire work of the commission will be handled at Albany, New York.

HEADACHES GONE TIRED NO MORE

Gives Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Hopes Other Women Will Benefit by Her Experience

Skowhegan, Me.—"I was sick most of the time and could not get around to do my work without being all tired out so I would have to lie down. One day when I was reading the paper I saw the Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertisement and saw what it did for other women, so I thought I would try it. I have taken three bottles, and cannot begin to tell you what it has already done for me. I do all my work now and keep up the whole day long without lying down. I have no more headaches nor tired feelings. I hope every woman who takes the Vegetable Compound will get as much benefit out of it as I have." —Mrs. PERCY W. RICHARDSON, R.F.D. No. 2, Skowhegan, Maine.

You have just read how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped Mrs. Richardson. She gave it a trial after she saw what it had done for other women. For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been thus praised by women. For sale by druggists everywhere.

No Need to Bother With the Middleman

A farmer of German descent entered the drug store of a small Ohio town, as the story was told at the Salesmanship luncheon recently by Martin L. Pierce of Canton, Ohio, expert in industrial relations.

"I want an undertaker," he announced to the druggist, who, as it happened, was president of the local Salesmanship club.

"Why, who's dead?" the druggist inquired sympathetically.

"Nobody's dead, but my wife's sick, so I want an undertaker," the farmer repeated.

"You don't mean an undertaker, you want a doctor; I'll get you one," the druggist replied reaching for the phone.

"Oh, no, I don't; I want an undertaker," the man insisted. "Ain't we been hearing at every meeting of the Salesmanship club how we should eliminate the middleman?"—Houston Post.

Whale Meat as Food

Whaling has now been established on a scientific basis by the Norwegian industry. After years of extravagant killing when nothing but the blubber was utilized, whales are now being utilized completely, boneless whale meat being an important product.

It was considered necessary last year to grant whaling permits under concessions covering all Norwegian waters, in order to prevent undue competition and to insure the best utilization of the whale. Fresh whale meat compares favorably with other meats, according to scientific tests conducted by Christiania university.

Elephants Increasing

Persons fond of pets will be delighted to know that the size of the world's elephant tribe is increasing. There was a danger at one time that these animals would be entirely wiped out by the gunners from all over the world who went to Africa for the purpose of getting a shot at some real big game, and incidentally the ivory which they might gather up at the same time.

A few years ago it is said that as many as 70,000 were killed annually, says the Providence Journal. In some localities the slaughter was checked by laws protecting the elephant, but what is said to have been the greatest boon to the big animal was the war, which had the effect of keeping the so-called sportsmen away from their haunts.

The world's supply of real ivory at present is said to be 250 tons annually.

'No!' says I. 'All right,' says he. 'Get down out'n that there waggin, and I'll whip you on less ground than a two-dollar bill will cover!' 'I hain't got no two-dollar bill,' says I, beginning to climb down. 'I have!' says he.

Life gives you just 13 years of real health—and happiness

Average Health Span extends only from age 18 to age 31, according to United States Life Tables, 1920

Assuming that you are the average person, you will enjoy health—physical freedom and full vigor—only from age 18 to 31. This astounding fact is shown by the United States Life Tables, 1920.

Your earning power will decrease rapidly after 40. That period commonly called "the prime of life" will actually be an age of decay.

This sounds sensational. It is sensational. But it is true—and it is something to which the wise man or woman will give serious thought.

Of course, it is not natural, or right. It is the direct result of an artificial mode of life—of careless eating, sleeplessness, and stimulated nerves. Nature provides a danger signal—fatigue—to warn when the body needs rest. The person who regularly deadens the fatigue signal by the use of a drug is overriding the warning of nature.

That is what coffee does. The average cup of coffee contains 1½ to 3 grains of the drug caffein—classified as a poison. This is a dose of caffein of the size often administered by physicians in cases of heart failure. It is a powerful stimulant. It appears to give new strength by deadening the fatigue signal. Actually, this new strength is robbed from the body's own reserve.

Coffee contains no nourishment. Its only virtues, as a beverage, are its warmth and flavor. A good, hot, drugless drink is a benefit with every meal.

Millions enjoy such a drink in Postum. A drink made of whole wheat and bran, skillfully roasted, with a little sweetening—nothing more. A drink with the rich, mellow, full-bodied flavor of this wholesome grain. Every member of the family can drink it every meal of the day, enjoy its deliciousness, crave it, knowing there isn't a sleepless hour, a headache, or a taut nerve in it.

WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

Andrews Off Again for the Gobi Desert

Roy Chapman Andrews, the explorer, has left New York for Peking to spend a year organizing the largest scientific expedition in history for a search in Mongolia and Central Asia for remains of early human beings and prehuman types in the interest of the American Museum of Natural History. Andrews is the man who secured the dinosaur eggs on the last expedition.

The expedition will not start to move into Mongolia until next spring. It will then consist of about 200 camels, a squadron of motor trucks and motor cars, hundreds of coolies and a number of experienced fossil hunters, automobile experts and a group of leading American scientists.

In regions of the Gobi desert, further west than those searched last year, the expedition will concentrate on the search for remains of men of thousands, hundreds of thousands and millions of years ago. One bed of Tertiary remains 1,000 feet thick has been "staked out" along the base of the Altai mountains. The bones of animals often associated with man have been found there.

President Harry Fairfield Osborn of the museum and other scientists associated with him have massed evidence which, in their opinion, shows that the human race was developed from ape-like ancestors in this part of the world and that the apes themselves rose from earlier forms here.

Pepper Proposes New "Way of Peace"

Senator Pepper of Pennsylvania offered in the senate a resolution proposing that the United States join the existing World court on the condition that the court be completely divorced from the League of Nations. The senator framed the resolution, at the request of his Republican colleagues in the foreign relations committee, for the purpose of harmonizing the differences between the recommendation of the late President Harding and President Coolidge that America join the court, with reservations keeping us clear of the league, and the attitude of the Republican opponents of the proposal.

The committee on foreign relations, to which the resolution was referred, reported it to the senate with a detailed explanation. The report says:

"The resolution accepts the court as an established institution and confirms the tenure of the present judges. If the resolution is adopted the President will be in a position, without further recourse to the senate, promptly to conclude with the states now adhering to the court a simple, direct and reasonable agreement. Under its terms the United States will align itself with 48 other states in maintaining and perpetuating this important international tribunal. On the other hand, the United States will remain, in that event, wholly free from any legal relation to the League of Nations.

Madden May Be Next Speaker of House

Martin B. Madden of Chicago may be the next speaker of the house. Speaker Gillett has an ambition to be elected senator from Massachusetts. So a new speaker is in order. At a meeting of the Republican members of the Illinois delegation in the house, at the home of Representative Britten, a resolution was adopted endorsing Madden as Illinois candidate for the office of speaker in the event the next house is Republican. Madden has so far made no announcement of his intentions. Commenting on the action of the Illinois Republicans, Representative Britten made this statement:

"Illinois has contributed 'Uncle Joe' Cannon and 'Jim' Mann to the house of representatives, and now presents the most powerful man on Capitol hill."

Representative Madden is serving his tenth term in congress. He is chairman of the committee on appropriations and has been a leader in the house for many years.

Representative Longworth, Ohio; Burton, Ohio; Cooper, Wisconsin; Graham, Pennsylvania; Tilson, Connecticut, also are aspirants.

He Did Not Kiss Her; She Kissed Him

If a United States senator is kissed by a pretty girl and likes it at the time, is he justified in falling into a rage weeks afterward? Apparently it all depends. Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska, chairman of the senate agricultural committee conducting hearings on the Ford Muscle Shoals bill, is a case in point. He put on the stand at the request of Senator Heflin of Alabama Mrs. E. A. Edmundson of Decatur, Ala., a supporter of the Ford offer.

"Do you remember that fine barbecue we had down there, senator?" Mrs. Edmundson asked. "I asked you, Senator Norris, if you might not favor the Ford offer. You said, 'Possibly.' You said, 'If I could kiss one of these pretty girls maybe I could be bribed.' Well, you did kiss one and you are against the Ford offer. It was a betrayal, senator."

Senator Norris became furiously angry. He sprang up from his chair and shouted:

"Your story is a falsehood. I know a blackmail plot when I see it. I didn't kiss that girl, she kissed me."

Mrs. Edmundson replied that she intended merely a pleasantry. Senator Norris' anger disclosed that the incident, built up and enlarged by rumor, has been used by some of the Ford advocates in a whispering campaign to discredit the chief opponent of the Ford bill.

Had Gay Funeral

By her own request, the funeral of the mother of Gen. Sir W. H. Congreve, noted British soldier, which took place in England, had as many of the features of a wedding ceremony as possible. The church was decorated with flowers, the service was fully choral, the clergy wore white stoles, the church bells rang a wedding peal and all the flags in the village were flown from the top of the staff.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

"My client," declared the first lawyer, "is willing to do the right thing."

"So is mine," said the second lawyer.

"In that case, the matter ought to be easy."

"I don't know. The next question is, What is the right thing?"

"Well?"

"And I fear it will take a long lawsuit to settle that."

JUNE IS THE MONTH OF BRIDES

Howard Wiles And Florence Behringer Married At Whittemore by Rev. Gedye

Mr. Howard Wiles and Miss Florence Behringer, both of Klemme stole a real march on their friends when they uiqetly slipped away last week Wednesday in company with Adolph Lauritsen and Miss Adella Schroeder and drove over to Whittemore, where Howard and Florence were united in marriage by Rev. A. B. Gedye at the Methodist parsonage. Miss Schroeder acted in the capacity of Bridesmaid while Mr. Lauritsen escorted the Groom.

Thus we imght briefly state the facts of the case but these fine young people are of great interest to our readers as they were raised right here in Klemme. Their love affair has been noticeable for some time and in a way their marirage was not altogether a surprise as it has been suspicioned for some time by their closest friends.

The Bride is the daughter of Mrs. Phil Behringer of this city. She is a very fine young lady in all respects. Is talented in music, especially the piano and frequently appears in public at entertainments with delightful musical numbers.

The Groom is one of Klemme's best young men and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Wiles. Howard is at the present time a student at Iowa State College where, we are pleased to say, he is making good in an engineering course and has a fine future before him.

In fact, words fail us in trying to do these fine young people credit; they are of the best of families, refined and qufet young people and we take great pleasure in joining with their many friends in extending best wisehs for a long happy married life.

LENA SWALVE AND ING. LAURITSEN MARRIED

We cannot give the facts of the case but we have it straight that Mr. Ing. Lauritsen and Miss Lena Swalve were married Saturday but as to the exact place and time we are unable to say. It is thought, however, that they were married at Spencer as they were seen there by some Klemme young men who had been at Spirit Lake fishing.

At any rate they are 'putting one over" on their friends.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Swalve of this city and is a young lady of many charms and is a quiet, modest but pleasing young lady to meet. She is such a lady that knows all about cooking and housekeeping and will be a fine helpmate for her husband.

Mr. Lauritsen, a son of Mrs. E. Salling, is a carpenter and contractor by trade and has built up a fine business while in Klemme. He is a young man of good habits and is an all around good scout as his many friends would say.

We hear that Mr. Lauritsen contemplates building a house for himself and wife and will make Klemme their home.

When this couple returns we hope to procure the facts of their wedding. At this time they are visiting with relatives in Iowa and South Dakota.

We join with their friends in extending best wishes.

A Friend

Life offers no joy like a friend;
Fulfilment and prophecy blend
In the throb of a heart with its own,—
A heart where we know and are known.

Yet more than thy friend unto thee,
Is the friendship hereafter to be,
When the flower of thy life shall unfold
Out of hindering, and darkness, and cold.

Love mocks thee, whose mounting desire
Doth not to the Perfect aspire;
Nor lovest thou the soul thou woulst win
To shut with thine emptiness in.

A friend! Deep is calling to deep!
A friend! the heart wakes from its sleep
To behold the world lit by one face;
With one heavenward step to keep pace.

O heart wherein hearts are known,
Whose infinite throb stirs our own!
O Friend beyond friends! what are we,
Who ask so much less, yet have Thee?

And say! The Klemme Band will be there in their new uniforms to help entertain you.

In the line of entertainment will be a ball game between Liberty and Klemme Sunday schools; horse shoe pitching; ladies races and stunts, foot races and i fthere is a fat men's race we will show our speed.

It's going to be a real picnic so be sure to be there. All are invited to come.

FREY GETS THREE YEARS IN PEN

Pled Guilty B fore Judge Davidson at mmetsburg Last Week

A. G. Frey pled guilty last week before Judge Davidson at Emmetsburg to making and selling moonshine liquor and he was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary at Anamosa. This was Frey's third appearance in court. He was convicted on his previous experiences in court on the same offence as he now pled guilty to.

Frey was caught red-handed by the officers several weeks ago. The officers brought in four gallon jugs of liquor they watched him make and the county had an iron clad case against. In his preliminary hearing he was bound over to the grand jury on $2,000 bonds and he failed to secure them. The fact that he pled guilty comes as no supprise for he has been thinking seriously of doing so for the past week. He will be taken to the pen the latter part of this week.

Frey has a family of nine children and his wife. One of his daughters is married. He has one son and two daughters nearly grown.—Ringsted Dispatch.

THE FLAG'S COLORS

On April 13, 1810, the present United States flag was finally adopted by Congress and raised over the House of Representatives in Washington. It floated high above the nation's capital city, and to those who were wise in the meaning of colors, it told a wonderful and sacred story. For religious purity, faith, chastity, integrity and justice. The heavenly blue means truth, constancy, fidelity, and steadfastness. The red tells of love and courage; of a royal heritage, and a freedom that will never die.

After watching the glorious banner of the stars, bearing aloft its sacred red, white, and blue, one longs anew to live worthily beneath its sheltering folds, and can say from the heart the beautfiul creed used by a school in New Orleans:

"I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign nation, of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

"I, therefore believe it is my duty to my country to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

NEW FLAG AND POLE FOR COURT HOUSE GROUNDS

The new flag pole has been erected in the Court House yard, and it is a fine improvement. The Board of Supervisors are to be complimented for making the investment. The Court House flag has always been flown from the pole on top of the Court House cupola, but it was a disagreeable job to put it up and take it down. The new flag pole is set just east of the fountain in front of the Court House and can be easily raised every morning and taken down at night and Janitor Lewis Henschen will see that is is always done.

The new pole is fifty feet high, made of steel pipe, set in concrete four feet deep ,and at the top of the olep s a large brass knob. A new flag five by eight was purchased and put up for the first time last Friday morning.—Garner Signal.

BAND CONCERTS ARE ASSURED IN KLEMME

FAMILY GATHERING

The Sutter-Ulrich-Plank Association, an organization whose member ship is composed of descendents of any one of these three families, are holding their annual meeting at Bay side today. Several hundred people are eligible to membership in this association, and a large crowd is enjoying today's meeting at the Lake. This association was formed several years ago, and the idea originates with relatives of the pioneer families of Sutter, Ulrich and Plank, most of whom are located on the vicinity of Monona. In this locality, eligibles are of the Ulrich and Sutter branches. All the connections of the Adam Schneider family are eligible to membership, as Mrs. Adam Schneider was a Sutter. At the meeting last year, which was held in the eastern part of the state, John Schneider was made president, and is the man in the big chair at Bayside. Mrs. R. B. Baldwin of this place, is a member of the program. Mrs. Blanche Armetrout is a member of the committee on arrangements, and she too has had much to look after. —Garner Leader.

SHOULDN'T CUT TOO OFTEN

Alfalfa May Easily Injured— Old Growth Should Be Left In Winter

"Wait until the alfalfa is in full bloom before you cut it," says F. S. Wilkins, farm crops specialist, Iowa State College.

It is sometimes difficult to tell when alfalfa reaches its full bloom stage. In such cases it is well to wait ten or fourtten days after the shoots are two inches high. This additional advantages of delaying haying time until corn cultivating is better in hand and until there is apt to be more favorable weather for curing hay.

"We used to think, says Mr. Wilkins, that alfalfa had to be cut a certain time when shoots were just so long. Now we know that once the alfalfa reaches full bloom stage that it can stand for two weeks without doing it a bit of harm except that it becomes a trifle courser. But it is much better to have it a little courser this year and much of the same kind next year than to have it fine this year and none next year." No attention is paid to the shoots may appear much in advance of the blooming periods.

The net results of extended experiments in Kansas and Wisconsin show that alfalfa is cut too often in the corn belt and that it would do better if it were not overworked. Two cuttings in northern I owa and three in southern Iowa should apparently give best results.

Overworking the crop results in reduced stands in subsequent years. Alfalfa roots must bze given time to build up a reserve of food materials, according to Mr. Wilkins. It is this that gives the field longevity and heavy top growth.

Young stands should not be cut or pastured the first year they are seeded, but should be allowed to develope a strong root system. Farmers should also make it a point to allow the old crop to go into the winter with plenty of top growth so that the plants may store up plenty of reserve food materials in their roots. They must have the top growth to build their roots.

SOME LARGE HAILSTONES

The weather bureau of the U. S. department of agriculture has been investigating for information concerning the size of hail stones. It finds that during a storm in Natal, South Africa, on April 17, 1874, stones that weighed 24 ounces each. They passed through a corrugated iron roof as if it were made of paper. Stones 14 inches in circumference were found in new south Wales in February, 1847. At Carzola, Spain on June 15, 1820, houses were crushed in by blocks of ice several of which weighed four and one half pounds each. In October, 1844 a hail storm at Cette, France, ruined houses and sank vessels.

GAVE FIRST CONCERT LAST NIGHT

The Klemme Band gave their first concert on Main Street last night, and on each Wednesday night will give a concert through-out the summer when weather permits.

The band concerts are now assured as the business men of Klemme have been liberal in their support of the band and nearly all of them have subscribed to the band concert fund for summer concerts. A few business men are yet to be seen but we are sure they will be with the band in this matter.

The band takes this opportunity to thank the business men for their support and in return will endeavor to put on concerts that will be a pride to Klemme.

Subscriptions are also coming in from men not in business and from farmers who want to help the band. The boys thank these people for their contributions.

The boys are operating the band entirely on their "own hook" until this past week when when the bsuiness men subscribed to the fund.

Many have expressed their desire to give a dollar or two to the band such as citizens of Klemme and farmers near here who enjoy the concerts. Such donations are welcome and anyone who feels they would like to help the band can leave their money at the First National Bank with C. G. Waterman or may send or leave it at the Times Office and a receipt will be given.

Beginning next week the list of boosters for the band will be published in The Times as the band boys want to give the band boosters do credit for their support and any one can feel proud to be on this list. The list will include only the names of business men, citizens and farmers who are supporting the band.

The band has quite a burden to bear in a financial way as thep have purchased uniforms, music and a band wagon. They are in debt about $200 and so even a small contribution will be welcome from anyone.

Let's boost the band folks.

HOW THE VOTE STOOD

A sort of Summary of the Vote on Governor

In the late primary election Lieutenant Governor John Hammill of Britt, carried 24 counties. Burbank, of Waterloo, 27, Joe H. Anderson of Winnebago, 24 and Haynes City, 12. Buser, carried Des Moines and Louisa Counties, but he lost his home county, Muscatine, to Hammill. Mr. Hammll also carried Cerro Gordo over its some candidate Co. Haynes and he carried Tama county over its home candidate, Banks. Mr. Banks although the the first candidate in the field, did not carry a single township in his own county Hamm.ll is the only candidate who carried counties in each of the congressional districts capturing 2 counties in the First, 4 in Second, 3 in Third, 3 in Fourth, 3 in Fifth, 5 in sixth, 1 in Seventh, 1 in Eighth, 1 in Ninth, 5 in Tenth and 6 in Eleventh. Burbank carried two counties in Second, 8 in third, 1 in Fourth, 3 in Seventh, 5 in Eighth, 2 in Ninth, 2 in Tenth and 3 in Eleventh. He carried no counties in either the Fifth of Sixth. Anderson carried 6 counties in the Fourth, 1 in Fifth, 1 in Seventh, 3 in Eighth, 2 in Ninth, 5 in Tenth and 5 in Eleventh. H carried no counties in the First, Second, Third and Sixth. Haynes carried 2 counties in First, 1 in Second, 1 in Fifth 2 in Sixth, 1 in Seventh, 4 in eighth 1 in Ninth, but got none in Third, Fourth, Tenth and Eleventh, altho the Fourth was his home district. The exact vote will not be known until officially canvassed but approximately Hammill received 95,000 votes; Burbank 85,000; Anderson, 75,000; Haynes 63,000, Buser 16,000; Banks 13,000.

Orleans Folk Parade in Honor of the Maid

Young French girls in their white communion dresses marching in the annual religious procession through the streets of Orleans marking the anniversary of that historic day in 1429 when the Maid of Orleans led the French armies to victory and liberated the ancient city from the English.

Hits Columbus As Being Discoverer

New Finds Strengthen Theory That He Was Not First in America.

Washington.—The recent discovery on Long Island of skeletons showing evidences of great antiquity has stimulated anew the old controversy as to who discovered America. The recent discovery is said to strengthen the case against Christopher Columbus as the real discoverer. In fact, historical science now seems to be leaning more and more toward the belief that centuries before Columbus was born America had been discovered and was fairly well known to Europeans.

The discovery at Malba, Long Island, attracted especial attention because experts in anatomy said that the skeletons unquestionably were those of white men and not of Indians. Further, it was clear to the experts that the skeletons were at least six centuries old.

The best-known story of early Norse discovery and occupation of American soil is that told in Longfellow's poem, "The Skeleton in Armor." Longfellow was familiar with the old stone tower which has stood at Newport, R. I., for so long that there is no trace of its origin. It was old when the Pilgrim fathers landed at Plymouth Rock. In 1831 a skeleton, clad in ancient armor, was unearthed near Fall River, Mass. The armor was of a character traceable to the Norse civilization of a very early date. Longfellow connected the two relics—the tower and the armed skeleton—and wove his fantastic ballad about them.

The ancient Icelandic and Scandinavian sagas make many references to a vast land across the western ocean which, it is contended, could not be other than the American continent. It was believed to be an island of comparatively small size.

Greenland, of course, was well known and colonized centuries before the day of Columbus and the sagas seem to indicate that voyages were made down to the American mainland. This land was referred to in the old records as Vinland because of the profusion with which vines and other vegetation grew about cultivation. It will be remembered that when Sir Walter Raleigh, centuries later, made his first visit to these shores he was particularly struck by the luxuriance of the uncultivated vegetation.

Dighton Writing Rock.

It seems natural that most of the Norse relics should be found in New England, as this would be the first territory in what is now the United States, which the vikings would strike in coming down from Greenland. Ancient implements, certainly not of Indian origin, have been plowed up in New England fields, and in Bristol county, Mass., there has been found an inscribed rock, now called the Dighton writing rock, which bears rough lettering telling that a viking identified as Thorfinn Karlsefni, with 150 men, landed and took possession of what is now Massachusetts about the year 1007. The rock was discovered by the Puritans in 1680.

Probably the most amazing find in connection with Norse antiquities in America was that of what is known as the Kensington rune stone in 1898. It was discovered by a farmer who was engaged in grubbing up stumps on his farm near Kensington, Minn. The stone was imbedded in the roots of a tree. Its inscription has been liberally deciphered and tells how eight Goths, or Swedes, and twenty-two Norsemen journeyed to that spot where they were attacked by Indians. The implication is that, while surrounded and besieged by the savages, the vikings carved the stone in the hope that some day their people would find trace of what had become of them. The amazing fact is that the stone is clearly dated "Year 1362."

Columbus' discovery of America, it will be remembered, was in 1492, a hundred and thirty years later. That a small party of vikings, accustomed only to the sea, should have gone nearly half way across the American continent seems incredible. Undoubtedly, they sailed in small craft up the Great Lakes.

Another astonishing evidence of how widespread were the explorations of the Norse on this continent is to be found in northern Georgia. Atop a mountain there has been found a pretentious fort of an antiquity which places it far earlier than the date of the Spanish explorations. The medicine men of the Cherokee Indians are declared to have told the first English settlers that long before they appeared another race of white men had held the country and built the fort on the mountain. The mountaintop is encircled by a stone wall, originally about 4 feet high and 3 feet wide. It is nearly half a mile in total length.

Even Name of Norse Origin.

In addition to the old weapons found and the tablets and stone edifices, the experts declare that there are other indications which should conclusively prove that Columbus is not entitled to the credit for the discovery of the western hemisphere which he has enjoyed so long. For many years the common teaching ha been that the name America was bestowed on the continent in honor of the great Italian navigator Amerigo Vespucci, who followed Columbus and made maps and charts and wrote records of the new world.

The proponents of the Norse theory combat this idea, saying that even the name comes from a northern source.

It is claimed that Leif Ericson, a viking, made the first discovery of America about the year 1000, or nearly five centuries before Columbus came. In the Scandanavian language there is the old word "amt" which means land. It is contended that the new world would most probably be named after its discoverer, whose name was Ericson. A natural name, it is pointed out, would be Amt-Eric, of the Land of Eric. It is only necessary to elide the latter "t" from the first syllable of the word to produce the word America as it is spelled today. This is much nearer to the present word than the Italian name Amerigo. Also, it is claimed, a land would scarcely be named after the first name of a man. The last name would more likely be used. Amerigo was Vespucci's first name. Eric or Ericson was the surname of Leif Ericson.

Much more evidence has been collected by historians and antiquarians showing that tribes of Indians called this continent America or a name of similar sound before the arrival of Columbus or before any of the early Spanish or English settlers came.

All these facts necessarily have much fascination for an American. Searches for additional information still are going forward and it seems likely that further evidence will be discovered. It is quite probable that the school books will have to be changed in the face of fresh and convincing evidence that, great as Columbus was, he was not the discoverer of the western world. The existing school books, of course, long have made mention of the early Norse voyages, but they have been treated more as uncertain and doubtful legends than as historical facts. If much more evidence accumulates, the legend theory will be displaced and the story of the viking must be accepted as the real basis of early American history.

HUMAN FACE IS GROWING LONGER, SAYS SCIENTIST

British Anatomist Reports That Teeth and Mouth Are Being Forced Downward.

London.—The human face is growing longer, according to Sir Arthur Keith, famous British anatomist.

Many strange changes are overtaking the human face, says this professor, who has spent a lifetime in studying the skulls of all races.

The chief change is in the bone of the mouth. This is growing downward and carrying with it the teeth, as a result of which there has been an increase of half an inch in the length of the modern face.

These changes, it seems, are also affecting the upper bones of the face, giving it a downward tendency. They correlate with changes in modern industrial conditions and Professor Keith believes they are due to the absence of light in the big cities

Among other changes which he mentions in the modern skull are:

A contracted palate.

Downward growth of cheek bone.

Teeth sinking backward.

Teeth now 12 millimeters below the teeth of primitive peoples.

Appearance of a sharp ledge of bone between the teeth and the nose.

"These changes are nothing like finished," says Sir Arthur. "I am convinced that the misplacement of the teeth and the resultant contracted palate are connected with such disorders as adenoids."

Fined $25 for Being Too Playful With Snake

Baltimore, Md.—A snake brought grief to Adam, and one of the descendants of the Garden of Eden reptile brought on a fine in police court for John Camerson, colored.

John attended a ball game on the lot where the circus had been two days before. While John was cheering the players a snake, left behind by the circus, slid between his legs.

John picked up the snake and walked over to Viola Wallace, colored, and let the coils of the reptile slide across her neck. Viola broke all records in her homeward flight.

John picked Mamie Bedford, colored, as his second victim. But Mamie didn't scare well. When John came near her with the snake she picked up a stick and beat him on the head.

After treatment at Colonial hospital he was taken to the police court. Mamie was arrested, charged with assault. When Magistrate Johannsen heard the story, John was fined $25 and costs for starting the disturbance. Mamie was dismissed.

Back to Side Saddle

London.—Woman equestrians are gradually reverting to the side saddle when on horseback, as they find riding astride develops muscles not good for dancing. A well-known riding master says the side saddle gives women more grace and security.

SHOULD BE PROUD

F. G. HUNTINGTON, former judge advocate of Camp Travis, Texas, in an address before the Yellowstone post of the American Legion in Billings, Mont., declared that the Legion should be proud of the charge that it was suffering from virile insomnia recently made by certain politicians in Washington. The charge, he said, was made by certain people who resented the Legion's pension, for keeping awake and kicking until it got what it wanted. Mr. Huntington emphasized the fact that only through positive and definite expression of their ideas and opinions could those ideas and opinions become known, and, more important, adopted.

"This idea that individual effort and expression is futile in the effort to accomplish the things the Legion stands for is ill-considered and fallacious," Mr. Huntington declared, 'for the men in Washington have their ear to the ground and take note of what people are saying."

RENEWS LEASE FOR TEXAS SANITORIUM

The American Legion sanitorium at Legion, Texas, has again been leased by the United States Veterans' bureau for a term of years. This fact apparently has little meaning, but the truth is, that by the acceptance of this institution the bureau is provided with one of the most adequately equipped and best adapted institutions in the nation.

The sanitorium is near Kerrville, Tex., where it was built mainly through the activity of the American Legion of the Lone Star state. The official station is now designated as "Legion," having received this name from the Post Office department.

Four years ago a construction wagon could not mount the hill on the present site of this hospital until brush had been chopped away. Today there stands one of the handsomest hospitals in the country. It was started primarily for World war disabled. The Roosevelt American Legion hospital, near Battle Creek, Mich., is the only other which was erected by veterans for the veterans.

But there was a specific reason for building this Texas hospital. Many soldiers contracted tuberculosis during the World war and it was erected for their care. The money for the building was raised by popular subscription and the project became one nearest the hearts of Texas citizens. A site was donated by the public-spirited citizens of Kerrville, approximating 800 acres. By the end of 1920, the power and subsistence buildings had been erected and two one-story ward buildings were well under way. But the country was hard hit in return to normalcy and the financial depression stopped all work. Many pledges remained unpaid, so the Legion sought the aid of the Benevolent War Risk Society of Texas, in the hope that the people would complete the projected buildings.

In the early part of 1921, the state legislature came to the aid of the Legionnaires and $1,500,000 was appropriated for erection of a 600-bed hospital where the Legion's work had begun. The Legion then donated its entire holdings to the state.

The administration building, having a ground area of 58 by 94 feet, is one of the handsomest buildings of the lot, a beautiful piece of brick work, finished with cut stone from the quarries of the site. The nurses' home is another of the showy buildings of the little city on a hill. The brick dormitories, of which there are eight, five of two stories; added to these are the two original stucco dormitories, making ten buildings in all. The buildings are designed so that each patient has a private room, with every modern convenience, and each of the ward buildings has its screened porch and sun parlor. The interiors of these buildings are finished in white enamel and tile, with carpeting of battleship linoleum.

The infirmary is the largest and most attractive building of the group. It is 140 by 295 feet and is two stories high. It is designed as an infirmary for the treatment of bedridden patients, and is equipped with everything conceivable for the successful treatment of such patients.

One of the most important pieces of construction in the whole scheme is the concrete and steel water tower. This structure stands 95 feet in height and is surmounted by a concrete tank 28 feet 8 inches in diameter and 29 feet in height. The capacity is approximately 100,000 gallons.

Other buildings are the vocational therapy building, garage, four junior officers' duplex cottages, storehouse, warehouse, oil pumphouse, fuel oil storage tanks, incinerator, sewage plant, laundry, powerhouse, dormitories and superintendent's home. The cost of the entire institution was $1,650,000.

Big Sardinian Dam

The dam on the Tirso river in Sardinia, officially opened April 28, creates an artificial lake with a capacity of 450,000,000 cubic meters of water, which will give an estimated annual output of 50,000,000 kilowatt hours of electric power and irrigate 75,00 acres of land. The cheap power created by this dam will permit local electrolytic treatment of zinc ores, which have been exported hitherto, and will favor the development of other industries in the region. This is the first of several similar projects in Sardinia to increase the agricultural developments of the island.

Keeping Him In

"Confound a cuss that'll leave his cistern uncovered so's another feller falls in!" yelled Gabe Giggery, who at that moment was in Mr. Johnson's cistern. "As soon as I get out I'll whip you on less ground than a two-dollar bill will cover!"

Will blind confidence lead you to physical disaster at age 31?

This is the experience of the average American, United States Life Tables, 1920, indicate

For the average person, health—physical freedom and full vigor—extends only from age 18 to 31. Then the slump. After 40, earnings fall off rapidly. What do these startling facts (taken from the United States Life Tables, 1920) mean for you?

It is time to check up. It is time to take stock of the present, and face the future with open eyes. Blind faith in the power of the human body to absorb punishment has failed miserably. Unwise eating, stimulated nerves, sleeplessness; disregard of the simplest laws of health; the lashing of the overwrought body to new exertions by the use of drugs—physical decay beginning at age 31! This is the tragic chronicle.

Nature provides a danger signal—fatigue—to warn when the body needs rest. Certain drugs have the power to deaden the fatigue signal. One of the most common of these drugs is caffein—a drug classified as a poison. The average cup of coffee contains from 1½ to 3 grains of caffein—a dose equal to that often administered by physicians in cases of heart failure.

Caffein, by deadening the danger signal of fatigue, appears to give new strength. Actually, this strength is robbed from the body's own reserve, stored up for life's emergencies.

Coffee contains no nourishment. Its only virtues as a beverage, are its warmth and flavor. A good, hot, drugless drink is a benefit with every meal.

Millions enjoy such a drink in ...um. A drink made of whole ... and bran, skillfully roasted, ...little sweetening—nothing more. ...k with the rich, mellow, full-bodied flavor of this wholesome grain. Every member of the family can drink it every meal of the day, enjoy its deliciousness, crave it, knowing there isn't a sleepless hour, a headache or a taut nerve in it.

THE RED LOCK

A Tale of the Flatwoods

—19—

"Let y'u alone—after y'u bungled it the way y'u did—with fifty pistols in the air—and you drunk—h—l! This was my lay, anyhow, and a one-man job, only you and Loge had t' mess in—and now, with y'ur long tongues and squirrel whisky, y'u've jim'd it."

"Mess in!" The shadow among the gnarled roots raised a trifle. "Who hid y'u an' nursed y'u back well again after that marshal dern' nigh croaked y'u last winter? Mess in—!"

The other strode a hard step nearer; apparently realized that any sort of an outbreak just there and then might prove dangerous; finally turned and stalked away up the yard.

The parlor door opened, closed. Black Bogus half rose, slipped away up the path—and the woodsman was alone with the voice of the night.

Counterfeiters — the mystery was cleared. Simon Colin—money-lender;

"Let Y'u Alone—After Y'u Bungled It the Way Y'u Did—With Fifty Pistols in the Air—an' Y'u Drunk!"

money-hoarder—offered just the right opportunity.

Their plan was absolutely flawless—each night to slip out a number of good bills and replace them with counterfeit bills of the same denomination. And the rumpling of the spurious bills in tobacco-stained leaf mold to make them appear old and worn, so practically eliminating the chances of detection—it was a master thought.

Crouched in the shrubbery, the woodsman pondered the revelations of the night. But what to do? Proof—it was the one big word that confronted him. Since they had printed their supply of counterfeit bills before coming to the Flatwoods, there would be no outfit—nothing that fire could not destroy.

A thought of the concealed houseboat, with the shapely heelprints on its dusty after deck, crossed him; and assumed a new significance. But one false move and even that would disappear—and they had their eyes on him.

But with all the caution of his woodcraft, Jack Warhope was not a man to plan and scheme. He came of other stock than that. A stroke to the core—when the ripe instant came—and devil take the chips, was his way. A bold thought took shape in his musings—but the ripe instant had not yet come. Another night would bring it, with the banker warned and both of them on guard.

With a grim look on his face he crawled out of the shrubbery, stole back to the path winding along under the dense shadows at the base of Black rock and slipped through the corner of the orchard to his own small cabin.

Pausing in the fallow yard under an old apple tree, just now renewing its youth in the glory of full bloom, he stood for a long time sifting the sounds of the night and frowning back toward the red-roofed cottage.

The moon stole up under the edge of the east and cast a glittering spear that broke against the face of Black Rock. A quiver seemed to thrill over the sleepy world at the bold assault. The geese in the barn-lot honked and clapped their wings, a bullfrog down in the bayou cleared his throat; a soft breeze waked, rustled the leaves of the old apple tree and snowed the man white with blossoms.

He had his hand on the latch—when suddenly there rang out upon the silence of the night, from the direction of the red-roofed cottage, a woman's wild scream, repeated again and again.

He whirled, rigid, striving to distinguish the cry—but all women scream much alike. Next moment he was dashing across the orchard toward the sound—probably the most awesome on earth—a woman's wild cry in the night.

The sound had ceased when he came out of the orchard and a candle was flitting about the sitting-room. He leaped the orchard fence and ran around to the porch. To his surprise the sitting-room door was partly open and he dashed in.

There in his big armchair in the room that served as office, half bent back over the chair arm, his grizzled head lolling down horribly, sprawled the old money-lender—dead.

Texie was crying wildly in the arms of the housekeeper. The preacher had just come from the parlor bedroom and stood stooped and trembling, peering through his huge spectacles in awed silence. But great as his haste in dressing must have been, he had found time to put on the frock coat and high neck stock—demands of custom that he had probably found impossible to deny.

Jack found the dead man still warm. He noticed that his night shirt was torn to shreds at the neck and sleeves, and that his face was scratched and streaked with blood, but there was no wound apparent that could have caused his death.

The room presented every evidence of a struggle. A chair was overturned; the cover on a small stand had been brushed away; the rug was dragged back a foot or two from before the dead banker's writing desk, where, for an instant the woodsman bent a searching eye upon some faint markings that, in the dim candle-light, could barely be traced upon the dusty floor-boards thus laid bare.

The old man's sawed-off shotgun was lying on the floor, where it had probably been wrenched from his hand before he could use it.

Jack had only time to note these particulars when a rabble of people from the village, alarmed by Texie's screams, came running up the yard and stormed into the house. A moment later Jerry Brown, the town marshal, bustled in and took charge—and the peaceful cottage passed into the hands of the law.

The house was cleared of all but the preacher, the woodsman and two or three women, a messenger sent to the city for the coroner, and a deputy put on guard at the door pending his arrival.

Seventy years ago the coroner's office was in the saddle, the coroner, then as now, always a physician, usually of the "saddle-bags" type, a race of men staunch and true, who, next to the minister and teacher, did most to nurse the young republic to manhood.

Early the next morning the coroner arrived. After a short consultation with Jerry Brown, he entered the room where the tragedy occurred and began his inquest.

Aside from the disarranged furniture, the torn garment, the scratches on the face, there was little evidence, and no clue whatever to the person or persons with whom the old man had waged his fatal battle in the dark. Not a cent of money, or any article of value, had been taken. The safe was still locked, apparently just as it had been left the day before.

Texie testified that she had heard a struggle, and words strained and muffled and indistinct—that she immediately sprang out of bed and ran into the housekeeper's room—that they lighted a candle and hurried downstairs—that there was no one else in the room except her father, and he lay back across the chair arm—

Her voice choked into silence.

"Were the doors all closed?"

"All but the door of the settin'-room—it was open a little bit."

"Was it closed when you went to bed?"

"I s'pose so—father never failed to shut and lock it."

"Was there more than one key t' the door?"

"No, only one."

"Where was it kep'?"

"Hangin' b'hind the door."

"Marshal," directed the coroner, "will you see if that key is still hangin' there?"

The marshal peeped behind the door.

"Yes, it's thar yit, Y'ur Honor," he answered.

The coroner relaxed his gruff severity long enough to offer the weeping girl a word of kindly sympathy, and then dismissed her.

The housekeeper was next called. Her testimony agreed in every particular with Texie's.

And then came the preacher. In his peering, jerky way, he testified that he was a heavy sleeper—that he had heard nothing till Miss Texie screamed—that he had then hastily thrown on the few articles of dress necessary to make himself presentable before ladies—that he had opened his door and hurried across the parlor, across the sitting-room and into the office, where he was horrified to find his dear friend dead, and the room in its present disarray.

"Is it true that you carry a key to the parlor door?"

"It is. Brother Colin placed it at my disposal the evening I came."

"Where is it?"

"Here."

He drew it forth and held it toward the coroner, who waved it away.

"Did you lock the parlor door las' night?"

"I did."

"You're excused."

The coroner looked in his note-book, glanced into the corner of the room where Jack Warhope stood near Texie's chair and motioned with his hand. The woodsman approached the table.

"What do you know of this case?"

In his slow, careful way the woodsman told what he had heard and seen, from the moment of Texie's scream to the arrival of Jerry Brown.

"What was you doin' up so late?"

The question probed deep. Things would have happened had he answered it—and they would have happened fast. Back along the wall the preacher straightened a trifle and his eyes tightened behind the huge spectacles.

"I was—studyin'."

Just what the character of his "studies" had been he let fall no word, and fortunately the coroner did not ask. Back along the wall the tightened eyes behind the huge spectacles relaxed.

"Is it true that you carry, and have for some time carried, a key to the kitchen door?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where was that key—las' night?"

"In my pocket."

He drew it out and held it forth; the coroner waved it away; back along the wall the eyes behind the tinted spectacles tightened again.

"It appears from the evidence that you was the only person who could have entered this house las' night without breakin' in."

Texie slowly rose from her chair; her eyes suddenly dry—and wide.

"Your Honor—w'y—that's Jack—Father trusted him the same as he did me—"

The coroner looked toward her; waved his hand. The girl glanced helplessly at the woodsman; sank back into the chair and buried her face in her hands.

Uncle Nick had edged through the crowd and approached the table.

"Doc, Y'ur Honor, he never done it. He couldn't. Hit ain't in 'im—n'r the men 'e sprung from. W'y, I'd back the boy with my life."

The coroner looked at him; turned again to the woodsman.

"Your name's Warhope?"

"Yes, sir."

"Son of Col. David Warhope?"

"Yes, sir."

The coroner mused a moment, then went on.

"I knowed your father, and I don't believe it has ever been my privilege t' know a nobler man or a finer gentleman."

He turned to Uncle Nick, anxiously fumbling the coonskin cap in his fingers.

"You say you'd be willin' to answer for this boy's honesty with your life?"

"I would that."

"So would I." He turned to the woodsman: "Young man, you're excused."

Tense strung bodies relaxed; faces cleared; a murmur swept the crowd—a murmur that, only for the presence of the dead, would have swelled to a cheer.

After writing a hasty line or two in his worn note-book, the coroner rose in grim severity and rendered his verdict—to the effect that Simon Colin came to his death from an acute attack of apoplexy, precipitated by struggling with some person, or persons, unknown, who had entered the house probably with intent to rob.

Looking around over the assembled villagers, a man seriously conscious of the trust the state had committed to him, the coroner folded up his note-book, came out from behind the table—and the inquest was over.

"It Appears From the Evidence That You Was the Only Person Who Could Have Entered This House Las' Night Without Breakin' In."

The crowd was sent away; the woodsman helped Jerry Brown and the coroner carry the dead man into his room and lay him upon his bed.

Watching a chance when no one was looking, Jack snatched up the sawed-off shotgun and hurriedly examined the caps on the tubes. He found what he was looking for—the fulminate had been removed from the caps, rendering them absolutely neutral. No amount of hammering could have caused them to explode.

Crossing the floor, he took down the key, which the marshal had left hanging behind the door undisturbed, and studied it critically. On the shaft of it was a faint discoloration that could be nothing else but blood.

New Primrose

At the famous Kew gardens in London a new primrose of great beauty has recently been exhibited. It is the Primula rosea, a beautiful primrose from the Himalayas, which has been flowering profusely at the foot of the dripping well in the Rock garden. It has rich carmine-pink blossoms, which are very effective, particularly when viewed from a short distance. This new primrose ranks among the best of all waterside plants, but it is said to be equally happy in other situations. It will grow in almost any soil, but preferably in a rich loam that contains a slight mixture of peat.

Buy

FARM HOUSE AMERICAN PROCESS COCOA

THE smart buyer is the one who shops until she discovers a combination of high quality and low price. Most housewives are schrewd buyers. That's why they are turning more and more to Monarch Cocoa. Monarch is a genuine Dutch Process Cocoa. It costs only about half as much as you would expect to pay for such high quality. That's the reason for its growing popularity.

Quality for 70 years

WHY the difference in the prices of Monarch and Farm House Cocoas? Farm House Cocoa is priced lower than Monarch because it is a different kind of cocoa—made by the American Process.

If you prefer American Process to Dutch Process Cocoa, always buy Farm House. People who use American Process Cocoa exclusively are enthusiastic about Farm House. The high quality and low price form a combination you don't often find.

Helpful Advice to Overworked Women

MRS. C. E. CHAPMAN
1920 ELM ST., NEW ALBANY, IND.

DAY in and day out, week in and week out the tired, over-worked housewife and mother toils on, sweeping, dusting, cooking, cleaning and mending. Is it any wonder that after a time a weakness, such as Mrs. Chapman had, develops and the wife and mother pays a toll in physical weakness and pain for her efforts of love, the natural result of overwork?

Women who find themselves afflicted with weakness, pain, headaches, backache, nervousness, irritability and melancholia will be interested in Mrs. Chapman's letter, and should realize that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is especially adapted to overcome such conditions.

Mrs. Chapman's Letter Reads as Follows:

NEW ALBANY, IND.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a weakness which many women have from over work, and from which I suffered for quite a while. I wasn't fit to do my work and my sister advised me to take this medicine. After the first few days the pains were not so severe as they had been and after taking a few bottles I am not bothered any more. I am doing my housework every day and highly recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman suffering from female trouble. Only yesterday a friend called me on the 'phone and knowing what it did for me wanted to know what to ask for at the drug-store, as she meant to give it a trial."—MRS. C. E. CHAPMAN, 1920 Elm Street, New Albany, Indiana.

Another Case of Nervous Breakdown

MEMPHIS, TENN.—"Two years ago I was completely run-down and my nerves were a wreck. I could not sweep a room without resting, I could not do any of my work except a little at a time and the doctor's medicine did not help me. One day some one threw a little book on to my porch and in it I read several testimonials of women who had been like myself. I went right out and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and before I had taken the whole of that bottle I knew it was helping me. I took six bottles and then in about three months I took two more. Now I am in perfect health. I do all my own work and could do more. I can truly say that I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gave me my health."—MRS. O. J. HINCKLEY, 475½ E. Georgia St., Memphis, Tenn.

DID HE CATCH ANYTHING?

An ardent angler took a friend fishing. He knew nothing about the gentle art, but was set up with all the necessary tackle and a nice com fortable seat on the bank.

The experienced hand started fish ing a few yards higher up the stream.

Presently the novice said. "How much do these red things cost?"

"I suppose you mean the 'float' " said the angler "That's only ten cents."

Well, I owe you ten cents," said the novice. "That on you lent me has sunk."

The Healthy Motor

The motor of a good automobile, when in first-class condition is one of the finest mechanisms on earth. Its smooth flow of power, capable of generating high speed, is one of the marvels of the age.

On the other hand, a motor that is not in the best condition is not a very efficient piece of machnery . Nothing can beat an automoble motor for getting "out of whack" all at once.

This is usually due to carelessness on the part of the owner. A motor must be treated right, and care must be taken to see that it is kept properly adjused. Consult with us any time on the condition of your car. Our advice is free.

BATTLES BUS QUEEN

Clear Lake Kicks on Helen's Bus Line

Clear Lake, Iowa, June 19.—The Red Ball Transportation Company, which is owned and controlled by Mason City's far famed "bus queen" is meeting strong opposition from Clear Lake in a project which it is now endeavoring to carry through.

It recently sent in an application to the state railway commission for a franchise giving it the right to make regular trips from Mason City to Clear Lake and to Bayside amusement park, across the lake. June 2 20 has been set as the date for the hearing before the commission. The directors of the Clear Lake Commercial club held a special meeting and passed a resolution of protset against the project, which will be sent to the commission. The same resolution was adopted by the rotary Club, and the Lions Club, probably will frame a similar protest.

These organizations state in their resolution that the Mason City and Clear Lake railroad is now furnishing good and adequate interurban passenger service between the two towns, with a car each way every hour, filling all the requirements of the public.

ONLY 250 OF 1,500 BANKERS IN SESSION CAME BY TRAIN

The transportation problem as cross sectioned by the bankers convention which since Monday has been in session here, presents an interesting phase. Of the 1,500 visitors who came, only 250 came by train and presented their transportation requests for certification. The rest came by auto. It is doubtful, those in charge of the transportation requests say, wether enough requests will be turned in to enable the bearers to obtain the lowered rate— Globe Gazette.

SNAKE IN AUTO RIDE

Fights When Forced Out of The Car

Missouri Valley ,Ia., June 26.—An auto was parked on the street here and when the owner lifted the hood to examine his engine he jumped about fourteen feet. There was a snake coiled up snugly under the engine.

MANY DIE IN SUDDEN STORM

Heavy Loss to Crops and Property in the Central West.

Chicago.—A sudden rainstorm swept through the Middle West in cyclonic proportions, adding five deaths in Illinois and $3,000,000 of property damage to a toll of 17 heat fatalities in other states.

In Racine county, Wisconsin, it demolished barns, blew down trees, telephone and telegraph poles, and killed crops and live stock, with a total damage of $1,500,000. In Ogle and Winnebago counties the mild tornado caused damage of more than $1,000,000.

Seventeen are dead in Ohio, five of them prostrated in Cleveland. A seven-year-old girl was killed at Polo, Ill., when she stepped on a live wire blown down by the wind.

Ernest Ayresman, twenty-eight years old, and his two children, Maxine, four, and Vincent, seven, of Gibson City, Ill., were killed when a large tree fell on the automobile in which they were riding during a terrific windstorm.

The storm's greatest damage was indicated in Racine county, Wisconsin, where a strip 12 miles long and a half-mile wide was swept, causing a damage of $1,500,000.

In the village of Franksville, where the loss was $300,000, practically every building in the village was damaged. Train service was impaired by crippling of wires.

Rockford was similarly devastated. Power, light and telephone wires are down. Roofs were torn off, houses blown over, and a garage and car were blown two blocks.

The wind swept through Elgin, Waukegan, Kirkland, Belvidere, Woodstock and other northern Illinois towns.

Hundreds of head of cattle were killed.

Farmer-Labor Names National Committee

St. Paul, Minn.—Organization of the new Farmer-Labor party's national committee was completed here with the selection of members of the executive committee and the issuance to them of instructions to attend the conference for progressive political action at Cleveland to present support for Senator LaFollette if he subscribes to the platform.

Alexander Howat of Kansas was named chairman, and the other members chosen are Alice Lorraine Daly of South Dakota; Joseph Manley, Illinois; Alfred Knutson, Fargo, N. D.; Scott Wilkins, Ohio, and William Mahoney, St. Paul.

The headquarters will remain in St. Paul for the present.

Income Tax Refund Awaits Legal Ruling

Washington.—Before making refunds to those who paid the full amount of their income tax on March 15 and are entitled to a 25 per cent reduction, Secretary Mellon has asked for a formal ruling from Comptroller General McCarl as to the legality of the plan decided upon.

Mr. McCarl, judging from rulings already given in the case of other funds tied up through failure of the second deficiency appropriation bill, is expected to approve the treasury's plan and refunds then will be mailed out as soon as the necessary records can be prepared.

Under the treasury plan the refunds will be paid out of general appropriations for tax refunds. The annual Treasury department appropriation bill carried an appropriation of $12,000,000 for tax refunds. The first deficiency appropriation bill carried an additional appropriation of $105,000,000 for tax refunds. Both of these amounts were made available immediately. Of the $177,000,444 all but about $30,000,000 has already been paid out in settlement of disputed tax-cases where tax payments were overcharged.

Under the plan of the treasury the March 15 refund will be made out of the $30,000,000 balance from the general tax refund appropriation.

Offer to Sell Grain Plants to Farmers

Chicago.—Five big Chicago grain firms have offered to sell their plants to farmers. These concerns, handling the bulk of grain shipments coming to Chicago markets, have presented a tentative plan to the American Farm Bureau federation, officials of the bureau announced, proposing the consolidation of these companies with the farmers' 5,000 co-operative elevators into an organization to be owned and controlled by the growers themselves.

Promoters regard the plan as a practical and important step toward aiding farmers in their great struggle to bring their prices up to a level with industrial commodities.

The firms involved include the Armour Grain company, Rosenbaum Grain Elevator corporation, Bartlett, Frazier & Co., Rosenbaum Bros. and J. C. Shaffer & Co. These companies handle more than a billion dollars' worth of cash grain transactions annually.

FORMAL REPLY MADE TO JAPAN

Secretary Hughes Upholds American Right to Rule Own Land.

Washington.—Formal reply to the protest of the Japanese government against the exclusion provision of the new immigration law was made by Secretary of State Hughes in a note to Masanao Hanihara, the Japanese ambassador.

Secretary Hughes expressed appreciation for the voluntary co-operation of the Japanese government in carrying out the gentlemen's agreement of 1907-08, and states that under the circumstances it is proper that the Japanese government should be considered released as from July 1, when the exclusion provision of the immigration act becomes effective, from any further obligation under the old agreement.

The secretary concludes his letter by expressing the conviction "that the recognition of the right of each government to legislate in control of immigration should not derogate in any degree from the mutual good will and cordial friendship which have always characterized the relations of the two countries."

Secretary Hughes, after citing the language of the sections which exempt certain classes from the exclusion provision, states that when these exceptions are taken into account the provision does not differ greatly in its practical application or in its policy from the gentlemen's agreement under which the Japanese government cooperated in preventing the emigration of Japanese laborers to this country.

Reviewing the history of various negotiations and treaties between the United States and Japan, Secretary Hughes shows that the United States always has reserved the right to control immigration and that the Japaness government has repeatedly recognized this fact. It was with this distinct undestanding, it is asserted, that the treaty of 1911 was concluded.

Solve Rondout Robbery; Money Not Recovered

Chicago.—Spectacular police work in exposing the planning and staging of the Rondout (Ill.) $2,075,000 mail robbery and running down four of the participants came to light simultaneously with the announcement that the crime was solved.

Chief of Police Morgan A. Collins made public the names of all the conspirators, four of whom are now being sought. The plot was hatched in East St. Louis, Ill., he said, by Max Greenberg, former leader of "Egan's Rats," and carried out with the assistance of Chicago gunmen.

Chief Collins sent out a message to police chiefs and sheriffs to arrest the following men: Ernest Fontana, Chicago man; Samuel Grant, an escaped convict from Huntsville, Texas; "Blackie" Wilcox, first name unknown; Max Greenberg, ex-leader of "Egan's Rats" of St. Louis, Mo.

Those under arrest, actual participants, named by the chief are: Carlos Fontana, brother of Ernest; Willis Newton, an ex-convict, the man who confessed; Joe Newton, a brother of Willis; William Newton, brother of the other two Newtons.

Only the $100,000 found in the automobile deserted near Joliet, Ill., has been recovered. Chief Collins fixed the present amount of the loss at $75,000 in currency and $2,000,000 in bonds. One missing package contains $500,000 in Liberty bonds, he said.

Britain Takes Stern Steps With Mexico

London.—Great Britain broke off relations with Mexico and entrusted the protection of its interests there to the United States and Chile. This decision follows an impertinent note received in reply to Prime Minister MacDonald's demand that the persecution of the British agent, H. C. Cummins, in Mexico City, be stopped. British recognition of the Mexican government is indefinitely postponed.

Interesting Items Gathered From all Parts of Iowa

No fair will be held by the Winneshiek County Agricultural society this year.

It is true that the crop condition of corn is low just now but we all know that there is yet time in June and July for Iowa to make a corn crop. Corn planted in Iowa on the 6th of June has matured a bumper crop.

City improvements and state highway work now under way will draw heavily on common labor supply during the next few weeks with a resultant improvement in the Iowa labor situation, according to the federal labor report covering the labor status in Iowa for May.

There will be a real, old-fashioned jubilee at the Iowa state fair this year the management announces in honor of the seventieth anniversary of the founding of the fair. The fair, to be held August 20th to 29th, will be known as the "seventieth anniversary jubilee state fair."

Final approval of completed plans for the construction of a $1,000,000 new Shrine mosque for Za-Ga-Zig Shrine temple at Des Moines on the site bounded by Ninth and Tenth streets and Pleasant has been given by the membership of the temple, and work will be commenced as soon as the architects plans can be completed and contracts let.

The per capita cost of government in Iowa for the year 1923 was $17.38, according to report of the United States department of commerce. The cost in 1922 was $13.27, and in 1918 it was 86 cents. Thus it is evident that the cost of government in Iowa has risen more than $4 in the last year, and is almost four times as much as it was five years previous.

Sixty-three Iowa counties have made arrangements for the brood sow selection demonstrations this fall, to be put on by the agricultural extension service of Iowa State College, with the United States Department of Agriculture and the county farm bureaus cooperating. Last year 35 counties had demonstrations, on a total of 175 herds, and they were attended by 3,000 persons.

A demonstration of the value of limestone in the growing of sweet clover is attracting atttention to the farm of William Cutter north of Coin in Page county. A fine growth of clover is seen where the limestone was distributed, but very little where it was not sown. Mr. Cutter is convinced that the land is sour and needs, lime, also that sweet clover makes one of the best pastures and soil builders.

Iowa is second in the world in telephone development! With one telephone for every 4.5 persons, Iowa has enough telephones in proportion to its population to furnish one for each family in the state. These figures are based on the telephone census taken December 31, 1922 by the U. S. Department of Commerce, which shows 533,347 telephones for Iowa. Since that date about 30,000 telephones have been added in the state.

Abraham Lincoln was honored by the membership of the Daughters of the American Revolution of Denison by the placing of a tablet on a huge boulder upon the piece of land he once owned in Crawford county, which came to him for services performed in the Black Hawk war in 1823. The boulder weighs over two tons. The tablet is of copper and has upon it: "Land grant made to Abraham Lincoln for services rendered in the Black Hawk war, 1823. Marked by Denison chapter D. A. R., 1924."

Those interested in the study of accidents as compared with the number of cars in use in Iowa will find material in the tabulation of deaths and accidents covering the eight year period from 1916 to 1923. During this period there were a total of 2,241 deaths, 508 of them being on railroad crossings and 1, 739 on the highways. The total number of accidents listed were 36,786 with a total of 39,622 people seriously hurt. The year 1923 nas eclipsed all others in the total number of accidens as well as the number of people injured.

"He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, whose memory a benediction.—Anonymous."

The indifferent farmer as regards seed corn, is having indifferent success. The Jensen Creamery of Coon Rapids expects to pay out a million and a quarter dollars for butter fat, poultry and eggs this year. Some disbursement for a village of 1,300.

EOPLE TALKED ABOUT

binson Is a "Most Sarcastic Gent"

Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the senate Democratic leader in the last congress, is a "most sarcastic gent," when he feels like it. His admirers say he is the senate's past master of the withering style. Some would say Reed of Missouri is, but when Reed starts out to be withering, he usually blasts rather than withers before he gets through.

Like Lodge of Massachusetts, Robinson loves order in the chamber and quiet. One afternoon in the last session of congress when there was neither, he, without rising but in a voice that woke even the somnolent Cummins, remarked, "Mr. President, may we have order?—not good order, but just that degree of order which will enable us to understand what's going on."

That same day Robinson, who was speaking, was much annoyed by the whispering—and louder—of Senator Glass, who was in animated chat with a senator near Robinson's seat. is a stately formula in the senate when one senator wishes to break another. It runs: "Does the senator from —— yield?" Reply— "I to the seator from ——" On this day, Robinson, having vainly directed ul mean looks at Glass, said with much suavity:

"I yield to the senator from Virginia."

Another time, when a colleague whom Robinson wished to hear was speaking against a buzz of senatorial visiting, Robinson said:

"Will the senator suspend until conversation is concluded?"

Visiting stopped.

l. George Harvey Resumes the Pen

Col. George (Brinton McClellan) Harvey is now in position, after temporary eclipse, to jump into the limelight. He has turned his back on the Court of St. James, put way his knee breeches and resumed his trusty pen. As editorial director of the Washington Post he will now see what he can do to make politics lively. Ah, but the colonel does wield a wicked pen. Probably the pen is mightier than the sword in his case. Anyway, the "Colonel" comes from the fact that he was on the staffs of the governors of New Jersey and North Carolina.

Colonel Harvey was born in Peacham, Vt., in 1864. He got his education in the Peacham academy. The Universities of Nevada and Vermont and Middlebury and Erskine colleges have given him the LL. D. He was a reporter on the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, the Chicago Daily News and the New York World and managditor of the last 1891-3. Not Well Since Three Years Old

Catarrh of the Ear Neighbor Recommended PE-RU-NA

The experience of Mrs. J. C. Dacus, 1621 Booker St., Little Rock, Ark., was not an unusual one. It was in fact a repetition of what has happened in thousands upon thousands of instances. She had a running condition of the ear from the time she was three years old.

In spite of treatment it persisted and became very offensive. One day a neighbor recommended Pe-ru-na and La-cu-pia which had relieved his wife of the same trouble.

Mrs. Dacus used three bottle of each of these quick acting remedies and reports that the discharge and offensive odor are both gone.

Her disease was one of the very many forms taken by Catarrh and is known as chronic Otitis.

Wherever the catarrhal condition is located Pe-ru-na reaches it.

Swamp-Root a Fine Medicine

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC WAS A FINE SUCCESS

The Sunday School picnic of the Klemme and Liberty M. E. churches at West Lake last Thursday was a real success. Threatening weather in the forenoon perhaps kept many from going, but a sizeable crowd was there to make merry the day. The Klemme Band was there to furnish the music and was greatly enjoyed. Of course all enjoyed the picnic dinner. For sports a ball game was staged between Liberty and Klemme that was more exciting than a league game and was close from start to finish. It ended in a score of 5 to 8 in favor of Klemme. The game was tied 5 to 5 in the 5th inning. "Mike" Tanner, the youngest lad playing, caught for Liberty and was perhaps the star player in the game. He is a coming ball player. We understand he will be behind the bat on the high school team this fall. Earl Josten pitched a good game for Liberty. Wiles and Arnold were on the Klemme mound with Elder behind the bat. Other amusements were a soft ball game, horse shoe, etc. The day was enjoyed by all. In the afternoon the band went to Kanawha nd played a few pieces. It was a trip to thank Kanawha for the use of the park. A collection was taken up at the picnic for the band and about $12.75 was given to the band which the boys appreciated.

NEED ORDINANCE

MAKE PEDDLERS PAY LICENSE TO SELL IN KLEMME

It's About Time A Stop Was Put To This Kind Of Business In Klemme

Make the peddler pay is our motto and we as well as many other businessmen in Klemme would like to see an ordinance passed against this pest and that ordinance strictly enforced.

Just now we are being bothered with strawberry peddlers. One was here from Belmond Tuesday and again yesterday peddling strawberries. Our merchants have berries to sell and sell them just as cheap as the peddler. We know because we inquired the price.

A short time ago a peddler was in town selling apples from a truck and weighing them on a spring scale not licensed by the state and of doubtful accuracy. At the same time our merchants had very nice apples and were selling them at a price below the peddler, and they were weighed on a government inspected scale and you got what you paid for.

Soon we will be bothered with raspberry and blackberry peddlers, then the mellon grafter, next the apple grafter, and what not?

The point is this: The business men of Klemme are paying mighty high taxes for the privilege of doing a legitimate business—the peddler comes in and sells the same wares and pays nothing to the town in which he does business. He sells an inferior article in most cases, he short-weights and short-measure s for what does he care; he may never expect to come back again.

We say, let's squelch the peddler. Pass a town ordinance against this business and require a good stiff license fee for ing business here. Fine him heavy e fails to take out a license. will soon cure the pest.

We have nothing against the home producer for selling their berries, mellons, apples, etc. about town as n most cases they are tax payers and good honorable citizens and have as much right to sell their berries as the farmer has to sell his eggs and cream to any he chooses in the town.

We are against these outside peddlers in every form and they should be made to pay. "Those who dance must pay the fiddler," but so far the peddlers "dance" but have also failed "to pay the fiddler." Make them pay or quit dancing.

Tell Him Now

If with pleasure you are viewing any work a man is doing,
If you like him, or you love him, tell him now;
Don't withhold your approbation till the parson makes oration,
And he lies with snowy lillies o'er his brow.
For no matter how you shout it, he won't really care about it,
He won't know how many teardrops you have shed;
If you think some praise is due him, now's the time to give it to him,
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead!

More than fame and more than money is the comment kind and sunny,
And the hearty warm approval of a friend,
For it gives to life a flavor, and it makes you stronger, braver,
And it gives you heart and spirit to the end.
If he earns your praise, bestow it; if you like him, let him know it;
Let the words of true encouragement be said;
Do not wait till life is over and he's underneath the clover,
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead.

SOME CANDIDATES FAIL TO COMPLY WITH LAW

Section 1137-a1 of the Primary and General Election Laws provides that within ten days after a primary election all candidates must file a statement of their expenditures whether made personally or through authorized campaign managers.

Section 1137a6 recites the penalty for failure to do so as follows: Any person violating any of the provisions of the last five preceeding sections shall be deamed guilty of misdeamor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than three hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than six months."

It appears that six of the candidates for county office have failed to comply with the law: They are: H. L. Suckow, of Klemme, and Wallace Darrah, of Kanawha, candidates defeated for supervisor; J. C. Hanson and E. C. Rhodes, both of Garner, who were candidates for clerk of courts; W. C. Zeisemer, of Garner, C. N. White, of Klemme, and A. J. Foster, of Kanawha, all defeated candidates for sheriff.

Those filing statements of expend itures were:

For county attorney: V. S. White, of Britt, $75.35; Verne Grau, of Garner, $81.00

For supervisor: H. C. Meyer, 84.20; Fred Oxley, $100.75. A. O. Christenson, $120.00.

For auditor: J. D. Madison, $55.

For treasurer: John Suurballe, $91.00; Harvey Sweigard, $135.75.

For Recorder: Clarissa Abel, $55.00

For clerk of courts; Chris J. Johansen, $136.99; F. P. Oleson, $108.20

For sheriff: E. P. Hanson, $93.; Howard Hanson, $131.45

WE BEAT THE WORLD IN STEEL

This country of ours last year made over three-fifths of the worlds pig iron, from which steel is manufactured. In one recent month Americans made almost as much pig iron as in the entire year 1881. In iron and steel, at least, we're more important that all the rest of the world combined.

AT THE IDLE HOUR THEATRE SATURDAY, JULY 5

A whirlwind of action, sparkling comedy and gripping melodram you will see in Hoot Gibson's picture, "The Thrill Chaser," at the Idle Hour Theatre, Saturday night, July 5th. Hoot fought and slashed his way through the lines of the desert desperadoes—the task of a superman; his escape meant the salvation of a whole town now beseiged by the terrible terrors of the Arabian waste-land—and it meont the safety of the girl he loved. On he flew and close behind him thundered his pursuers! Be on hand to see Hoot mount the hurricane deck of a bucking bronc and render the most breath-taking performance of his entire career!

"Green Grocers" is the title of the comedy for Saturdoy night.

Also, two more reels of "Fighting Blood."

Show starts at 8:00 P. M.

STORE CREAM IN CLEAN PLACE

Barn Odors and Musty Flavors Take Away Profits

Care on the part of the diary farmer in selecting a storing place for cream will add dollars and take away scents.

Cream, because of its high butterfat content is extremely susceptible to foreign odors. The so-called "barn" flavor is due to falure to remove the milk quickly enough from the stable, or else having the separator located in a place where stable odors are present. The musty cellar flavor is usually due to storing cream in a poorly ventilated basement.

These odors are objectionable and pass into the butter causing a corresponding reduction in grade, say the diary specialists at Iowo State College, but it is an easy matter to prevent them.

It is wise to remove the milk from the barn as soon as possible. The separator should be located in a clean place, free from odors. The cream should be cooled immediately after separator by placing the container in cold water. Do not keep the cream in the cellar.

The observance of these few precepts will result in a higher grade product and a greater cash return to the diaryman.

GRAVELING OF KLEMME ROAD TO BEGIN ABOUT JULY FIRST

H. R. Phillips of the Phillips Construction Co. of Watertown, S. D., was in Garner last week arranging some of the details for the big contracts they have of graveling the road from Garner to Klemme and the road from Britt to Kanawha. He informs us that hauling of gravel onto the Klemme road would begin about July 1st. The gravel for the two and a holf miles at the south end of the job will be from a pit near Klemme, and the four and a half miles at this end of the job will be covered with gravel from the pit on the Ole Grau farm northwest of Garner.

Mr. Phillips is a very fine appearing gentleman and we enjoyed a nice visit with him—until he told us that he worked his gang of truck haulers from 5 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night . Of course that isn't so bad for the truck drivers, as they work two shifts. But he also told us that the 8000 yards of gravel for the north end of the job were to be hauled right past our house. With a big truck going by every five minutes from 5 o'clock in the morning to 9 'clock at night, when is a fellow going to get his necessary sleep. But Mr. Phillips promised us to hurry the job along as fast as he could.

He uses the large trucks on his work, hauling two and a quarter yards, or about that amount, to a load. They drive the Forest City road to the paving, thence east to the corner north of the Greimann Ditcher C., south to the athletic park. Mr. Phillips did not tell us how long the job of hauling will last, but we know it will be long enough.

The south end of State street from the end of the paving will be graveled to connect with the Klemme road. also the street past the the tourist park from Will Krause's residence south, as well as the road from the south end of State street to the cemetery. —Garner Signal.

GET AFTER MITES AND LICE

Enemies of Poultry Are Active in Hot Season

If setting hens leave their nests or other members of the flock refuse to eat and show signs of drowsiness, look over the birds for lice and henhouse for mites.

This is the warning of Prif. H. A. Bittenbeder of the poultry department at Iowa State College, to owners of Iowa Farm flocks.

For head lice grease the top of the heads with plain vaseline or lard, thus killing the lice by suffocation. For body lice, dust the hens with a good louse powder.

A satisfactory home-made powder may be mixed as follows: mix together one part of stock dip and three parts of gasoline add as much dry cement or plaster of paris as the mixture will moisten. Allow it to dry and apply liberally to fowls. Sodium flouride applied either as a powder or in a water solution as a dip, will also be found effective.

To eradicate mites, the chicken house must be thoroughly clean. It should be sprayed twice or three times at intervals of three or four days. Among the mixtures used are: three parts of kerosene and one part of crude carbolic acid; three parts kerosene and one part of cresol or stock dip, or equal parts of kerosene and gas drips. Whitewash with salt and stock dip added, is an effective material to use against mites.

AUTO OWNERS TAXED 471 MILLIONS

Motor vehicle owners in the United States paid over 471 million dollars in taxes last yeor. There are only 430,000 miles of surfaced highways in the whole country. So auto and the motor car is a great time-pay more than $1,000 taxes for every mile of good roads. Time, after all is the thing of greatest value among our many forms of wealth and the motor car is a great ime-saver.

HOWARD AND MERKLE IN BAD CAR WRECK SATURDAY NIGHT

Robt. Howard's Ford Totally Wrecked; Ben Merkel's Badly Damaged

One of the worst auto accidents this year happened at the Barz bridge just east of Klemme Saturday night.

Robt. Howard, accompanied by Lon Tries, in a Ford roadster; and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Merkel in their Oldsmobile Six were the participants in the smash up which happened about as follows, as related by Howard.

The parties were going east out of town and were going at a good rate of speed and Howard passed the Merkel car down hill and says he was hitting close to fifty when his lights went out after passing the Merkel car and in swerving up into to the road again he struck the rail on the cement bridge. The force of the impact threw the Ford back into the road and as the Merkle car was only a short distance back, and going at a speed Merkel could not stop but had to hit the Ford which was in the middle of the road on the narrow bridge.

The Ford was completely wrecked and was bent and splintered into pieces. Merkels car was badly damaged in front but can be repaired. The occupants of the Ford came out of the wreck alive which seemed a miracle after viewing the Ford. Howard was badly bruised about the head and chest. Tries escaped with a few bad cuts and some bruises. The occupants of the Odlsmobile were more lucky as they were only badly shaken up.

What seemed to save the lives of Howard and Tries was a heavy cream can in front of them as it took up the jolt and kept the car from caving in against them when they struck the bridge and were again struck by the other car. The cream can was crushed nearly flat between the dash and seat.

It looks like a case of too fast driving with a light car, as Howard admits he was hitting along for all his car would go and when he hit the bridge Merkel could not possibly avoid smashing into him.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Our morning attendance last Sunday was quite exceptional. This may be said of both the attendance and of the spirit manifested.

We are looking for a record attendance this Sunday. Make your Sunday plans so that you do not miss the services. No one can afford to miss these services and thereby fail to give his sould its just dues.

A full attendance at the E. L. will prove inspirational to all. Every member should be a Regular.

An eevning program will follow the E. L. hour with songs and talks on vital things of today. No doubt special music will intersperse.

The address on Monday evening by Dr. Neal, of Chicago, was a special treat to all present.

The memories of the S. S. picnic are still lingering. What a fine crowd it was and what a fine time all had! Our appreciation to all who helped make it so. The Klemme Band rendered its full quota to make the picnic a success.. Again we thank them for their fine musical offering.

BOY SCOUT CORNER

The Boy Scouts met in their regular meeting last Tuesday night. Ordinary business was dispensed with and the remainder of the time was spent in talking over plans for the summer.

The next meeting will be held next Tuesday night. Two new members will be examined for their Tenderfoot tests. They are Luther Tanner, being trained by Scout Asa Arnold, and Verle Starnes, being trained by P. L. Don Gibbs.

Lets make this meeting a rousing affair, fellows! What do you say?

According to Her Calendar

by Clarissa Mackie

Mrs. Beebe confessed to a hatred for noisy patriotism.

"Every Fourth of July I make Jim take me to his Aunt Sarah's farm—it is high on the slope of a mountain, seven miles from civilization, but ah! you don't know the restful quietude of the place! Not a sound to break the stillness except the wind in the pine trees. You wouldn't know there was such an anniversary as the Fourth of July!"

Mrs. Cooper lifted her brows.

"And your husband likes it, too?" she asked.

"I suppose so—he never complains. At first he said that he figured he had lost one day out of the year, and I told him it was a good day to lose!"

"I like the smell of powder and I do love the spectacular fireworks at night—the harmless kind, you know. Every year my husband insists upon spending the Fourth down at Seadrift. He is as crazy as a boy about firecrackers, and plays with the children all day."

"Are you going to Seadrift this year?" asked Mrs. Beebe.

"Yes, why don't you come? We have such a good time. The hotels are usually full, and there is something going on all the time."

Mrs. Beebe shook her head. "We will go to Aunt Sarah's for the Fourth," she said firmly. "The Fourth comes on Friday this year; we will come down to Seadrift on Saturday morning."

"That will be splendid!" cried Mrs. Cooper, but there was an odd look in her eyes as she rode home.

At dinner that June evening Mrs. Beebe broke the news to her husband.

"I've written to your Aunt Sarah," she said, "and there won't be anything to do except to telegraph down to Seadrift to engage a room for Saturday."

"For what?" repeated Jim Beebe. "For when?" he added idiotically.

"For Saturday. The Fourth comes on Friday this year and we can go to Aunt Sarah's Thursday afternoon, and leave early Saturday morning after the bedlam of noise is over."

"Oh, yes!" agreed Jim cheerfully. "And, I say, Flo, if we're going to Seadrift you better send down a couple of suitcases of dress-up togs. You'll want to be at the hop, or something."

Broke the News to Her Husband.

Mrs. Beebe was so busy making preparations that she did not glance at a newspaper or a calendar, so that her belief that July 4th fell upon a Friday was quite unshaken. Had not the silver-framed calendar on her desk said so? She had dated all her letters by that calendar for the preceding six months.

Thursday came and found Flora Beebe rushed to death with preparations. Thursday afternoon slipped away and with it carried the Beebes and some meager hand luggage far from the city and the menacing Fourth.

If Mr. Beebe was happy he successfully concealed his state of mind from his wife.

"It really doesn't seem like the third of July," remarked Mrs. Beebe, as they changed trains at the junction. "There's hardly any travel at all. Where are all the people going this year?"

"Probably locked up in their flats, ears stuffed with cotton," replied Jim grumpily, as the one coach and engine backed down to pick them up.

Flora Beebe regarded her husband reproachfully. "Jim, I thought you didn't like a noisy Fourth!" she said plaintively.

"My one object in life," said Jim carefully, "is to make you happy wherever you want to be!"

"That sounds very unselfish in Jim," thought Mrs. Beebe, as the train croaked its way among the hills. "If Jim makes sacrifices for me, I must be horribly selfish!"

When they reached Aunt Sarah's there seemed an added loneliness to the isolated farm.

The sound of the lowing cows and cackling hens had lost their customary appeal for Flora Beebe.

Jim, however, was like a boy as they unpacked the generous presents they had brought to the old couple.

In the evening Jim played checkers with Uncle James and Flora showed Aunt Sarah how to make over her best black silk.

The next morning was hot and the yard, under the pine trees, was simmering.

"I wish it was tomorrow," sighed Flora, languidly fanning herself. "There is always a breeze at Seadrift."

"We can take that six-thirty train in the morning."

"I hope Aunt Sarah won't mind our not staying over Sunday."

"That's all right. I've talked to them," said Jim hastily.

Saturday morning found them leaving the mountain far behind.

As the train paused at remote villages Mrs. Beebe noticed the smell of gunpowder and heard the popping of firecrackers.

"I suppose they are shooting off the left-overs," she said indulgently.

Jim Beebe grew red in the face and hid behind his newspaper.

How was he to break the news to Flora that she had forgotten to change the card in her framed calendar and that for six months she had been using last year's calendar?

Played Checkers With Uncle James.

"She'll find out fast enough without my butting in," he thought guiltily.

When they reached Seadrift the Beebes found the little seaside resort gay with flags and holiday frocks and noisy with the din of exploding fireworks, the blare of orchestras in the hotels and laughter of hundreds of people.

"Why, it's more like the Fourth than the day after," marveled Mrs. Beebe, as the hotel bus halted under the porte cochere.

Jim Beebe muttered something unintelligible as he hurried his wife to their room. Once there he hastily changed to white flannels, abandoned his hat and went to the beach.

Mrs. Beebe declared she would take a nap before luncheon.

But she could not sleep. There was a certain magnetism in the air that day which made her restless and eager to join the crowds on the beach.

"The powder smells rather nice," she admitted to herself as she sat down by the window. She remembered when she was a small girl how she had followed at the heels of her brothers, singeing her fingers with an occasional "sizzer," or recklessly shooting off a cap pistol.

Down on the beach she recognized Jim. His arms were full of firecrackers and he was surrounded by a dozen adoring children.

"How funny that they should be celebrating today!" she frowned. "People are usually tired of it all the next day."

She picked up Jim's discarded newspaper.

The date line smote her gaze in letters of fire.

"SATURDAY, JULY 4."

"Am I dreaming?" demanded poor Flora Beebe, searching the room for a calendar to verify this astounding fact.

She found the calendar, and on the July leaf the fourth day appeared in scarlet figures.

"What a goose I am!" she thought angrily. "I suppose Jim has been

"The Powder Smells Rather Nice," She Admitted to Herself.

laughing at me all the time—and Mrs. Cooper, too!"

She cried a little and then jumped up, removed all traces of tears, put on a smart white linen frock, did her hair in a girlish knot with a bow of black velvet ribbon on top, winked at her charming reflection in the mirror and skipped downstairs.

Someone directed her to a fireworks stand and Flora chose to reach it by the rear entrance to the hotel.

When she appeared once more Jim Beebe did not at first recognize his wife.

He saw a slender girl, the sun shining on her bare head, her arms full of packages of firecrackers, a tiny silk flag in her hair and a smile of perfect bliss on her face.

"Flora!" he gasped, just as the Coopers came up, openly astonished at Mrs. Beebe's patriotic appearance.

"Oh, come with me," she cried, after greetings had been exchanged; "come with me. I've got some of the most fascinating firecrackers—new ones. Come on, Jim, and bring the youngsters—and, Mr. Cooper, please light this punk for me."

Down among the rocks there was an exclusive celebration; for noise, Jim Beebe affirmed that his wife's assortment of firecrackers beat anything he had ever heard.

And her personal enjoyment in the day was genuine.

"Oh, Jim!" she confessed with sparkling eyes and smoke-begrimed features. "I feel like a little girl once more, and I've had such fun!"

"There is something about the Fourth of July that stirs one to the heart," said Mrs. Cooper, as they reluctantly went in to luncheon.

Mrs. Beebe ecstatically sniffed the air and hearkened to the strains of the orchestra as it played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Did Not at First Recognize His Wife.

"I wonder what it is that makes me want to do great and glorious things—oho, you know what I mean!"

Jim Beebe nodded. "It's the patriotism latent in every heart, and this Fourth of July is a most excellent stimulant for it, sort of an annual reminder that we are a specially privileged people."

"Hurry, Jim!" urged his wife. "We must get back to the beach as soon as possible. I want to celebrate some more. I've got to make up for six glorious Fourths lost forever!"

The American's Creed

I BELIEVE in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

—William Taylor Page

Edward Everett's View of American Destiny

"The epic poem of Rome—the faithful subject of an absolute prince—in unfolding the duties and destinies of his countrymen," wrote Edward Everett, "bids them look down with disdain on the polished and intellectual arts of Greece, and deem their arts to be

"'To rule the nations with imperial sway;
To spare the tribes that yield; fight down the proud;
And force the mood of peace upon the world.'

"A nobler counsel breathes from the charter of our independence; a happier province belongs to our republic. Peace we would extend, but by persuasion and example—the moral force by which alone it can prevail among the nations. Wars we may encounter, but it is in the sacred character of the injured and wronged; to raise the trampled rights of humanity from the dust; to rescue the mild form of liberty from her abode among the prisons and the scaffolds of the elder world, and to seat her in the chair of state among her adoring children; to give her beauty for ashes; a healthful action for her cruel agony; to put at last a period to her warfare on earth; to tear her star-spangled banner from the perilous ridges of battle, and plant it on the rock of ages. There be it fixed forever—the power of a free people slumbering in its folds, their peace reposing in its shade!"

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Anne Stillman to Marry H. P. Davison

Mrs. James A. Stillman has announced at Pleasantville, N. Y., the engagement of her daughter, Miss Anne, to Henry P. Davison, son of the late H. P. Davison, who was a partner in the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. and one of the most noted financiers and philanthropists in America. The wedding is to take place in October.

Miss Stillman is twenty-two years old. Mr. Davison is twenty-six. They have been acquainted since childhood. Miss Stillman is the daughter of James A. Stillman, former head of the National City bank. When her father attempted to divorce her mother the young woman remained with the latter, though keeping on friendly terms with both parents. She has been a student at a private school in Paris. She is at present living with her mother at the Stillman place at Pleasantville, N. Y.

Mr. Davison is the second son of the late H. P. Davison, who died May 6, 1922. He left a large estate, the value of which never has been disclosed, $4,500,000 being put in trust for the eldest son, F. Trubee Davison, and the rest for the widow, Mrs. Kate Trubee Davison.

Mr. Davison went to Yale, leaving there temporarily to enlist in the naval air service just before America entered the war. He flew overseas, having been attached for a time to the British forces. Mr. Davison returned and finished his course at Yale, being graduated in 1920. He then studied for a year at Trinity college, Cambridge, after which he went to work for the Morgan firm.

$5,000,000 to Teach Ethics of Business

George F. Baker of New York has given $5,000,000 to Harvard university. Mr. Baker, who celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday recently, has given more than $10,000,000 to various public institutions during the last eight years.

In accordance with Mr. Baker's wish, the $5,000,000 will be used to equip and finance the Harvard graduate school of business administration. It will be known as the George F. Baker foundation. In his letter to Bishop Lawrence, Mr. Baker wrote: "I am especially impressed with the determination to make the graduate school of business administration of the very first importance in the country."

"Mr. Baker's gift," comments Bishop Lawrence, "is unique in the annals of American education. It is to finance the establishment in a great university of a graduate department which seeks to cultivate the highest ethical and professional standards for those contemplating a business career. A professional education for business does not mean education merely in technicalities, which, although important, are secondary compared to the vision and broad intelligence involved in leadership in promoting the material prosperity of mankind."

Mr. Baker is one of the richest men in the world. He is chairman of the First National bank. Of recent years he has curtailed some of his activities, although he is still personally connected with numerous banking and railroad enterprises and is regularly at his office when in New York.

Wanamaker's "Eternal Light" in Gotham

An "Eternal Light" shaft, erected in Madison square and presented to New York city by Rodman Wanamaker (portrait herewith) "in the name of those mothers we worship, and who gave up those heroes who paid the supreme sacrifice on the field of valor," has been dedicated. Supporting the light which, it is planned, shall burn forever, is the largest single shaft in existence. The symbol is 125 feet above the square. It is a gold star, five feet in diameter. The Oregon pine shaft is set in a base of pink Knoxville marble 25 feet high, and on this base is inscribed the list of battles participated in by the New York troops.

"Many of us are inclined to forget only too quickly," said Mr. Wanamaker, discussing his gift, "that thousands of our bravest and finest, who had everything to live for, died that we might be happy. How quickly fade events that once stirred our blood! This eternal light will make us think. If we are religiously inclined, we'll breathe a prayer when the soft glow among the treetops of Madison square comes within our vision."

Champion Expounder of the Constitution

Don Tyler of Los Angeles (portrait herewith) is the most eloquent expounder of the Constitution of the United States among young American students. So say the judges for the final national oratorical contest in Washington, where seven competitors—two girls and five boys—chosen as the best from more than a million students, stepped forward and spoke in honor of the fundamental law of the land, and the judges should know, for they were Associate Justices Willis Van Devanter, Pierce Butler, George Sutherland and Edward Terry Sanford of the United States Supreme court. They awarded the three prizes of $3,500, $1,000 and $500 to these contestants:

First, Don Tyler of Los Angeles, representing the Pacific coast and sponsored by the Los Angeles Times.

Second, Ruth Newburn of Washington, representing the national capital and sponsored by the Evening Star.

Third, John M. Dallam, III, of Philadelphia, representing the eastern states and sponsored by the Philadelphia Bulletin.

President Coolidge presided and delivered an address on the Constitution. The President declared that Americans in particular must be impressed with the thought of the great responsibility upon them because of their leadership in the work of substitution of democratic for autocratic forms of government. Crises had come and been dealt with, he said, "in a fashion which has firmly established the conviction that it is possible for a democracy to be strong enough to sustain itself and yet not too strong to conserve the liberties of its people."

Weak and Miserable?

CHAPTER XV
—20—
Six-Gun Persuasion.

In the church of which he had long been the chief support the funeral of the dead money-lender was held.

In spite of his grasping and domineering ways, the rugged worth of the man, to say nothing of his wealth, had made him widely known. Now joined to this was the mystery of his death. People came from far and near, and the church was packed, while many were forced to remain outside, grouped about the open door and windows.

The Reverend Caleb Hopkins officiated.

It was the first time the Flatwoods had heard him preach, because of the fact that the day before, though Sunday, the church had remained closed out of respect for its leading member, sleeping his last sleep at the red-roofed cottage.

Standing well back among the silent group at the door, Jack Warhope watched the preacher go through his ordeal. Nerve he must have had, or he never could have carried it through. Behind the piously solemn mask of his face there doubtless raged a terrific tempest, but it did not seem to retard his flow of thought or mar his oratory. Little enough can be said over a dead man, at the best, but that little he so clothed with artistry that the like of it had never been heard in the Flatwoods. Each man writes his own epitaph; Simon Colin had written his. That was the basis of his remarks. He neither eulogized nor blamed—and in that he showed the sense of a wiser man.

Most of the crowd lingered about the cemetery for a time, even after the last solemn rites had been performed, as if slow to realize that a man so prominent, so long a power in the life of the little community, had with such suddenness dropped that prominence and power for the mean and voiceless walls of the grave.

Immediately on the death of the old banker, the preacher had, for the sake of appearances, moved to the parsonage. He had returned from the funeral and had been for some time pacing back and forth, or fidgeting restlessly in his chair, in the cool front room upstairs—the former minister's study—when he was very much surprised to see Jack Warhope ride up on Graylock, dismount, throw the bridle rein over the hitch-rack and come striding up the yard.

He sprang from his chair, opened one of his satchels, snatched out the holster with the ivory-handled revolver sticking in it; hurriedly buckled it on under his vest, where it was concealed by the somber frock coat, and tiptoed back to his chair.

A knock disturbed the sanctimonious quiet of the study door.

"Come in."

The knob turned, with a force and decision that somehow suggested the power of the hand laid upon it, and Jack Warhope entered; carefully closed the door; stood coolly looking the other over.

The preacher slowly rose from his chair; slipped his hand down along the front of his frock coat and loosened it against his side.

The motion was not lost upon the woodsman. His eyes had narrowed to slits in his face; his lips were tightened to a straight hard line. He dropped a quick look at the preacher's feet.

Butt First, Parson," Came the Cold Incisive Command Over the Steady Barrel.

"Ther' ain't another pair o' boot heels in the Flatwoods like them, Mr.—Hopkins."

The brows of the other lifted in polite surprise

"I found the print o' them heels on the dusty floor boards there by Pap Simon's desk, where they couldn't 'a' be'n made till after the rug was drug back."

The preacher peered at him through his huge spectacles; a subtle premonition of what was coming reached him.

"I may have stepped there when I came out of my room. That was a most distressing scene, Mr. Warhope."

"But the board was scratched where the heel had slipped and dug into it under strain. How come y'u slipped?"

The affable, benevolent smile weakened; the premonition of what was coming deepened.

"Really, you must not expect me to remember every small detail of so distressing a moment, Mr. Warhope."

"That trick of removin' the brimstone from the caps on the shotgun was what I call downright smart. It took a good head t' think o' that. But ain't it queer that a master hand like that would unlock the door after the murder, instid of b'fore, and leave blood on the key?"

The studious pucker around the eyes was fast smoothing out, and the man was breathing fast. His hand was fumbling the lapel of the frock coat and slowly stealing down the side.

"What do you mean? You surely are not accusing me of the murder of my old friend?"

"I mean," rasped the woodsman, his slits of eyes on the hand stealing down the edge of the frock coat, "that night b'fore last I laid in the little park and hear'd what was said b'tween you and Black Bogus."

Like lightning the creeping hand darted under the frock coat. But quick as he was, the ivory-handled revolver was not quite out of the holster when the heavy six-gun of the woodsman leaped up and covered him.

"Butt first, Parson," came the cold, decisive command over the steady barrel.

Hopkins stood just as the gun had caught him—motionless; poised on the flat of one foot and the toes of the other; his body slightly crouched forward. Reckless though he was, a man who held the world at bay, and keen-witted as a dog fox, he slowly relaxed the pose and grudgingly handed over the revolver—the ivory butt first.

The woodsman snatched it; removed the caps from the tubes and stuck it back into the holster under the frock coat.

"And now I'll jist trouble y'u f'r that parlor-door key."

Hopkins scowled; whipped a black look at the steady muzzle of the six-gun; dragged the key out of his pocket and passed it over.

"No, I ain't accusin' you of the murder," the woodsman went on, as cool and collected as if there had been no interruption, at the same time dropping the key into his pocket. "I'm doin' y'u the honor t' think y'u hain't quite fell that low—bein' y'u didn't want 'is death, nohow. No. y'u wanted 'im t' live, so's you could slip out all the good bills y'u dast every night and leave counterf'it bills in their place.

"You'd jist got through changin' the money that night when 'e rushed out on y'u. He tried t' shoot—both bar'ls—but you fixed the caps so's they wouldn't go off. Then foller'd the struggle, and no doubt you was bad flustered when 'e fell back acrosst the chair, dead of heart disease. Then y'u unlocked the door t' head off suspicion, but y'u must 'a' be'n flustered r' y'u wouldn't 'a' left blood on the key."

Hopkins was bowed forward, staring hard through his glasses. The woodsman glanced at him.

"Ther's jist one p'int I ain't quite clear on—did 'e know it was you?"

The question caught the other off guard.

"My God, yes! Oh, his dead face there in the coffin—in the black night it's before me."

He shuddered; gripped his hands till the knuckles turned white; stiffened after a moment and pulled himself together.

"Mr.—Caleb Hopkins"—a peculiar twist had slid into his voice that brought a quick look from the man addressed—"I 'low y'u didn't aim t' kill Pap Simon, but the Flatwoods ain't big enough any more t' hold you and me both. The Milford stage from down the river is leavin' the post office f'r the city in a few minutes. You're goin' t' be a passenger—and y'u ain't comin' back."

Hopkins winced; involuntarily dropped his hand to the butt of his six-gun, before remembering it was useless; snapped out a muttered curse and stood glaring about him.

A grin, hard and dangerous, crawled out of the woodsman's eyes and twisted his face.

"I 'low we'll be startin'—now," he rasped.

Hopkins swore again—an artistic little run of oaths that the Flatwoods call "split hic'ry"—stamped across the floor; picked up his two satchels and brought them back to the desk.

"Empty 'em," the hard voice commanded.

"D—d if I will," the other snarled, his eyes like live coals in his face.

"Y'u will, 'r y'u'll face Jerry Brown—and I ain't carin' a dern which."

The other glared around; appeared to meditate some desperate move; seemed to realize his helplessness; finally slammed the satchels on the desk with a snarl and snatched out their contents.

One of them contained some clothing and a few personal belongings; the other a number of thick bundles of money—real money; the face of Hopkins left no doubt of that very important fact.

The woodsman's eyes widened a trifle.

"Lord, parson, y'u cut some swath—f'r a preacher! How much did yu' have when y'u struck the Flatwoods—real money?"

"Five hundred."

"I'm takin' y'ur word f'r that. Peel off that many and put the rest back."

Hopkins picked up one of the bundles; counted off bills—all tens and twenties—to the amount of five hundred dollars; and dumped the rest with the other bundles back in the satchel.

The long arm of the woodsman unexpectedly stabbed across the desk and snatched the satchel. Hopkins whirled to spring at him; faced the muzzle of the steady six-gun; flinched back.

They Totaled Exactly Three Thousand Five Hundred Eighty Dollars.

With exasperating deliberation the woodsman stored away the bundles of bills in the capacious pockets of his hunting blouse; snapped the satchel shut, dropped it to the floor and slid it toward the other with his foot.

"You'll go ahead o' me downstairs," he directed, crisp and cold. "Make whatever excuse y'u please t' Mis' Mason, 'r anybody else we run onto. We'll stand out there at the hitch-rack till the stage comes along. When it does, you'll board it, jist like nothin' had happened. I'm aimin' t' trail y'u on Graylock. Make one false move, and—the next move will be mine."

He backed to the stair door, threw it open and, with a slight sweep of the revolver, stood aside.

The eyes of Hopkins behind his glasses were like the eyes of a trapped viper, but he dared not disobey the command. He strode through the door. The woodsman dropped the six-gun back in its holster and followed.

Mrs. Mason was at the back of the house when they came down, so they escaped encountering her. The same good luck held at the hitch-rack, for the stage was just pulling out from the post office as they reached the gate. The woodsman waved his hand; the driver drew up; Hopkins stepped aboard and it rattled away.

* * * * * * *

Twilight had put the woods to sleep when Jack Warhope rode back to the homestead from trailing the stage. He groomed his horse, foul with sweat and sand; fed him and went straight to his cabin. Before lifting the latch he stopped a moment and, with a slow sweep of his eyes, sifted the gathering shadows.

The foothills away across on the plains were already hiding under the sable wings of the south; a sinuous lighter streak marked where the river rimmed the bottoms; the red flare of the spent day faintly spangled the west; the woods breathed softly; hardly a pulse stirred the apple blossoms; out of the silence came the tinkle of the spring under the cliff lapping down the sulphur-stained gutter on its way to the barn-lot and cattle pens.

He filled his lungs full of the serene evening; entered the door; closed and fastened it with unusual care; drew the blinds of the two small windows and lighted his candle.

What to do with the bundles of money? A key to the dead banker's safe he did not have, even if he could have found the chance to open it and put them back. He took the thick bundles out of his blouse pockets and began to count them. They totaled exactly three thousand five hundred eighty dollars—one hundred seven twenties and one hundred forty-four tens. The woodsman's eyes lifted at the amount. Such a sum in five nights—it showed what Hopkins might have done in time.

SUN IS SPLITTING

West Chester, Pa.—A crack is becoming visible in the sun, and the great orb will split in two, according to Dr. David Todd. Dr. Todd is president emeritus of Amherst College and has been making observations of the sun from a big telescope n ear here.

A great mass of spots on the eastern edge of the sun were discovered by Dr. Todd some days ago. At that time he and other astronomers expressed the opinion that the sun might be breaking in two. Dr. Todd had an excellent view of the sun recently and announced that a crack is becoming visible on the sun itself.

"This, in my opinion, means but one thing, that astronomers are right as to the dividing of the sun into two portions. This means that we will have two suns later instead of one, each moving in its own orbit. The effect of this upon the earth and other planets cannot be even estimated. It would be five years, probably, before an effect could be noticed in the earth."

Mr. Todd believes one of the suns would be much nearer than the other and the revolution of the two orbits probably would make a great change in our seasons.

POTATOES GODSEND TO CROWDED NATION

Potatoes are almost as important as coal in the maintenance of an industrial civilization, says Frank Thone, Ph. D., in writing for Hygeia, magazine of health published by the American Medical Association.

The denser the population, the more it must depend upon vegetable foods, says Mr. Thone. If dependence on a vegetarian diet should become necessary in the United States at any future date, as it now is in Europe, we are extremely fortunate to have such a vegetable to depend upon.

When large populations are massed in small areas, the article points out, wage and other living condition make the general consumption of of meat impossible. In such instances the potato is a genuine godsend. This starchy vegetable classes with the cereals as a food for energy production, and it possesses in addition the necessary vitamins.

The Chinese are the most expert vegetarians in the world, Mr. Thone declares. They are at least one thousand years ahead of the rest of us in that respect. They can make an entire dinner, from soup to nuts, out of soy beans.

No race has ever given up meat with good grace and when it has at last been compelled to come to pottage, there is still a hankering after the flesh pots. But with dense populations, the vegetarian diet must come.

In northern Europe a millenium ago, the inhabitants ate tremendous meals consisting mainly of meat; now the people of the crowded industrial cities of Belgium, France and Germany have several meatless days in the week.

WE'RE CLEANEST NATION

The soap industry gives figures illustrating how dirt keeps us hustling. Americans this year will make 2,500 million cakes of soap. Our lazy ancestors invented perfumes so they wouldn't have to use so much soap, and their summers were as hot as ours.

OLEO MANUFACTURE INCREASING

The production and consumption of olecmargarine is now on the upgrade as indicated by reports from the Internal Revenue Bureau. Colored oleomargarine produced during the first three months of 1924 averaged above 1,000,000 pounds a month, as compared with less than 700000 pounds a month in the same period in 1923. The manufacture of uncolored oleomargarine during the first three months of the current year ran above 22,000,000 lbs. each month, while for the same 3 months in 1923 the production averaged about 19,000,000 pounds per month. In 1923 figures represented a considerable advance over the same period in 1922, indicating a gradual advance in the manufactures during the past three years.

The increase in the manufacture and consumption of oleomargarine together with the large amounts of foreign butter received on the eastern seaboard are responsible for the recent slump in butter prices.

COSTS LESS THAN MATCHES

According to one of the largest chain cigar store companies in the country, its costs nearly three times as much to light the cigars and cigarettes of its customers with matches as it does with gas. This company spends approximately $300.000 a year on the little paper match books which it gives away gratis and only about $9,000 or $750 a month, on gas ames

This means that your corner cigar store is burning three or four cubic feet of gas every hour at a cost of slightly more than fifty cents a month. The little burner with the gas flame, which, with the passing of the wooden Indian, is now the most outstanding characteristic of the tobacconist, has survived all other forms of cigar lighting.

WHY PLANT TREES

Trees add value to the property.

Trees protect the pavement from the hot sun.

Trees cool the air in summer and radiote warmth in winter.

Trees furnish homes for thousands of birds that help man in his fight against injurious insects.

Trees furnish homes for many animals that are useful to men for food and clothing.

Trees help men in his fight for better sanitation.

Trees help to keep pure air pure for men and lower animals.

Trees supply a large part of all the fuel n the world.

Trees give us wood, and wood furnishes us with building material, furniture, implements, utensils, tools and other useful things in greot variety.

Trees furnish one of the most striking and permanent forms of beauty.

Trees improve the climate and conserve soil and water.

Trees furnish a great variety of miscellaneous useful products.—Monthly Bulletin of Missouri State Board of Agriculture.

EAGLE LAKE PARK OPENING

Thursday, June 26th, was set for the opening of Eagle Lake State Park which is located three miles east and one and a half miles north of Britt.

The Britt and Duncan bans furnished the music for the day. A picnic dinner was enjoyed at noon, coffee, sugar and cream being furnished free.

The management arranged a fine program of sports which everyone enjoyed. No admission was charged and everyone was invited to spend the day at Eagle Lake, visit with friends and enjoy the fun.

A refreshment stand was in operation, the profits of which will go to defray the expenses of the day, pay for prizes, etc.

UPHOLD THE LAW

Men of consience, law abiding gather where the brooks are gliding, when they're feeling dry and thirsty, when their inards call for juice; being merely mortal critters they may long for old time bitters such as vintners and distillers were accustomed to produce. They may gnash their moral tushes for the Anheuser bushes, for the temples of Budweiser, where the corks once used to twang; but they curb their godless longing, and we see them crowding, thronging, to the mart of the brooklet, in a law-respecting gang. There, like lambkins led to slaughter, they knee l down and drink the water, that will rust their costly gizzards and detsroy their diaphragms; that the law may be unbroken all their inner works they're soalin' in the pallid juice that gurgles back of weirs and coffer dams. But the scofflaws, wild and frisky, fill themselves with booze whiskey, and they care not for the statuates and they laugh and scorn the law; and they jeer the brave lifters; they bring shame upon the nation, for their work is course and raw. Let us join the noble martyrs who have torn their Sunday garb bending down to drink the brook side by side with cows and mules let us shun the bootleg quaffers, let us join the moral gaffers, let us seek a pure refreshment in the horseponds and the pools.

THE MAN WHOM THE YEARS FORGOT

He ran a successful business 20 years ago.

He had built up his business by hard personal effort.

Those who dealt with him knew that he could be relied upon, and anything which he sold was well worth the money.

And he had a fine group of customers.

But customers change. Some of them die. Some go away.

Some get restless and turn to competitors.

So it was with his customers.

And not enough enough new ones came to take their place.

This man woked harder. He studied his products. He kept them up to date. In many ways he was the best posted man in his line of business.

Except for one thing—and on that one thing his competitors passed him.

He did not keep in touch with old customers and attract new ones with sufficient energy.

He believed in the old "mouse trap" saying, that people would beat a path to his door.

But competitors set up along the beaten path, and the customers were diverted.

What this man forgot was printing—and so the years forgot him.

He forgort to study the progress made in merchandising, He failed to see or find out the methods used by others in his same line of business, who were continually in communication with his customers, telling them the advantages of other merchandise, building confidence in other business institutions, winnng away the people who had made this one business successful 20 years ago.

This is not the story of any one business. It is the story of scores of businesses, once successful, but today disapeared or disapearing from the field.

Don't let anyone forget your business. Keep in touch with your present market, and open a larger and large market by using printing.

We'll gladly show you examples of how others are doing it. Call on us.

"Printing That Pleases"

DAMAGE BY PHEASANTS PRO AND CON

Do Pheasants Destroy or Aid Crops?

Last week's issue of the Register carried an article in which a petition signed by several Union Slough farmers stated that their crops were being destroyed by pheasants. This article and the petition has been causing more or less discussion and this week a pheasant expert called on the Register editor and explained some of the habits of the pheasant family.

He stated that the ring-necked or Mongolian pheasant is almost entirely a meat eating bird and while a kernel of corn can be found in their in their crops occasionally, the food they consume is almost 100 to 1 opposed to our theory advanced last week. They, he claims, do not scratch the ground for their food and that instead of being injurious to growing corn, are one of the greatest assets the farmers of this section have. They consume ,according to his theory, thousands of cut worms that cause more trouble and loss of corn than any bird. They also eat mice and vermine of all kinds that are injurious to growing crops. Many pheasants have been killed to find out just what they do consume and in most cases the crops have been found to contain practically nothing of a vegetable nature, with the exception of a few green leaves that would cause no injury.

While we in Iowa consider them a very pretty bird, our informer stated that the Mongolian pheosant was the least handsome of any of the pheasant family, the Lady Amherst being the prettiest of all and when in display causes one to recall the georgeous peacock. The Bohemiam pheasant is another variety of a silvery gray color, while Dairds pheasant is a native of Java and s green, and Reeve's pheasant often measures eight feet in length while on display. The Silver pheasant is the largest and most powerful of the tribe and most combative, driving the common Mongolian pheasant from the preserves where it is introduced. The prevailing color of the male being wihte finely penciled with black, the breast and belly purpleish black.

Much has been said of late regarding the pheasant, introduced in this section of the country but a few years ago, and our informant states that when they ore understood, as they are in Great Britain where they have been bred for years, our farmers in general will take more kindly to them. While speaking of the cut worms and pheasants, he stated that the benefit derived from the consumption of worms by the pheasant offset by a wide margin any small amount of corn that the latter might consume.

SUGAR CORN PLANT IS STARTED

Cedor Rapids, Iowa.—A building permit has been issued to the Penick & Ford company for the erection of the first of the half million dollar units to their plant there. The first unit will cost $125,000.

It is to be used for the manufacture of sugar from corn and will be the first of its kind east of the Mississippi river and the second in the country. The other units will be built as fast as they are needed.

Officals of the company say that large quantities of Iowa corn will be used by the plant and they believe corn sugar will soon take its place with cane and beet varieties.

FIRE HAZARDS ARE INCREASED DUE TO RADIO SETS

With the arrival of summer and its attendant electrical storms, radio fans are warned to the fire hazards of the radio receiving sets. During this season of the year the possibility of lightning striking radio antennae is increased, and because lghtning is so capricious and uncertain one never knows whether it is going to strike, every precaution should be taken against it.

An aeriel may be safe-guarded by a protective device known as a lightning arrester, which is installed in the lead in wire as near as practicable to the point where the wire enters the building.

This protector should ne be placed in the immediate vicinity of easily ignitible material or where exposed to inflamable gases or combustible dust are flying.

EASY TO TELL FORTUNE SHOWN BY TEA LEAVES

The custom of telling fortunes from tea leaves left in the cups is by no means on the wane . It is a simple matter to memorize most of the signs and a good imagination is also of great assistance.

Leaves in the form of a train are said to mean either a journey or the arrival or departure of some one in whom you are interested. A snake indicates enemies. Doves are supposed to be lucky, and so are stars, the crescent moon, and horseshoes, says London Tit-Bits.

News from abroad is often foretold by a tent. Shoes mean a journey. If the cup is clear all around it is said to be a good sign. Gloves indicate the meeting of strangers while stockings usually foreshadow presents.

Chairs mean visitors; keys new undertakings, Initials are usually deem to be lucky. Black clusters mean gatherings, but may also be taken to mean a cluster of worries.

GET AFTER MELLON INSECTS

Spraying or Dusting Now Will Save the Crop

Do you like cucumbers, muskmelons and watermelons?

As well as most people like these garden products, it is often difficult to harvest a crop due to the depredations of the melon and cucumber aphis and the striped cucumber beetle.

The best method to control the striped cucumber beetle, according to Dr. C. J. Drake, head entomologist, Iowa State College, is to dust the young plants with a mixture of one part calcium arsenate and twenty parts of gypsum or land plaster. The first application should be made just as soon as the young plants are beginning to break through the ground.. After that they should be dusted early in the morning and two or three times per week and immediately after each rain until the plants are able to withstand the attacks of the beetles. Usually from ten to twelve applications per season are necessary.

The melon aphid may be controlled by spraying with nicotine sulphate dust. Details of control methods are presented in a new Iowa Experiment Station circular, No. 90, which may be secured by writing for it to the Bulletin Editor, Ames Iowa.

Someone has defined a gentleman a follows.

A man who is clean both outside and inside; who neither look up to the rich nor down to the poor; who can lose without squalling and win without bragging; who is considerate of women, children and old people; who is too brave to lie, too generous to cheat, and who takes his share of the world and lets other people have theirs.

Most people cannot resist the desire to exceed the speed limit, even on the road to sucess.

The gas-fired refrigerating macchine will produce temperatures as low as 30 40 degrees Fahr. below zero. are common in the operation of gas-fired welding equipment. In other words, there is a practical range of over 3,000 degrees wherever industrial gas is employed.

We may live without poetry, music and art;
We may live without consience and live without heart:
We may live without friends; we live without books;
But civilized man cannot live without cooks.
He may live without books— what is knowledge, but grieving?
He may live without hope—whatis hope but deceiving?
He may live without love—what is passion but pining?
But where is the man that can live without dining.

PUT IN THE WASTE BASKET

Scarcely a day passes but we are requested to publish lengthy accounts of matters purporting to be of wonderful news interest to the public. Most such matter is sent out for advertising purposes. Clever writers are secured and paid handsome salaries. to prepare this stuff and the newspaper man is ask- to run it as a matter of public interest. Most publishers, however have waste paper baskets for such trash. It is hard to convince some people that advertising costs the publisher real money and he must inturn be reasonably compensated for his efforts. —Emmetsburg Democrat.

SUNBEAMS

Gather up the sunbeams
For you'll need them by and by,
When the night it cometh
And the darkness draws it nigh;
When the heart grows weary
And the road is rough and steep.
Just sprinkle your pillow with sun beams
And you'll sweetly fall asleep.

Gather up the sunbeams
As you travel from day to day,
Keep them ever gleaming
In your face along the way;
Feel their warmth and beauty
In your heart so full of love,
Sprinkle the world with sunbeams
And your reward comes from above.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE

What a season of cheer
Is that day of the year
When tis strawberry shortcake time
What a reason to live
And to laugh and forgive
When tis strawberry shortcake time
Like the wonderful end
Of a beautiful dream,
It's an island of joy
In an ocean of cream—
If you're looking for thrills
It's the moment supreme,
When tis strawberry shortcake time

Oh it acts like a drug
On the homiliest mug
When tis strawberry shortcake time
For it streches a smile
From an inch to a mile
When tis strawberry shortcake time
And the cares of the day
Are dispelled in a laugh,
While the inner -man void
Is too narrow by half,
And we long for the neck
Of a hungry giraffe
When tis strawberry shortcake time

How it teases the tongue
Of the aged and young
When tis strawberry shortcake time
And the vagrants who roam
Will be heading for home
When tis strawberry shortcake time
For there's no way of telling
How jolly it feels
When it tickles a palate.
Clear down to the heels
And the family will never
Be late to its meals
When tis strawberry shortcake time

WHY PATRONIZE THE PEDDLER?

This is the open season for the peddler, or in putting it to twentieth century parlance. the salesman They are abroad in the land and in numbers and their wares are many. They make a house to house canvas and take your order. You are guaranteed satjsfaction, in fact anything if you place your name in the dotted line. But there is only one thing you lose sight of or the order would not be forthcoming— your home merchant. He is entitled to your consideration from a purely business standpoint. His wares are just as good and in most instances cheaper, and he is right here 365 days out of the year to make good if the goods do not. You need, town and the town must have business men — you can exist forever anon with the peddler. The next time one of these fellows calls on you just try to imagine that youf merchant is present and ready to not only serve you but is also there to defend his business methods, the quality of his goods and the price he asks. And, perhaps, if it is necessary, the home town merchant would also extend a reasonable amount of credit. The peddler may be a necessary evil but that does not mean that it is necessary to continue the evil by giving him the patronage which rightfully belongs to the old home town. — Reporter.

PLANT RAPE, CLOVER EARLY

Planting in Corn at Time of Last Cultivation Does Not Give Best Results

Inquiries among the farmers an experiments indicate that rape or clover planted with corn at the time of the last cultivation for hogging down may be expected to be successful not oftener that twice out of five years, according to Prof. F. S. Wilkins, forage crops investigator Iowa State College.

When seedings are made in earlier maturing corn, which does not grow as rank nor shade the ground as much as other corn, it has been found that satisfactory growth of the rape or clover maye be expected more often. Some investigators, says Prof. Wilkins, believe that smaller and earlier maturing corn, combined with a good growth of rape, will produce more economical gains of pork per acre than corn without rape but fed with a protein supplement.

Ob servations also suggest that more satisfactory growth of rape or clover will be secured by "laying by' the corn a week or ten days earlier than ordinary, and seeding the rape or clover at that time. If the field is well in hand and free from weeds this is possible and, in fact, advisable, since many experiments show that nothing is to be gained by cultivating a field that is free from weeds.

Earlier "laying by" before the ground is shaded too deeply gives the young plants a better chance to develope and has another advantage in that the seed is more likely to germinate, due to better moisture conditions of the soil.

WHSTLING SUPERSTITIONS PREVAIL IN MANY LANDS

The head master of a school in the occupied area of Germany was recently arrested by the French because a boy in his charge whistled a Teutonic melody while a French regiment was passing.

In Leicestershire coal mines, whistling is strictly avoided by the miners, remarks London Answers. They consider it to be a sign of impending diaster.

Whistling superstitions are, in fact very common all over the world The Arabs, for instance, have proverb which says that after whistling it takes a man forty days to cleanse his mouth. They call it "the devil's music."

In iceland the sound of whistling is seldom heard, for it is against the law.

The champion whistlers of the world are the natives of Gomera, one of the Canary islands. There whistling is used for signaling, and can be heard for four miles. No fingers are used and only two or three notes are employed. A skeptical Englishman once doubted the power of the whistling, and got one of the natives to whistle in his ear. He was deaf for fifteen days afterwards

BERLIN WARNS ALLIES OF PERIL

Populace Inflamed Against Military Control Officials.

Berlin.—Germany accepts, unconditionally, the allied demand for a thorough inspection of her alleged military preparations for a war of revenge, but by inference puts the responsibility for anything that happens to the military control officials in Germany on the allies themselves.

This is the high spot in the German note of acceptance. The note was dispatched to Paris June 28, on the tenth anniversary of the murder of the Austrian archduke at Serajevo, which started the World war.

The note first answers the charge that German militarism is reviving; points out the terrific load which the measure imposes on the German government; and then expresses Germany's "wishes" regarding the methods of the control officers.

These wishes are that the military control officers be instructed to take into account the inflamed popular sentiment against them in Germany, and avoid any public provocation.

The note expresses the expectation that this will really be the last "inspection," and that, after it, the whole disarmament and security question be turned over to the League of Nations.

Nature, Not Owner of Vinegar, Real Culprit

Omaha, Neb.—If nature turns vinegar into alcohol it is not the fault of the owner of the liquid and he cannot be punished as a moonshiner, the Nebraska Supreme court decided.

George Simmons of Fillmore county claimed he was simply making vinegar from a recipe given him by his mother-in-law and that he was not responsible because the concoction happened to turn into alcohol instead of vinegar. The Supreme court decided Simmons was right.

Chicago Prelate to Be Bishop of Oklahoma

Chicago.—Rt. Rev. Mgr. Francis C. Kelley, who for 19 years has been president of the Catholic Church Extension society, has been appointed bishop of Oklahoma by Pope Pius, according to Associated Press cable advices.

Monsignor Kelley had received no official notice and said he does not expect any message sooner than it can be brought by mail from the Vatican.

Thousands of Germans Allowed to Go Home

Paris.—Premier Herriot has instructed General Degoutte, commanding the Franco-Belgian forces occupying the Ruhr, to permit, with few exceptions, the return to the industrial region of all Germans expelled since the beginning of the occupation, in January of last year. It is understood that the new order will permit the return to their homes of about 210,000 persons.

Italians May Make Dash for North Pole

Pisa, Italy.—Italy proposes to make a single airplane dash to the North pole if the last-minute efforts to resuscitate the Amundsen transpolar flight fails. This is the tenor of a note which has been served on Haakon Hammer, Captain Amundsen's associate, by officers of the Airplane Construction company of Pisa, who are holding the explorer's two planes for final payments of $70,000 due on them.

AMBITIOUS SCHEME FOR RAIL MERGER

Missouri Pacific Said to Plan Big Combination.

New York.—Perhaps the most ambitious scheme of railroad consolidation ever attempted is now being planned by the Missouri Pacific railroad, according to well-informed rail executives.

The plan calls for the creation of a single system, by ownership control or affiliation of existing lines, that will stretch from Chicago, through St. Louis and Kansas City, to San Francisco on the Pacific coast, with a network of lines throughout the states of Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana.

Assuming the Missouri Pacific management will be successful in its attempt, the entire system, with a total mileage of some 17,000 miles, will be larger than any of the existing systems in the country.

In 1923 the combined gross revenues of the roads mentioned totaled $278,093,100, one-fourth of the total area of the United States.

Treasury Surplus May Go Beyond $500,000,000

Washington.—Treasury and budget bureau officials confirmed the estimate of $498,000,000 as the excess of receipts over expenditures for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, which was made public by Representative Madden (Rep., Ill.), chairman of the house committee on appropriations. It was indicated that both Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and Director of the Budget Lord believe the surplus actually will exceed $500,000,000.

The daily treasury statement for June 20 shows that tax receipts on that day amounted to $35,000,000. The surplus for the fiscal year 1924 up to June 20 was $447,277,552.20. Further tax receipts will boost the surplus above the $500,000,000 mark before June 30.

BEGINS WAR ON OIL COMPANIES

Attorney General Charges Violation of Anti-Trust Law.

Washington.—Additional legal proceedings directed at leading oil companies are in prospect, but no criminal action is in contemplation, it was stated at the Department of Justice.

Attorney General Stone regards the suit started in the Chicago Federal court, dealing with the pooling of patent rights for "cracking processes," as hitting at only one phase of the gasoline situation.

Mr. Stone expects to confer within the next week or two with a committee of attorneys general of various interested states.

The question of whether the dissolution of the Standard Oil company, as provided by court decree, has been completely carried out will be one of the matters under consideration.

Chicago.—A petition in equity filed here by direction of Attorney General Stone charges fifty of the most important oil companies in the United States with violation of the Sherman anti-trust law and prays for an injunction to restrain the companies from further violations.

The complaint was forwarded by the attorney general to United States District Attorney Edwin Olson, who filed it in the Federal District court.

The primary defendants named are the Standard Oil Companies of Indiana and New Jersey, the Standard Development company, the Texas company and the Gasoline Products company.

Attorney General Stone charges that the companies have combined to control production of gasoline by pooling of patent rights in violation of the anti-trust law.

In substance the complaint sets forth that the defendants are utilizing processes for "cracking" gasoline, thus greatly increasing the output from a given quantity of stock. The bill alleges that the "cracking" process has been known for the last thirty years and that the original patents covering the invention have long since expired.

In spite of this, it is charged, the defendants have pooled patents on unimportant improvements and thus have been enabled to "extort huge sums from the manufacturers of gasoline in the guise of royalties and by means of certain restrictive covenants contained in license agreements."

Mussolini Is Given Vote of Confidence

Rome.—The senate gave Premier Mussolini a vote of confidence, 225 to 21. Six senators abstained from voting. The General Confederation of Industries, comprising all the owners of factories throughout Italy, agreed to suspend work ten minutes June 27 as a manifestation over the death of Deputy Matteotti, victim of kidnapers.

The opposition in the chamber of deputies, with the addition of a group under the title of "Free Italy," comprising dissident Fascisti, has decided to hold a commemoration of Matteotti's death in the chamber and proceed afterward on foot to the spot where he was kidnaped and lay a wreath of flowers there.

The opposition delivered an ultimatum which demands recognition by the ministry of ministerial responsibility, a parliamentary inquiry into Matteotti's death and the finances of the directorate and abolition of the Black Shirt militia.

From Coast to Coast in Twenty-Two Hours

San Francisco.—Lieut. Russell Maughan left New York at 2:59:30 o'clock the morning of June 23 and landed at San Francisco at 9:47:15 that evening.

He had crossed the American continent between dawn and dusk.

No other record in aviation approaches the 2,850-mile race of the army aviator against the sun.

The flight, made in 21 hours and 48 minutes, was all the more remarkable because Lieutenant Maughan flew alone, the first time a flight of this distance has been attempted by an aviator unaccompanied by an assistant or mechanician.

The actual flying time, exclusive of time at stops, was 18 hours and 16 minutes.

Agriculturists Plan Aggressive Campaign

St. Paul.—Legislative measures for relief of agriculture and plans for a continuous campaign during the summer and fall months in their behalf before presentation to congress in December will be taken up at the national agricultural conference to be held July 11-12.

Representatives of farmers, farm organizations, heads of educational institutions, bankers, business men and others interested in the economic situation of agriculture have been invited to attend.

To Meet in Same Hall as Did Republicans

Cleveland.—If Senator LaFollette is nominated for the Presidency by the conference for progressive political action, it will be in the same hall in which his supporters and the platform which he advocated were turned down by the Republican national convention. The city council voted unanimously to let the conference use the municipal-owned public hall for its convention July 4 on the same terms as those allowed the Republicans—a rental of $1.

Griffing Elevated by Engineer Brotherhood

Cleveland.—L. G. Griffing, Long Island, N. Y., was elected grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Griffing was formerly a vice president of the brotherhood.

He will have charge of the brotherhood's labor activities, working in cooperation with Warren S. Stone, who has been elevated to the position of president of all engineer brotherhood organizations.

Will Supply All Mail Clerks With Gas Masks

Washington.—Gas masks for railway mail clerks was the government's answer to the use of lethal gas by bandits in the recent $2,000,000 mail robbery near Chicago. The acting postmaster general opened negotiations for a sufficient number of masks to equip all the 5,096 railway mail clerks whenever necessary.

DOING GOOD WORK

HIGH praise for the services being rendered to the nation by the American Legion is expressed by Gov. Charles A. Templeton of Connecticut, in a recent letter to State Commander E. P. Armstrong.

After expressing his sense of the great service which the men of the Legion gave their country in time of war, Governor Templeton proceeds:

"Your organization has done good work in the past and I am persuaded that it will continue that good work. In the direction of combating propaganda and in other patriotic directions, the American Legion is performing a great service. I trust that in every way and particularly in the matter of rendering service to your fellow men your organization will prosper."

UNIQUE MEMORIAL IN HONOR OF DEAD

A light leaped up on the top of a 125-foot shaft in Madison square, says the New York World, to burn there steadily as a reminder to the living of the youth cut down on the battlefields of France, and of mothers who weighed the lives of their sons against the call to defend the nation's honor and made the sacrifice.

The "eternal light" shaft, gift of Rodman Wanamaker, was hewn from a century-old pine in the virgin forests of Oregon. It is surmounted by a star and by a light that never will dim. A similar eternal light to the memory of war dead burns on the grave of the unknown soldier, underneath L'Arc de Triomphe in Paris.

Gold star mothers and Congressional Medal wearers stood beside the hollow square of marines, soldiers and sailors around the shaft as Mr. Wanamaker unveiled the inscribed pink marble base of the shaft. A salute to the dead reverberated from army cannon, and "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played.

"We give this shaft to the city of New York in the name of those mothers we worship, who gave us those heroes who paid the supreme sacrifice on the field of valor," Mr. Wanamaker said. "May it ever shine and be a guide to posterity in the interests of liberty and freedom."

Mayor Hylan, who made the speech of acceptance, declared he dedicated the shaft to the mothers who placed their own flesh and blood on the altar of sacrifice, and that he further dedicated it to the ideals of the American nation.

Maj. Gen. Robert Lee Bullard spoke in behalf of the army, and Rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett spoke for the navy.

Adoption of Disabled Veterans in Hospitals

Adoption of disabled veterans in government hospitals in the state has been authorized by the department executive committee of the American Legion in Wisconsin. Proceeding on the theory that many such men desire to become Legionnaires but failed to do so because of financial reasons, each post will be asked to name certain men in veterans' bureau institutions as members of a post, dues to be paid from the post treasury.

"Big Brother" Movement

The "big brother" movement has received considerable impetus in Reading, Pa., since formation of such a group by the American Legion. Support of the Lions, Rotary and Kiwanis clubs was given the veterans in the movement. Churches of all denominations have been appealed to, and the Legion expects to make the movement a city-wide affair. This will become a regular activity of the post.

Aid for San Diego Post

When a photograph of the Balboa Memorial building, property of the American Legion in San Diego, Cal., appeared recently it caused a Hawiian Legionnaire to donate his library to the post. This is in addition to a valuable museum, much of which was made possible by a substantial donation by Mme. Schumann-Heink to the post.

Ask for Memorial Site

Legionnaires of Roanoke, Va., have asked that the city council grant use of a site for an American Legion memorial building in Elmwood park, one of the city's recreation centers. The Legion men propose to erect and maintain the memorial without cost to the city. The building as planned will cost $25,000.

They're a Sight

Mrs. Suburbs—Why, Sarah, the parlor windows as so dirty I can't see through them.

Housemaid—Well, ma'am, I just come in the front door, an' except fer Miss Ritz an' her young gent across the way in the windy, there ain't a thing worth lookin' at.—American Legion Weekly.

Aids New Building

One thousand dollars has been pledged by the Humboldt (Iowa) Woman's club to the building fund of the local post of the American Legion, which will be used to erect a memorial community building.

Further improvements have been ordered on highways in the Atlantic district, including grading of White-way-7 and gravelling of other roads.

Forest fires in Colorado, foot and mouth disease in California, mosquitos thick in Minnesota—what's the matter with a vacation in Iowa this year?

Within the past three years Hamilton county farm indebtedness has been decreased approximately $8,500,000. This is a reduction of approximately 25 per cent.

Crime in Iowa has been reduced until conditions approximate those of the pre-war years, Attorney General Ben J. Gibson told members of the Iowa County Attorney's Association.

The trip of Page county farmers to Wisconsin to obtain Guernsey milk cows was postponed on account of the fact that not quite enough farmers were interested to make a good carload. The cows may be brought down in the late summer or fall if enough farmers are interested in the project.

A deed requiring $33 in revenue stamps and by terms of which a quarter section of Black Hawk county land is transferred from I. S. Carpenter to R. B. Smith, has been filed at Waterloo. The quarter section was sold for $33,000, indicating that Iowa land has lost little of its monetary value.

Governor Kendall appointed Joseph Mattes of Odebolt and W. P. Dawson of Aurelia as members of the special board of appeal created by the budget law. This board, of which the budget director is chairman, acts only on appeals from contracts for improvements let by state institutional managements.

An ironing machine that cuts the time of ironing approximately to one-third has been used in the home economics division at Iowa State College during the past year, according to Miss Eloise Davison of that division. This particular machine can be run by a farm light plant, while the shop is heated by gasoline.

Prosperity is coming back to Iowa to those who practice the simple virtues of industry and economy because this is a region where wealth is created. This is the view of Jackson Bowdish, member of the finance committee of the state board of education, formerly a banker in Cedar Rapids and a student of business conditions.

While Frank Paca was hauling gravel from a pit on his farm east of Eagle Lake he unearthed the bones of a human being which the local scientist, J. A. Treganza, identified as those of a large Indian. Two holes in a big bone are evidence of his belief. Treganza estimates that the body must have been buried at least 100 years. He has reported the matter to the State Historical society.

For a number of years the Board of Conservation has been considering the establishment of a park on the shores of Lost Island Lake—one of the beautiful lakes in northern Iowa. The park, as finally determined upon, consists of twenty-seven acres on the shores of the lake, containing a large number of burr oak, elm and basswood. There is a project on foot to connect the highway from the State Park to the Electric Park, which will add more land to this park.

Scenic Iowa is being assembled by the secretary of the Des Moines convention bureau, for use in securing national conventions for the city. A quantity of photographs of McGregor Heights, the site of the proposed national park; and views of the lakes and of the Keokuk dam are being prepared to show the attractive side trips Iowa has to offer convention visitors. Iowa has its scenic advantages in addition to being an agricultural and commercial center, the convention bureau intends to show in this graphic form.

The ground has been broken in Iowa City for a hospital that will equal anything in the United States made possible by the Rockefeller gift and the sound sense of Iowa. It will be a great center of relief from human ills and suffering. It's a good and kindly investment. If relief from human suffering constitutes solid investment than the millions to be expended on the hospital are well spent. When we stop to think it over and make comparisons Iowa lives are worth as ly as valuable as any others east or west of the Wabash.

Iowa land will produce as much with a valuation of $100 as it will at $400 an acre. And the taxes would be much less with the smaller valuation.

But the Mexican bor... with its long stretch of dense wil...ss offering excellent cover for ...gling activities, is an extremely ...us problem. Here the bootlegging ...liens has become an extensive in...ry.

...ere is now and has been for years, ...immigration service says, a band ...riminals on this border known as ...otes," who live by preying upon ...ons wishing to secure an easy en...ce into the United States. The ...ote" is extremely dangerous to ... with. He goes "armed to the ..." and does not hesitate to fire ... officers at sight. As he works in a district where there are thousands of miles of winding, twisting river front, traversing for the most part a lonely, almost uninhabited country covered with dense brush, the advantages are all on his side.

When the immigration officers attempt to penetrate this territory in search of contraband aliens they take their lives into their hands. Many have already been killed and those who remain alive are protected more by luck than by anything else, as they are constantly being fired upon. The "coyotes" are especially reckless because they know that if they kill an officer or two they can make their escape back into Mexico in comparative comfort, for once they get a start of ten feet into the dense brush they are virtually lost to their pursuers.

Higher Type Appears.

In addition to the "coyote" band, however, a higher type of criminals has recently appeared on the Mexican border, attracted evidently by the large financial rewards in the immigrant smuggling game. Under the skillful direction of this keener brain there has grown up a far-reaching organization that "takes the alien from his home in Europe; secures a passport for him (a fraudulent one, if necessary); purchases his steamship passage to Mexico; places him on a ship; arranges for his entry into Mexico at Vera Cruz or Tampico; conducts him north to the Rio Grande and delivers him into the United States—all for a fixed price. These smugglers, unlike the border "coyotes," take an interest in the welfare of the contraband aliens and give them every possible advice as to what course they should pursue upon reaching this country. One of their practices is to destroy any false passports as well as any documentary evidence that might involve any one criminally or show that the aliens themselves were ever in Mexico.

The aliens falling into the clutches of these smugglers are of two types—those who are inadmissible to this country for various reasons and those who are deceived into believing themselves inadmissible. The former type includes not only the diseased and feeble-minded, but anarchists and criminals who have been unable to obtain visas from American consuls to enable them to secure steamship passage. The latter are simply the ignorant, who are imposed upon by dishonest agents in Europe receiving a commission for the sale of steamship tickets to Mexico. These men depict Mexico as a magical country, where food and gold are plentiful, with a convenient land boundary easily crossed by immigrants desiring to reach the United States. The providing of fraudulent passports is also undertaken by these agents for an additional fee.

They Are Inadmissible.

Upon their arrival in Mexico the deluded aliens at once become inadmissible to the United States over the land boundary, under a special proviso of the immigration law, whereas if they had applied in a regular manner at a seaport they would probably have had no difficulty. The fees extorted from immigrants of both types have in some cases been as high as $1,500.

In the old days before the war, when Chinese smuggling was the chief nuisance along the border, the government forces were almost, if not wholly, equal to the situation. There were river guards to catch the aliens and smugglers in the act of illegal entry; mounted men to pursue them, if they succeeded in stealing over the border; men to open and inspect freight cars just before they left the border towns, and men to inspect the passenger trains.

All these, says the immigration service, constituted the first line of defense. The second line of defense consisted of inspectors at strategical interior points on all railroads running north from the border, where another opening of freight cars and a thorough inspection of both passenger and freight trains occurred. The officers at these points likewise covered the highways for Chinese traveling afoot, by wagons or in automobile. Later, it was found that smugglers escorting aliens from the border unloaded them from trains—both passenger and freight—and detoured them around the inspection points. So third and fourth lines of defense had to be established at points even farther removed from the border.

With this complicated network of defenses, very few contraband Chinese—as compared with the large numbers of European aliens—succeeded in eluding capture. Through its efficiency the bootlegging of orientals was cut to an irreducible minimum. But the same force has not been equal to the task of checking the rapid rise of a new immigrant smuggling boom.

Work Is Doubled.

New inspectors have been stationed at the ports of entry, it is true, but inasmuch as the requirements of the present immigration laws have more than doubled the work of inspecting, this has not greatly facilitated matters. In fact, the force has been so inadequate during the last two years that during rush periods thousands of Mexican immigrants have been compelled to wait for inspection, sometimes for weeks—while their food and money steadily dwindled. In the circumstances, it is not surprising that some of them should become impatient and seek to cross the border by stealth.

Meantime, moreover, the dangers have greatly increased for the mounted guard, still pitifully few in numbers. Instead of working in groups of four or five, they are compelled to work in pairs, even while on the trail of a whole band of "coyotes." Consequently, casualties have been frequent and serious, while the business of smuggling has steadily grown. Thus, the new additions to the defense of the border, planned by the immigration service, will be more than reinforcements. They will be in the nature of a rescue.

...e Athens Parthenon, according to ...sculptors, Belle Kinney of Nash... and Leopold F. Scholz, her husband, engaged in the building of the Nashville edifice, was erected in ancient times with an optical appeal. It was constructed on the architectural curve instead of the straight line, the giant columns forming the most difficult feat of architecture.

The Nashville Parthenon, built temporarily, stood in Centennial park as the main arts building during the Centennial celebration, held in 1897, commemorating the admission of Tennessee, into the Union and was dedicated on June 1, 1896, the date of Tennessee's one hundreth anniversary.

The city of Nashville since then has decided to make the building a lasting memorial to culture and art, and the work of "making over" permanently is expected to be completed early in 1925.

Pet Monkey Sacrificed to Test Electric Chair

Manila.—"Ronquillo," a monkey which long had been a pet around the Luneta police station, has been sacrificed on the altar of science. The Philippine government more than a year ago adopted the electric chair as a means of executing condemned murderers, and in order to test the efficiency of the apparatus, which recently was received from the United States, Ronquillo was commandeered as the first victim. It required five seconds to kill the monkey.

Officials have announced that the chair is ready to be used for the electrocution of nine murderers who have been held in Bilibid prison awaiting the installation of the apparatus. The Philippine islands is the first country in the Far East to adopt the electric chair for the execution of murderers.

Since so many women are havng their hair bobbed (our wife included) it makes us wonder where this bobbing business will wind up at. They used to bob it, now they get it shingled, next they will probably clip it, then perhaps the next thing will be to shave it, sand-paper it and varnish it—but, after that then what? Klemme now is the home of Geo. Hawts, wife and child, of Idaho, who have been residing with the Herb Bailey family. They will live in the Tom Blank house, now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Beek. Mr. Beek is now working in Davenport but Mrs. Beek will leave for there shortly. Mr. Hawes is working for the Kltmme Meat Market.

Dr. George Zinn ltft Saturday evening for Battle Creek, Michigan in answer to a telegram stating his brother's wife had passed away. Dr. Zinn will not be back until about the middle of next week as he also went to Hanover, Ontario, Canada for a visit with his father, who is now 94 years of age. Dr. Zinn makes it a point to go home for a visit at least once a year.

The Republican County convention was held at Garner Saturday The delegates from here were F. A. Arnold, P. M. Greisemer, R. A. Jorgenson, Paul Grange, Frank Gruetzmacher and Mrs. C. W. Wiles. The biggest job was to select delegates to tht state convention to vote for governor. The assembly, however, voted to go 100 per cent for Hammill and gave him the privilege of selecting his own delegates. Some excitement was caused when Durant of Madison township, a Joe Anderson man, wanted delegates selected in the regular way so that Anderson would be represented. He was givtn a cool reception as it appeared 99 per cent of the convention was for Hammill. Durant, who had but a feeble support, left the room. The balance of the business was not so important to the general public as delegates were selected for other minor conventions.

The young man next door was watching Bluebelle narrowly from his front window. He had declared frankly that he wanted to marry a sensible girl. The skies were drip ping and the sidewalks were wet.

Bluebelle had emerged and turned her beautiful orbs upon the skies. She inspected the sidewalks. Then she went bask into the house.

"Wise girl," murmured he young man. "She has gone afer her over overshoes.'

But Bluebelle, as it transpired when she again appeared had merely gone back for her new earrings.

NOT SO HARD TO SEE

A few days ago a big touring car went over the grade crossing at a teriffic speed, absolutely ingnoring the warning signal held high by the crossing flagman, intimating the close approach of a train.

As the car dissapeared down the road in a cloud of dust, a conductor standing nearby asked the flagman, "Did you get the number of the car, John?"

John replied: "Gol-darn it no; she went too fast for me; but did you notice the pert lookin' gal on the front seat?

THAT "ALTERATION"

It was a case of assault, and the following is what a witness said he witnessed:

"I saw the plaintive and the defender argumentive, and the defend er struck the plaintiff, and the plain tiff struck the defender, and they both missed each other, and an alteration took place, and they knock ed each other down, and—"

"That will do," said the magistrate, "Judging by their faces, the 'alteration' has been about equal. Case dismissed.

SMOKERS CAUSE 862 FIRES IN NATIONAL FORESTS

Carlessness with cigars, cigarettes pipe ashes, and matches was the cause of 862 forest fires within the boundaries of National forests during 1923, according to figures recently compiled by the Forest Service of United States Department of Agriculture.

The damage caused by these smoker's fires is esimaed a $31,000 exclusive of the indirect and intangible damage to young growth, water shed protection, wild life, and recreational facilities.

One of the objects of forest protection week, which President Coolidge set side last April by proclamation, was to emphasize the need of care with fire while in wooded areas. Then umber of smoker's fires eloquently tell of the need for public need for public education, forestry officals assert, if the fire hazard in America's woodlands is to be stamped ou.t

Equiping automobiles with ash receptacles is one of the things advocated for overcoming the tendency to flip burning tobacco ashes over the side of the car into leaves ,brush and other highly inflammable material usually lying along the highways bordered by trees.

An unusual wedding took place in Clarion last Wednesday, the marrying couple being deaf-mutes. The bride is a sister of Miss Hazel Fritze a teacher in the Belmond schools and Miss Fritze acted as interpreter of the marriage vows, translating the words of the clergyman into the sign language of the deaf.—Herald Press.

The American's Creed

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a Democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country, to love it, to support its constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag and to defend it against all enemies.

IOWA BUDGET LAW IN OPERATION

Important Taxation Reform Comprised in Law Passed at Recent Legislative Session

People of Iowa have scarcely yet become acquainted with the fact that a most comprehensive state and local budget law was passed by the recent extra session of the Fortieth General Assembly and that it is now in force. Many hundreds of local taxing bodies all over the state are dimly aware of the fact, but this week will be officially and complete y informed of its provisions and the manner of its operation.

Favored by a large majority of oth houses, a budget law was proposed early in the special sesoisn. The bill was redrafted and amended many times, until the very close of the session when several conference committees tried to iron out the difrences and make it a comprehensive law that would guard and direct al future tax-levies in school district, township, town, city and county tax-levying bodies. One main idea was adhered to throughout all the discussion of this law, and that was that before tax levies could be made in the future by any district, large or small, there should be notice of public hearing and opportunity to file objections to the levies proposed. Another provision insisted upon to the end was proposals for bond issues and contracts for public purposes should be subject to revision and approval by some constituted authority.

To accompolish all the purposes such a law a state budget director was provided for, this director to be supreme in authority and in the administration of the law. o further safeguard the interests of the public and the tax-payers in the operation of the law provision was made for liberal publicity of all proposed budgets and tax levies in the newspapers of each county. Throu such publicity the people will be informed of several important facts before any tax levies are made. In school districts, townships, drainage districts, town , cities and counties notice of the budgets required for the ensuing year and the proposed levies to provide the funds stated in such bdgets is to be made, with at least ten day's notice of public hearings on the same. This is to give the public an opportunity to meet with the taxing boards and dis cuss and object to, or amend, the proposed budgets and levies.

Governor Kendall made a fortunate choice in naming Hon. F. L. May tag, of Newton, as first director of the budget and in his prompt confirmation by the Senate. Director Maytag was charged with the ponderous duty of interpreting the new law and starting its operation. He has found difficult problems in this for the reason that this is the only local budget law in any state, and he has no guide or precedent to go by. Finally, a phamphlet has been prepared and is now being distributed which sets out the law, in full. directs all local and district taxing bodies as to how they shall proceed, and sets in motion this greatest reform in taxation that has been made in Iowa since the early days of the state.

Naturally, many local taxing bodies will be puzzled at first as to how to meet all the new requirements, and a distinct burden is placed upon all such bodies to study and get in harmony with the new law. As rapidly as possible forms will be pro vided for their assistance by the Bud get Department.

Director Maytag is approaching all this responsibilty with caution and care, to do no injustice to any interest, and with the hope that the officials of the local boards, the newspapers and the citizens of he state will join with him in making the law popular and securing throu it, a general saving in local and state expenses, to the end that taxes can bel owered all along the line.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES

A very profitable half hour was spent by the Epworth Leaguers again Sunday evening at the Methodist church. What was lacking in the way of numbers was made up for by the enthusiasm of the young people. Clarence Elder led the meeting the topic being "How we Got Our Bible", the first of a new series, dealing with the Bible. Fred Arnold will have charge of the meeting next Sunday evening at 7:15. His topic will be: "The Great Theme of the Bible." All young people in the community are welcome.

The janitor in our place didn't take much stock in that cross-country flight. He says his wife has kept him up in the air many a day from dawn to darkness.

MORE SUBSCRIBERS TO THE KLEMME BAND FUND

The Klemme Band is evidently proving popular with the people of Klemme and vicinity as new donations are swelling the band treasury to help the band towards success.

Since the list published in The Times last week we have more new names to add. The list for this week up to yesterday afternoon is as follows:

Wm. Smith	$1.00.
Tom Nelson, Sr.	$2.00.
Ernest Helps	$10.00.
Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus	$5.00.
TOTAL	$18.00.

The band boys appreciate these contributions to the band fund and thank each of the above for their liberal subscription.

Any others in and about who wish to help the band can leave their donation at The Times Office, with C. G. Waterman, or any other band member and proper credit will be given. Any sum, great or small is equally welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus mailed their check for $5 from Tonka Bay, Minnesota, where they are spending the summer. They perhaps will not even get to hear the band play this summer, but never-the-less Mr. and Mrs. Keraus are band boosters.

Let's boost for the band folks!

MAYOR SAYS ORDINANCE NO. 31 TAKES CARE OF ALL PEDDLERS

But Wants People's Co-operation To Enforce It

Last week the Times carried an article telling of the need for an ordinance prohibiting peddling in Klemme without a license. It was hot stuff and some of the businessmen patted us on the back and told us to go after them.

Yesterday the Mayor hailed us, informing us that just such and ordinance we spoke of was on record and he would do all he could to enforce it.

We looked over the ordinance as it appeared and it is quite satisfactory, and briefly summing it up it is about as following: Transient life insurance agents are required to pay $1 a day license fee. Peddlers selling wares, merchandise, etc. from house to house are required to pay the city $5 a day license. Transient vendors of medicines, drugs, etc are required to cough up five bucks per day also. Solicitors for funds or subscriptions for educational, charitable or religious purposes need not pay a license but must obtain a permit from the mayor if their cause has merit. Traveling doctors and dentists are taxed $5 a day. Even auctioneers selling goods at public auction may come under the ordinance.

The ordinance provides for a penalty for failing to obtain a license. The fine shall be not less than $1 or more than $100.

Mayor Gruetzmacher informed us that there was no way to prevent outsiders from coming in and selling such goods as berries, melons, apples, etc, as long as the vendor himself produced the goods himself, but if he bought his fruit, mellons, etc., for re-sale then he would be required to pay a license. In other words anyone has a right to sell the articles they themselves produce in any place they see fit.

Mayor Gruetzmacher is quite anxious to do all he can to squelch the peddler and vendor. All he asks is a little co-operation from the people When a peddler comes to your door ask him or her to produce a license. If the peddler cannot show a town license then immediately notify the Mayor and he will take care of the peddler.

Let's make it hot for the peddler, vendor, or agent and co-operate with the Mayor along this line.

WHY HE WAS DISCHARGED

Employer— Why were you discharged from your last place?

Applicant— For good behavior.

Employer— What do you mean by that?

Applicant— They just took three months off my sentence.

ERNEST HELPS AND PEARL KLEINMAIER MARRIED SATURDAY

When Ernest Helps packed his grips and left Klemme over a week ago, we were of the opinion that all was not well with Ernie as a bachelor. Our supposition was quite correct.

On Saturday afternoon, at 3:00 o'clock, June 28th, 1924, Miss Pearl Kleinmaier, of Seneca, Illinois, and Mr. Ernest Helps, of Klemme, Iowa, were united in marriage, at the Methodist Parsonage at Seneca. The Bride was attended by her sister, Miss Bessie Kleinmaier, while the Groom was attended by Mr. Arnold Tisdell, also of Seneca.

The following day, Sunday, the many relatives of the Bride, about fifty or sixty in number gathered for a great picnic dinner as a reception in honor of the newly married couple.

After visiting at Seneca for about a week, Mr. and Mr. Helps then departed for this city, arriving here Monday to make their home on the farm a mile south of town where they haae begun house-keeping.

On Tuesday evening a great number of friends and nieghbors gathered at the home of the newly-weds and gave them a rousing welcome and reception, the Band also being there to seranade Mr. and Mrs. Helps. Ice cream and cake was served and cigars passed around.

"Ernie" is well known here and has a large host of friends. He is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Steven Helps, of Sommerset, England, is the youngest of a family of four boys and five girls, all of whom are now married, but only two others living in this country, they being his brother, Henry, and sister Mrs. Walter Reed, both of near Klemme. Ernest has been in this country for ten years, is a loyal American citizen and served with the U. S. army for one year in the late war. He is an industrious young man, of fine character—a good scout in every way.

The young lady whom he has taken as his wife is a refined young lady, well educated, and of a very pleasing disposition. She has made a good record for herself as a teacher in the Seneca schools, where she has taught for seven years. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Kleinmaier, of Seneca, and is also a sister of Mrs. Ted Dutheridge, of near Klemme. She will be an ideal helpmate for her husband.

The Times joins with the host of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Helps in wishing them much happiness and prosperity during a long married life.

WALLACE YAHNKE DROWNED AT CLEAR LAKE SUNDAY

Has A Number Of Relatives In This City

Wallace Yahnke, 18 year old son of Mr. Ed. Yahnke, of Buffalo Center, drowned at Clear Lake Sunday afternoon at about 5:00 o'clock.

Wallace, in company with Maynard Larson and Milo Erdal, of Mason City, had just started to take a ride in a small motor boat near the White Pier docks. Yahnke was at the bow of the boat and one of the other boys was trying to start the motor and did not see the Bobolink, a speed boat approaching the dock. As the motor started one of the lads called out a warning to look out for the speed boat and the boy tried to steer away. The motorman in the speed boat likewise saw the danger and also tried to swerve out of the course, but both the boats swerved the same way and the small boat crashed into the speed boat, throwing Yahnke into the lake in about ten feet of water. One of the passengers in the speed boat grabbed ahold of his hair but was unable to hold the squirming boy and he went under and did not again come up. It is supposed he became entangled in the moss as when his body was found two hours later it was with some difficulty that the body was raised. The other boys were not thrown out when the boats crashed.

Funeral services were held at Buffalo Center Wednesday afternoon and a number of Klemme relatives attended.

Democratic Platform

The following is the text of the Democratic platform as adopted by the convention:

We, the representatives of the Democratic party, in national convention assembled, pay our profound homage to the memory of Woodrow Wilson. Our hearts are filled with gratitude that American democracy should have produced this man, whose spirit and influence will live on through the ages; and that it was our privilege to have cooperated with him in the advancement of ideals of government which will serve as an example and inspiration for this and future generations. We affirm our abiding faith in those ideals and pledge ourselves to take up the standard which he bore and to strive for the full triumph of the principles of democracy for which he dedicated his life.

DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLES

The Democratic party believes in equal rights to all and special privilege to none. The Republican party holds that special privileges are essential to national prosperity. It believes that national prosperity must originate with the special interests and seep down through the channels of trade to the less favored industries, to the wage earners and small salaried employees. It has accordingly enthroned privilege and nurtured selfishness. The Republican party is concerned chiefly with material things; the Democratic party is concerned chiefly with human rights. The masses, burdened by discriminating laws and unjust administration, are demanding relief. The favored special interests, represented by the Republican party, contented with their unjust privileges, are demanding that no change be made. The Democratic party stands for remedial legislation and progress. The Republican party stands still.

COMPARISON OF PARTIES

We urge the American people to compare the record of eight unsullied years of Democratic administration with that of the Republican administration. In the former there was no corruption. The party pledges were faithfully fulfilled, and a Democratic congress enacted an extraordinary number of constructive and remedial laws. The economic life of the nation quickened. Tariff taxes were reduced. A federal trade commission was created.

A federal farm loan system was established. Child labor legislation was enacted. A good roads bill was passed. Eight-hour laws were adopted. A secretary of labor was given a seat in the cabinet of the President. The Clayton amendment to the Sherman anti-trust act was passed, freeing American labor. By the Smith-Lever bill improvement of agricultural conditions was effected. A corrupt practice act was adopted.

A well considered warehouse act was passed. Federal employment bureaus were created, farm loan banks were organized, and the federal reserve system was established. Privilege was uprooted. A corrupt lobby was driven from the national capital. A higher sense of individual and national duty was aroused. America enjoyed an unprecedented period of social and material progress.

During the time which intervened between the inauguration of a Democratic administration on March 4, 1913, and our entrance into the World war, we placed upon the statute books of our country more effective, constructive and remedial legislation than the Republican party had placed there in a generation.

During the great struggle which followed we had a leadership that carried America to greater heights of honor and power and glory than she had ever known before in her entire history.

Transition from this period of exalted Democratic leadership to the sordid record of the last three and a half years make the nation ashamed. It marks the contrast between a high conception of public service and an avid purpose to distribute spoils.

G. O. P. "CORRUPTION"

Never before in our history has the government been so tainted by corruption and never has an administration so utterly failed. The nation has been appalled by the revelations of political depravity which have characterized the conduct of public affairs. We arraign the Republican party for attempting to limit inquiry into official delinquencies and to impede, if not to frustrate, the investigations to which in the beginning the Republican party leaders assented, but which later they regarded with dismay.

These investigations sent the former secretary of the interior to Three Rivers in disgrace and dishonor. These investigations revealed the incapacity and indifference to public obligation of the secretary of the navy, compelling him, by force of public opinion, to quit the cabinet.

These investigations confirmed the general impression as to the unfitness of the attorney general by exposing an official situation and personal contacts which shocked the conscience of the nation and compelled his dismissal from the cabinet.

These investigations disclosed the appalling conditions of the veterans' bureau, with its fraud upon the government and its cruel neglect of the sick and disabled soldiers of the World war.

These investigations revealed the criminal and fraudulent nature of the oil leases, which caused the congress, despite the indifference of the Executive, to direct recovery of the public domain and the prosecution of the criminal.

Such are the exigencies of partisan politics that Republican leaders are teaching the strange doctrine that public censure should be directed against those who expose crime rather than against criminals who have committed the offenses. If only three cabinet officers out of ten are disgraced the country is asked to marvel at how many are free from taint.

Long boastful that it was the only party "fit to govern," the Republican party has proven its inability to govern even itself. It is at war with itself. As an agency of government it has ceased to function.

The nation cannot afford to intrust its welfare to a political organization that cannot master itself, or to an Executive whose policies have been rejected by his own party. To retain in power an administration of this character would inevitably result in four years more of continued disorder, internal dissension and governmental inefficiency.

A vote for Coolidge is a vote for chaos.

ISSUES ARE SET FORTH

The dominant issues of the campaign are created by existing conditions:

"Dishonesty, discrimination, extravagance and inefficiency exist in government. The burdens of taxation have become unbearable. Distress and bankruptcy in agriculture, the basic industry of our country, is affecting the happiness and prosperity of the whole people. The cost of living is causing hardship and unrest. The slowing down of industry is adding to the general distress.

The tariff, the destruction of our foreign markets and the high cost of transportation are taking the profit out of agriculture, mining and other raw material industries. Large standing armies and the cost of preparing for war still cast their burdens upon humanity. These conditions the existing Republican administration has proven itself unwilling or unable to redress.

The Democratic party pledges itself to the following program: We pledge the Democratic party to drive from public places all which make barter of our national power, its resources or the administration of its laws; to punish those guilty of these offenses.

To put none but the honest in public office; to practice economy in the expenditure of public money; to reverence and respect the rights of all under the Constitution.

To condemn and destroy government by the spy and the blackmailer, as by this Republican administration was both encouraged and practiced.

TARIFF AND TAXATION

The Fordney-McCumber tariff act is the most unjust, unscientific and dishonest tariff tax measure ever enacted in our history. It is class legislation, which defrauds all the people for the benefit of a few; it heavily increases the cost of living, penalizes agriculture, corrupts the government, fosters paternalism, and, in the long run, does not benefit the very interests for which it was intended.

We denounce the Republican tariff laws which are written in great part in aid of monopolies and thus prevent that reasonable exchange of commodities which would enable foreign countries to buy our surplus agricultural and manufactured products with resultant benefit to the toilers and producers of America. Trade interchange, on the basis of reciprocal advantages to the countries participating is a time-honored doctrine of democratic faith.

We declare our party's position to be in favor of a tax on commodities entering the customs house that will promote effective competition, protect against monopoly and at the same time produce a fair revenue to support the government.

The greatest contributing factor in the increase and unbalancing of prices is unscientific taxation. After having increased taxation and the cost of living by $2,000,000,000, under the Fordney-McCumber tariff, all that the Republican party could suggest in the way of relief was a cut of $300,000,000 in direct taxes; and that was to be given principally to those with the largest incomes.

Although there was no evidence of lack of capital for investment to meet the present requirements of all legitimate industrial enterprises, and although the farmers and general consumers were bearing the brunt of tariff favors already granted to special interests, the administration was unable to devise any plan except one to grant further aid to the few.

Fortunately this plan of the administration failed and under Democratic leadership, aided by progressive Republicans, a more equitable one was adopted, which reduces direct taxes by about $450,000,000.

REFERS TO MELLON PLAN

The issue between the President and the Democratic party is not one of tax reduction or of the conservation of capital. It is an issue of relative burden of taxation and of the distribution of capital as affected by the taxation of income. The President still stands on the so-called Mellon plan, which his party has just refused to indorse or mention in its platform.

The income tax was intended as a tax upon wealth. It was not intended to take from the poor any part of the necessities of life. We hold that the fairest tax with which to raise revenue for the federal government is the income tax.

We favor a graduated tax upon incomes, so adjusted as to lay the burdens of government on the taxpayers in proportion to the benefits they enjoy and their ability to pay. We oppose the so-called nuisance taxes, sales taxes and all other forms of taxation that unfairly shift to the consumer the burdens of taxation.

We refer to the Democratic revenue measure passed by the last congress as distinguished from the Mellon tax plan as an illustration of the policy of the Democratic party.

We first made a flat reduction of 25 per cent upon the tax of al incomes payable this year and then we so changed the proposed Mellon plan as to eliminate taxes upon the poor, reducing them upon moderate incomes and, in a lesser degree, upon the incomes of multimillionaires. We hold that all taxes are unnecessarily high, and pledge ourselves to further reductions.

We denounce the Mellon plan as a device to relieve multimillionaires at the expense of other taxpayers, and we accept the issue of taxation tendered by President Coolidge.

AGRICULTURE

During the four years of Republican government the economic condition of the American farmer has changed from comfort to bankruptcy, with all its attendant miseries. The chief causes of this are:

(a) The Republican party policy of isolation in international affairs has prevented Europe from getting back to its normal balance, and, by leaving unsolved the economic problems abroad, has driven the European city population from industrial activities to the soil in large numbers in order to earn the mere necessaries of life. This has deprived the American farmer of his normal export trade.

(b) The Republican policy of a prohibitive tariff, exemplified in the Fordney-McCumber law, which has forced the American farmer, with his export market debilitated, to buy manufactured goods at sustained high domestic levels, thereby making him the victim of the profiteer.

(c) The Republican policy of high transportation rates, both rail and water, which has made it impossible for the farmer to ship his produce to market at even a living profit.

To offset these policies and their disastrous results, and to restore the farmer again to economic equality with other industrialists, we pledge ourselves:

(a) To adopt an international policy of such co-operation by direct official, instead of indirect and evasive unofficial, means as will re-establish the farmers' export market by restoring the industrial balance in Europe and the normal flow of international trade with the settlement of Europe's economic problems.

(b) To readjust and lower rail and water rates, which will make our markets, both for the buyer and the seller, national and international, instead of regional and local.

(d) To bring about the early completional of internal waterway systems for transportation and to develop our water powers for cheaper fertilizer and use on our farms.

(e) To stimulate by every proper governmental activity the progress of the co-operative marketing movement and the establishment of an export marketing corporation on commission, in order that the exportable surplus may not establish the price of the whole crop.

(f) To secure for the farmer credits suitable for his needs.

(g) By the establishment of these policies and others naturally supplementary thereto, to reduce the margin between what the producer receives for his products and the consumer has to pay for his supplies, to the end that we secure an equality for agriculture.

RAILROADS

The sponsors for the Esch-Cummins transportation act of 1920, at the time of its presentation to congress, stated that it had for its purposes the reduction of the cost of transportation, the improvement of service, the bettering of labor conditions, the promotion of peaceful co-operation between employer and employee, and at the same time the assurance of a fair and just return to the railroads upon their investment.

We are in accord with these announced purposes, but contend that the act has failed to accomplish them. It has failed to reduce the cost of transportation. The promised improvement in service has not been realized. The labor provisions of the act have proven unsatisfactory in settling differences between employer and employees.

The so-called recapture clause has worked out to the advantage of the strong and has been of no benefit to the weak. The pronouncement in the act for the development of both rail and water transportation has proven futile. Water transportation on our inland waterways has not been encouraged, and limitation of our coastwise trade is threatened by the administration of the act.

It has unnecessarily interfered with the power of the states to regulate purely intrastate transportation. It must, therefore, be so rewritten that the high purposes which the public welfare demands may be accomplished.

Railroad freight rates should be so readjusted as to give the bulky basic, low-priced raw commodities, such as agricultural products, coal and ores, the lowest rates, placing the higher rates upon more valuable and less bulky manufactured products.

MUSCLE SHOALS

We reaffirm and pledge the fulfillment of the policy, with reference to Muscle Shoals, as declared and passed by the Democratic majority of the Sixty-fourth congress in the national defense act of 1916, "for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers."

We hold that the production of cheaper and high-grade fertilizers is essential to agricultural prosperity. We demand prompt action by congress for the operation of the Muscle Shoals plants to maximum capacity in the production, distribution and sale of commercial fertilizers to the farmers of the country, and we oppose any legislation that limits the production of fertilizers at Muscle Shoals by limiting the amount of power to be used in their manufactures.

CREDIT AND CURRENCY

We denounce the recent cruel and unust contraction of legitimate and necessary credit and currency, which was directly due to the so-called deflation policy of the Republican party as declared in its national platform of June, 1920, and in the speech of acceptance of its candidacy for the Presidency.

Within eighteen months after the election of 1920 this policy resulted in withdrawing bank loans and discounts by over five billions of dollars and in contracting our currency by over fifteen hundred millions of dollars.

This contraction bankrupted hundreds of thousands of farmers and stock growers in America and resulted in widespread industrial depression and unemployment. We demand that the federal reserve system be so administered as to give stability to industry, commerce and finance, as was intended by the Democratic party, which gave the federal reserve system to the nation.

CONSERVATION

We pledge recovery of the navy's oil reserves, and all other parts of the public domain which have been fraudulently or illegally leased or otherwise wrongfully transferred to the control of private interests; vigorous prosecution of all public officials, private citizens and corporations that participated in these transactions; revision of the water-power act, the general leasing act, and all other legislation relating to the public domain that may be essential to its conservation and honest and efficient use on behalf of the people of the country.

We believe that the nation should retain title to its water power and we favor the expeditious creation and development of our water power. We favor strict public control and conservation of all the nation's natural resources, such as coal, iron, oil and timber, and their use in such manner as may be to the best interest of our citizens.

The conservation of migratory birds, the establishment of game preserves, and the protection and conservation of wild life is of importance to agriculturists as well as sportsmen.

Our disappearing natural resources of timber calls for a national policy of reforestation.

IMPROVED HIGHWAYS

Improved roads are of vital importance not only to commerce and industry but also to agriculture and national life. We call attention to the record of the Democratic party in this matter and favor continuance of federal aid under existing federal and state agencies.

Mining is one of the basic industries of this country. We produce more coal, iron, copper and silver than any other country. The value of our mineral productions is second only to agriculture. Mining has suffered like agriculture and from the same causes. It is the duty of our government to foster this industry and to remove the restrictions that destroy its prosperity.

We pledge the Democratic party to regulate by governmental agencies the anthracite coal industry and all other corporations controlling the necessaries of life where public welfare has been subordinated to private interests.

MERCHANT MARINE

The Democratic party condemns the vacillating policy of the Republican administration in its failure to develop an American flag shipping policy. There has been a marked decrease in the volume of American commerce carried in American vessels as compared to the record under a Democratic administration.

We oppose as illogical and unsound all efforts to overcome by subsidy the handicap to American shipping and commerce imposed by Republican policies.

We condemn the practice of certain American railroads in favoring foreign ships, and pledge ourselves to correct such discriminations. We declare for an American-owned merchant marine, American-built and manned by American crews, which is essential for naval security in war, and is a protection to the American farmer and manufacturer against excessive ocean freight charges on products of farm and factory.

We declare that the government should own and operate such merchant ships as will insure the accomplishment of these purposes and to continue such operation so long as it may be necessary without obstructing the development and growth of a privately owned American flag shipping.

CIVIL SERVICE

We denounce the action of the Republican administration in its violations of the principles of civil service by its partisan removals and manipulation of the eligible lists in the Post Office department and other governmental departments; by its packing the civil service commission so that that commission became the servile instrument of the administration in its wish to deny to the ex-service men their preferential rights under the law and the evasion of the requirements of the law, with reference to appointments in the department.

We pledge the Democratic party faithfully to comply with the spirit as well as the regulation of civil service; to extend its provisions to internal revenue officers and to other employees of the government not in executive positions, and to secure to ex-service men preference in such appointments.

We declare in favor of adequate salaries to provide decent living conditions for postal employees.

POPULAR ELECTIONS

We pledge the Democratic party to a policy which will prevent members of either house who fail of re-election from participating in the subsequent sessions of congress. This can be accomplished by fixing the days for convening the congress immediately after the biennial national election; and to this end we favor granting the right to the people of the several states to vote on proposed constitutional amendments on this subject.

ACTIVITY OF WOMEN

We welcome the women of the nation to their rightful place by the side of men in the control of the government whose burdens they have always shared.

The Democratic party congratulates them upon the essential part which they have taken in the progress of our country and the zeal with which they are using their political power to aid the enactment of beneficient laws and the exaction of fidelity in the public service.

We favor generous appropriations, honest management and sympathetic care and assistance in the hospitalization, rehabilitation and compensation of the veterans of all wars and their dependents. The humanizing of the veterans' bureau is imperatively required.

CAMPAIGN FUNDS

The nation now knows that the predatory interests have, by supplying Republican campaign funds, systematically purchased legislative favors and administrative immunity. The practice must stop; our nation must return to honesty and decency in politics.

Elections are public affairs conducted for the sole purpose of ascertaining the will of the sovereign voters. Therefore we demand that national elections shall hereafter be kept free from the poison of excessive private contributions. To this end we favor reasonable means of publicity, at public expense, so that candidates, properly before the people for federal offices, may present their claims at a minimum of cost.

Such publicity should precede the primary and the election. We favor the prohibition of individual contributions, direct and indirect, to the campaign funds of congressmen, senators or Presidential candidates, beyond a reasonable sum to be fixed in the law, for both individual contributions and total expenditures, with requirements for full publicity. We advocate a complete revision of the corrupt practice act to prevent Newberryism and the election evils disclosed by recent investigations.

NARCOTICS, DRY LAW

Recognizing in narcotic addiction, especially the spreading of heroin addiction among the youth, a grave peril to America and to the human race, we pledge ourselves vigorously to take against it all legitimate and proper measures for education, for control, and for the suppression at home and abroad.

Te Republican administration has failed to enforce the prohibition law; is guilty of trafficking in liquor permits, and has become the protector of violators of this law.

The Democratic party pledges itself to respect and enforce the Constitution and all laws.

STATE RIGHTS

We demand that the states of the union shall be preserved in all their vigor and power. They constitute a bulwark against the centralizing and destructive tendencies of the Republican party.

We condemn the efforts of the Republican party to nationalize the functions and duties of the states.

We oppose the extension of bureaucracy, the creation of unnecessary bureaus and federal agencies, and the multiplication of offices and office holders.

We demand a revival of the spirit of local self-government, essential to the preservation of the free institutions of our republic.

We pledge ourselves to maintain our established position in favor of the exclusion of Asiatic immigrants.

INSULAR POSSESSIONS

The Filipino peoples have succeeded in maintaining a stable government and have thus fulfilled the only condition laid down by congress as a prerequisite to the granting of independence. We declare that it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to these people by granting them immediately the independence which they so honorably covet.

The maladministration of affairs in Alaska is a matter of concern to all our people.

Under the Republican administration development has ceased and the fishing industry has been seriously impaired.

We pledge ourselves to correct the evils which have grown up in the administration of that rich domain.

An adequate form of local self-government for Alaska must be provided, and to that end we favor the establishment of a full territorial form of government for that territory similar to that enjoyed by all the territories except Alaska during the last century of American history.

We believe in a policy for continuing the improvements of the national parks, the harbors and breakwaters, and the federal roads of the territory of Hawaii.

We recommend legislation for the welfare of the inhabitants of the Virgin islands.

WAR AND DEFENSE

War is a relic of barbarism and it is justifiable only as a measure of defense.

In the event of war in which the man power of the nation is drafted, all other resources should likewise be drafted. This will tend to discourage war by depriving it of its profits.

We demand a strict and sweeping reduction of armaments by land and sea, so that there shall be no competitive military program or naval building. Until international agreements to this end have been made, we advocate an army and navy adequate for our national safety.

Our government should secure a joint agreement with all nations for world disarmament and also for a referendum of war, except in case of actual or threatened attack.

Those who must furnish the blood and bear the burdens imposed by war should, whenever possible, be consulted before this supreme sacrifice is required of them.

LAUSANNE TREATY

We condemn the Lausanne treaty. It barters legitimate American rights and betrays Armenia for the Chester oil consession.

We favor the protection of American rights in Turkey and the fulfillment of President Wilson's arbitral award respecting Armenia.

Republic of Greece—We welcome to the sisterhood of republics the ancient land of Greece, which gave to our party its priceless name. We extend to her government and people our cordial good wishes.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

The Democratic party pledges all its energies to the outlawing of the whole war system. We refuse to believe that the wholesale slaughter of human beings on the battlefield is any more necessary to man's highest development than is killing by individuals.

The only hope for world peace and for economic recovery lies in the organized efforts of sovereign nations co-operating to remove the causes of war and to substitute law and order for violence.

Under Democratic leadership a practical plan was devised under which 54 nations are now operating and which has for its fundamental purpose the free cooperation of all nations in the work of peace.

The government of the United States for the last four years has had no foreign policy, and consequently it has delayed the restoration of the political and economic agencies of the world. It has impaired our self-respect at home and injured our prestige abroad. It has curtailed our foreign markets and ruined our agricultural prices.

It is of supreme importance to civilization and to mankind that America be placed and kept on the right side of the greatest moral question of all time, and therefore the Democratic party renews its declaration of confidence in the ideal of world peace, the League of Nations and the world court of justice as together constituting the supreme effort of the statesmanship and religious conviction of our time to organize the world for peace.

Further, the Democratic party declared that it will be the purpose of the next administration to do all in its power to secure for our country that moral leadership in the family of nations which, in the providence of God, has been so clearly marked out for it.

There is no substitute for the League of Nations as an agency working for peace; therefore we believe that, in the interest of permanent peace, and in the lifting of the great burdens of war from the backs of the people, and in order to establish a permanent foreign policy on these supreme questions, not subject to change with changing of party administration, it is desirable, wise and necessary to lift this question out of the party politics and to that end to take the sense of the American people at a referendum election, advisory to the government, to be held officially under act of congress, free from all other questions and candidacies after ample time for full consideration and discussion throughout the country, upon the question, in substance, as follows:

"Shall the United States become a member of the League of Nations upon such reservations or amendments to the covenant of the league as the President and the senate of the United States may agree upon?"

Immediately upon an affirmative vote we will carry out such mandate.

DEEP WATERWAYS

We favor and will promote deep waterways from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and to the Atlantic ocean.

We favor a policy for the fostering and building of inland waterways and the removal of discrimination against water transportation. Flood control and the lowering of flood levels is essential to the safety of life and property, the productivity of our lands, the navigability of our streams and the reclaiming of our wet and overflowed lands and the creation of hydroelectric power. We favor the expeditious construction of flood relief works on the Mississippi and Colorado rivers and also such reclamation and irrigation projects upon the Colorado river as may be found to be feasible and practical.

We favor liberal appropriations for prompt co-ordinated surveys by the United States to determine the possibilities of general navigation improvements and water power development on navigable streams and their tributaries, to secure reliable information as to the most economical navigation improvement, in combination with the most efficient and complete development of water power.

We favor suspension of the granting of federal water power licenses by the federal water power commission until congress has received reports from the water power commission with regard to applications for such licenses.

POLICY ON EDUCATION

We believe with Thomas Jefferson and founders of the republic that ignorance is the enemy of freedom and that each state, being responsible for the intellectual and moral qualifications of its citizens and for the expenditure of the moneys collected by taxation for the support of its schools, shall use its sovereign right in all matters pertaining to education. The federal government should offer to the states such counsel, advice and aid as may be made available through the federal agencies for the general improvement of our schools in view of our national needs.

RECLAMATION

The Democratic party was foremost in urging immediate reclamation for the arid and semi-arid lands of the West. The lands are located in the public-land states, and, therefore, it is the duty of the government to utilize their resources by reclamation. Homestead entry men under reclamation projects have suffered from the extravagant inefficiencies and mistakes of the federal government.

The reclamation act of 1924, recommended by the fact-finding commission, and added as an amendment to the second deficiency appropriation bill at the last session of the congress, was eliminated from that bill by the Republican conferees in the report they presented to congress one hour before adjournment.

The Democratic party pledges itself actively, efficiently and economically to carry on the reclamation projects, and to make equitable adjustment for the mistakes the government has made.

FRAUD IN STOCKS

We favor the immediate passage of such legislation as may be necessary to enable the states efficiently to enforce their laws relating to the gradual financial strangling of innocent investors, workers and consumers, caused by the indiscriminate promotion, refinancing and reorganizing of corporations on an inflated and over-capitalized basis, resulting already in the undermining and collapse of many railroads, public service and industrial corporations, manifesting itself in unemployment, irreparable loss and waste, and which constitute a serious menace to the stability of our economic system.

PRIVATE MONOPOLY

The federal trade commission has submitted to the Republican administration numerous reports showing the existence of monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade, and has recommended proceedings against these violators of the law. The few prosecutions which have resulted from this abundant evidence furnished by this agency created by the Democratic party, while proving the difference of the administration to the violations of law by trusts and monopolies and its friendship for them, nevertheless demonstrate the value of the federal trade commission.

We declare that a private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable, and pledge the Democratic party to vigorous enforcement of existing laws against monopoly and illegal combinations, and to the enactment of such further measures as may be necessary.

LABOR, CHILD WELFARE

Labor is not a commodity. It is human. We favor collective bargaining and laws regulating hours of labor and conditions under which labor is performed. We favor the enactment of legislation providing that the products of convict labor shipped from one state to another shall be subject to the laws of the latter state exactly as though they had been produced there. In order to mitigate unemployment and attending business depression, we urge the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction and repair of public works to be initiated in periods of acute unemployment.

Without the votes of Democratic members of the congress the child labor amendment would not have been submitted for ratification.

LATIN AMERICA

From the day of their birth friendly relations have existed between the Latin-American republics and the United States. The friendship grows stronger as our relations become more intimate. The Democratic party sends to these republics its cordial greetings. God has made us neighbors—justice shall keep us friends.

THE KLAN PLANK

FREEDOM OF RELIGION.
FREEDOM OF SPEECH.
FREEDOM OF PRESS.

The Democratic party affirms its adherence and devotion to those cardinal principles contained in the Constitution and the precepts upon which our government is founded, that congress shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances; that the church and state shall forever and remain separate, and that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust under the United States.

These principles we pledge ourselves ever to defend and maintain. We insist at all times upon obedience to the orderly processes of the law and deplore and condemn any effort to arouse religious or racial dissension.

Affirming our faith in these principles we submit our cause to the people,

SUFFERED PAIN FOR YEARS

Mrs. Jahr Finally Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Howard Lake, Minnesota.—"I write to let you know that I have taken several bottles of your medicine in the last three months, and found it to be very good. I had pains and other troubles women have and was not able to do my work. Seeing your 'Ad.' in the paper, I thought of giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. I got good results from it and feel able to do my housework now. I used to have lots of pains, but after taking the medicine am relieved from pains that I had suffered from for years. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends, and hope this letter will be satisfactory for you to publish."—Mrs. JENNIE JAHR, R. F. D. No. 2, Box 81, Howard Lake, Minn.

How Mme. Thiers Saved the Scraps

A striking instance of the frugality of the Thiers household was given by "Le Petit Homme Rouge" in his "Republican France." In the winter of 1872, when M. Thiers, though occupying the Elysee, was residing at Versailles, the author had occasion to call there on the morning after an official reception.

The commissary of the palace, to whom he was talking, was called away by a message that Madame Thiers had arrived. When he came back he explained that the lady and her sister invariably returned to Paris on the morrow of a reception in order to pinch off the remains of the dinner or supper of the previous night.

"The journey costs them nothing," he said, "for they travel at the expense of the state, and when they have lunched they carry all the food which still remains uneaten to Versailles." In proof of his statement he led the author to a window and showed him the palace servants unloading baskets and parcels from the brougham of Madame Thiers.

But what to do with it?—the man bent his brows over the problem. It is only just to him—and the blood that was in him—to state that it never so much as crossed him that he might keep it, with probably nobody ever the wiser.

It was too late to take it back to the red-roofed cottage that night, and too bulky to carry in his pockets. Deciding at last to hide it until next day gave him a chance to take Texie into his confidence, he wrapped the bundles in a towel; raised the rug; very carefully loosened a board of the floor; hid the package under it; replaced the board and rolled the rug back into place with studied exactness.

Then he blew out the candle; raised the blinds of the two small windows and slipped out into the yard.

Twilight had long faded into dark. Only an occasional candle picked out the ragged outline of the village. A dog fox back in the hills was trying to tell the rest of the foxes how lonesome he was. Over along Eagle run the frogs croaked—without interruption. He listened to make sure.

Glancing back at the cabin door to make certain he had closed it, he slipped across the corner of the orchard; along the path at the base of Black rock; into the little park and stole in under a dense clump of syringa bushes barely three steps from the rustic seat at Whispering spring.

For those who know how to listen, nature has a thousand voices—and the woods never sound a false note. A good length of the night was gone when the frogs along Eagle run gave him the cue he was expecting. He could trace the progress of the renegade down the stream—doubtless fresh from his task of making old money out of new at the deserted cabin—as well as if he had his eyes upon him.

Presently there came the very faint creak of a rail where the path crossed the fence out of the fallow pasture lot into the little park. A moment later a hulking form bulked huge in the gloom; Black Bogus stole out of the shadows and crouched down among the gnarled maple roots at the end of the rustic seat.

The woodsman lay so close that he could hear him breathe. After listening intently for some minutes, the skulking renegade raised his hands to his mouth and gave the call of the screech owl. Jack found out what he wanted to know—Hopkins had not had the chance to communicate with his confederates.

Again and again Black Bogus repeated his call, at intervals of a few minutes, until he had given it a dozen or fifteen times, each time growing more restless and disturbed. At last he began to swear, and the call began to resemble less and less the plaintive wail of the bird he mocked. Finally he rose, listened a moment and, with no very great effort at concealment, stalked up the path.

The woodsman rose and softly followed, shadowed him up the branch and into the mouth of the hollow. At the squalid hovel of dead Henry Spencer he vaulted the fence, stalked up the yard and pushed open the sagging door.

Stepping noiselessly around through the bushes, the woodsman crept up to the chink between the logs under the festoon of wild cucumber vines. He was just in time to see Black Bogus light the lamp, go to the ruined fireplace, lift up the slab of stone on the hearth and feel under it. Nothing there—he slammed the stone back, kicked it with his ragged boot, snatched out his pipe, lit it viciously, smoked hard for a minute or more, blew out the lamp, stormed out of the door and down the yard.

All the way up Eagle Hollow road and to Loge Belden's cabin the woodsman shadowed him; watched him go around to the back; heard him enter and slam the door after him; slipped up to the small east window and lay listening. The window was open a scant inch or so at the bottom; he guardedly raised himself even with the narrow opening and cautiously peeped within.

A match scraped, was laid to a candle on a shelf over the crumbling fireplace; Black Bogus whipped off the charred end of the wick; it flared to full strength and the interior of the cabin came out of the dark.

The watcher's eyes lifted in amazement. The cabin was almost totally bare of furniture of any kind—no beds; no table or chairs—merely some pots and pans by the empty fireplace, and two pallets on the floor.

On one of these pallets, almost under the window, lay Belden's sister; on the other lay Loge. He raised up on his elbow as the candle flared alight; noticed the sullen glower on the face of his associate.

"Well?"

"He didn't come out."

"H—ll! an' y'u had t' bring it back?"

"What else?"

There came a voice from the pallet under the window—a voice soft and mild, shaken and half afraid, the listener fancied.

"Didn't he send no word t'—me?"

"Didn't come out, I tell y'u."

The woodsman had caught the appeal in the soft tones; wondered what could be the relation between the girl and such a man as Hopkins. Then he recalled her reference to "the third man" that startled moment in the bushes by the side of the road; remembered her running down the yard toward them on the evening of the ride; and he brought his eyes as close to the slit under the sash as he dared. After a short pause, during which he fancied she might be gathering resolution for another question, the soft voice came again, more faltering than before:

"An' ther' wusn't nothin' under the rock—no note n'r nothin'—?"

"Not a damn' scrap."

The face under the window turned to the wall. Loge dropped back to the pallet. Black Bogus drew the unoffending bills from his pocket and slammed them down on the shelf; unbuckled his holster and put the revolver under his shirt; blew out the candle and pitched down beside Belden.

The man crouched on the outside of the window pondered what he had seen and heard. He looked eagerly for the outfit with which they made their spurious money—that was the one big reason, in fact, that had brought him. He saw no trace of it—the hint dropped by Hopkins in the little park that they had printed a plentiful supply before coming up the river was doubtless true, and that meant practically the absence of any very substantial proof.

He recalled what Hopkins had told Black Bogus about the large amount of money still in the safe at the red-roofed cottage—unguarded, as they would now suppose. They would be almost certain to make some attempt to get it. When they did—

But they were certain not to make the attempt till they learned that Hopkins was gone. Until then all was safe.

In his brief glance over the interior of the cabin, the woodsman was struck by the fact that the place was neat and clean. Mean as it was, it bore the mark of orderly hands—doubtless the hands of the girl lying just inside the window.

The cabin settled still. The outlaws on the farther pallet began to breathe heavily. The woodsman prepared to slip away but suddenly stopped and brought his ear close to the slit under the sash—the mountain girl was crying softly.

There was a stir under the blanket where Loge Belden lay; the creak of steps came across the floor and a dim figure stooped above the pallet under the window.

"Don't cry, little sister. He ain't wo'th cryin' f'r—no man ain't."

The grit and grind of powerful teeth reached to the listener outside.

"He's got t' quit pesterin' you—playin' hot an' cold with y'u—damn 'im, 'r he'll wake up some mornin' in hell with a knife in 'is ribs!"

Loge Belden, the renegade, the outlaw—the tenderness in his voice was unbelievable. The amazed listener at the window stooped along the cabin logs and softly slipped away.

CHAPTER XVI

Spurs and Flying Sand.

When the Milford stage came in from the city next forenoon Jack Warhope was there to meet it. So was Loge Belden. He had doubtless learned of the abrupt departure of Hopkins the evening before.

He shuffled up to the post-office window after the mail was worked. Zeke threw him out a letter. He stared at it hard; thrust it into his pocket unopened; immediately left the post office and walked rapidly up Eagle Hollow road.

Jack had expected there would be a letter for Belden—had counted on it. That's what had brought him to the post office. He hurried back to the homestead; crossed the barn lot; sprang up the rough path that led to the top of the cliff; spared a moment to glance keenly about and darted in among the trees.

Once in the seclusion of the woods, he ran at top speed, well back from the brow of the bluffs, as far as the deserted cabin of dead Henry Spencer; picked his way out to the edge of the cliffs and peeped down at the road. Loge Belden was just coming into sight.

As he came even with the cabin he stopped; glanced in every direction; whistled. The whistle was answered from within the cabin—another fact the woodsman had counted on. Belden vaulted the fence, ran up the yard and pushed open the door. Jack crept up to the corner of the cabin where the chink was out between the logs.

Belden had just opened his letter; Black Bogus was stooped over him. Belden, as he read, suddenly uttered a low exclamation.

"T'night," he muttered—"at midnight."

He swore merrily.

"I knowed 'e hadn't reneged—I knowed 'e hadn't."

"Hold still," growled the other. "Huh!" he went on—"t'night—midnight—and a clean sweep—expects t' be with us 'imself." He glanced at the envelope. "W'y, he's in town—what the—"

Belden took the envelope, stuffed the letter clumsily back in it and put it in his pocket.

"Wonder what 'e meant," he muttered, "by cautionin' us s' dern p'inted p'tic'ler not t' hurt the gal—if she's thar. If she's thar—where else would she be? Says we mus'n't hurt 'er, even if we haf t' cut out an' leave the swag." He glanced away in the direction of the squalid cabin up at the head of the hollow; a black look crossed his face, and the man at the chink wondered if he was thinking of that scene at the pallet under the window the night before. "Wonder what 'e thinks we air," he went on. "Don't hurt 'er—if she's thar—h—l!"

The two outlaws hunted their pipes, lounged down on the two boxes and smoked for some moments in thoughtful silence. Belden suddenly straightened; slapped his hand down on his knee.

"Must take some nerve," he chuckled, "t' murder a man, an' then preach 'is funeral."

Black Bogus drew hard on his pipe; puffed out the smoke slowly; shrugged his heavy shoulders.

"Nerve—huh—he don't give up the spoon t' nobody when it comes t' nerve, he don't."

Nearly an hour the two sat smoking and intermittently discussing their plans, no detail of which escaped the listener.

Belden was the first to leave. Black Bogus waited several minutes before following; finally slipped out, with far greater caution than Belden had shown; stooped low through the weeds and only came out into the road when some distance above the yard, at a point where the bushes grew dense along both sides.

The woodsman waited till he was well out of sight and sound before creeping from under the wild cucumber vines and stealing through the bushes up the hill. He had found out what he wanted to know.

The landscape lay before him in all its midday splendor. Mrs. Curry had doubtless just mended the fire in the kitchen stove at the red-roofed cottage, for white wood smoke curled up from the chimney. But the air was evidently too light and still to bear it up, for it drifted lazily away, to settle in a long bank of airy fluffiness that draped itself above the orchard trees like the veil of a goddess lost out of the skies. Above the homestead, and farther away over the bottoms, swift-winged swallows skimmed the air; a dozen or so blackbirds loped down out of the woods and stopped long enough in the big elm for a short concert.

Down by the road gate Graylock lifted his head, whinnied, came trotting up the barn-lot and the man set his feet to the rough path that wound down among the rocks.

He had let the horses into the barn and fed them, and was on the way to his cabin, with the intention of carrying the hidden bundles of money to Texie and taking her into his full confidence, when he saw Mrs. Curry, fat and portly, hurrying across the orchard at her pudgy best.

She held up an envelope, sealed.

"Left f'r me?"—he was in at the gate in three strides and hurrying across the yard—"where's she gone?"

"She got a letter this mornin'," Mrs. Curry puffed, "and she said she'd haf t' go t' town. She writ you this note, mounted Brownie and rode away lickety-split. She said if she didn't come back this evenin' I wuz t' git you t' sleep at our house, and I wus t' stay with Aunt Liza."

The woodsman had snatched the note and was eagerly glancing it through:

"Dear Jack:

"I've had such wonderful news. Ken ain't dead, after all. He is in the city at a woman's house named Doll Baker on Brickbat alley. He is sick and wants me to come. Mr. Hopkins got a letter from him askin' him to come, bein' his old classmate, so he went last night and wrote back to me this morning. Pore Ken, I guess he is awful proud, and he is so sick. Mr. Hopkins thought he better not tell him nothing about father. He don't want me to tell nobody, and to come alone. But I would of told you, for I know you wont tell, but I saw you going up in the woods this morning, so I wrote you this note. O, Jack, aint you glad.

"TEXIE."

English Quakes.

The first recorded earth tremor in Britain occurred a few centuries after the Norman conquest, and two centuries later, in 1274, Glastonbury was destroyed. In the ensuing centuries over a score of seismic disturbances have been experienced in the kingdom, the most serious occurring in 1884, causing two fatalities and damage to the extent of $50,000, in the Eastern counties. Londoners have had the unpleasant experience on several occasions, but Cornwall and South Wales have most frequently "quaked."

BAPTIST MINISTER GIVES TANLAC FULL CREDIT

No greater praise can be accorded a medicine than the voluntary testimony of a minister of the gospel. The preacher's high calling puts a grave responsibility on his every word, and he will not jeopardize his reputation by commending a thing without first assuring himself it is all right.

Tanlac has been endorsed by numbers of prominent ministers. They have put Tanlac to the test of personal service and their words carry conviction because they say what they know to be the truth.

One of the latest to speak out in behalf of Tanlac is Rev. B. E. Bell, a retired Baptist minister, 207 Elm St., San Antonio, Texas, who says:

"Before taking Tanlac I had suffered from stomach and nerve troubles for over 30 years and there were times when my condition was such that it required almost superhuman effort for me to prepare my sermons and go through with my Sunday services. Indeed, my work seemed like some great obstacle across my pathway—a burden too big to carry in my weak physical condition.

"But in six weeks' time Tanlac transformed my entire outlook, giving me what seemed like a new set of nerves and a brand-new digestive system. My appetite became ravenous, my nerves steady, my liver action regular and I could sleep sound for the first time in years. Whenever I have the slightest symptoms of trouble now I always resort to Tanlac, am taking some at present, and it never fails to smooth things out for me. I certainly have the best of reasons for feeling grateful to Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Children Cry for "Castoria"

A Harmless Substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups — No Narcotics!

Mother! Fletcher's Castoria has been in use for over 30 years to relieve babies and children of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and, by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving natural sleep without opiates. The genuine bears signature of

Chas. H. Fletcher.

The moth is not a society favorite, even if it does frequently appear in a dress suit.

There is always a controversy between those who want "progress" and those who want peace.

Some people flatter themselves when they are unable to get others to do it for them.

MONKEYS TAKE TOWN

Train Hits Truck With Load Of Snakes and Monkeys

Parkersburg, Iowa:— Snakes of every known variety, and monkeys, less numerous kinds, but more frisky, had the run of Parkersburg for several hours following the striking of the truck on which they were riding by a Northwestern passenger train at a crossing. The truck was being piloted by Albert Nelson of Omaha, driver of an amusement show

Crates in which the snakes and monkeys were contained were smashed and scattered in every known direction, and pedestrians were given a shock of their lives when they saw snakes crawling along the walks and monks skipping from branch to branch in the numerous trees of the city.

The girl— You shouldn't grumble at the weather. If it wasn't for that you would have nothing to talk about.

SUBTLETY

'What must I talk about to a lady to please her?"

"Her beauty!"

"And if she has none?"

"About the plainess of others."

ATMOSPHERE CHANGED

Wife— You used to rave how fair I was.

Hub.— Yes, but now you do nothing but storm.

OLD-FASHIONED MODESTY

"Am I the first man to beg a kiss of you?"

"Yes, the others were bolder, they just took it."

MONEY STRINGENCY

The Grocer: "You ought to be doing pretty well now that your wife's got that new washing machine."

New Neversweat: "Well I ain't Every time I ask her for a little money nowadays she claims she's gotta make a payment on the machine."

PAT PROPERLY PREPARED

An Irishman who was signing articles on board a ship began to write his name with his right and, then, changing the pen to his left hand, finished it.

"So you can write with either hand, Pat." said the officer.

"Yis, sor." replied Pat. "When I was a boy me father (rist his soul) always said to me: 'Pat, learn to cut yer finger nails wid yer left hand,for some day you might lose your right!"

ANOTHER VIEW OF IT

Gladys— "I refused Ferdy two weeks ago and he has been drinking heavily ever since.'

Ethel— "Isn't it about time he stopped celebrating?"

A SPECIAL ADVANTAGE

Visitor —"Are you going to be a great man when you grow up, Willie?"

Willie— "You bet! I'm going to be an artic explorer."

"An arctic explorer's life is full of hardships, Willie."

Yes'm, But I can stand 'em. I reckon."

"I like your spirit my boy. There is a great deal of glory to be gained in a career of that kind."

"Yes'm, and you don't have to wash your face."

FUN MEASURE

Judge Brown: "Well Ephraim, what are you preaching to your congregation these days? I hear you are making a mighty stir."

Ephriam.— "Well, sur, yassar, I is. I tells it to 'um this way: Fustly, I tells them what I'm going to tell them, den I tells um what I said I wus gwine tell 'um and den I tells 'um what I done tole 'um.

Civilization follows the bathtub.

The 24-Hour Man Of Modern Business

Let us look at a three-ring circus and marvel. Here are literally hundreds of people, hundreds of animals, and more paraphernalia than you find in a small-sized factory—all on the move.

Here is a complete city, set up every day in a strange place—giving a parade and two performances—again taken down, packed away, loaded on train, moved to another city and set up again.

Any business can learn something about efficiency from a circus.

Take the "24-hour man" as one example. He goes one day ahead of the circus. He contracts for all food for this army of performers. He arranges to have a local bakery deliver bread; he buys vegetables and meat; he buys tons of hay for the horses and elephants.

The "24-hour man" sees the city officials. He arranges for a license; he arranges for water, piped to "the lot;" sometimes he arranges for electricity, he sees that the lot itself is clear and ready for occupancy the next day.

Then comes the circus. All it has to do is go to the lot, set up, give its parade and its two performances.

If it were not for the "24-hour man" the circus itself would stand a fair chance of wasting its time and spending its energy running down and taking care of the details which one man handled so efficiently the day before.

Does Your Business Need a 24-hour Man?

The "24-hour man" of business is printing and advertising.

Printing and advertising takes care of a thousand details which would otherwise fall upon a salesman or clerk.

Printing and advertising thus helps your salesmen—whether they are in the store or traveling "on the road." It enables your salesmen to perform as they intended to perform—by bringing in sales.

Without advertising, any salesman must waste time in explaining your policy—buildng confdence—explaining the merits of merchandise—removng obstacles to buyng, from the purchaser's mind.

With advertising, and printing, you can do these things for your salesman.

That's just one advantage of printing and advertising—let us tell you more of them.

Average haul from Klemme, Iowa about 3 1-2 miles.

All tile must pass the specifications for standard drain tile of the American Society for Testing Materials.

BIDS WILL BE RECEIVED ON CLAY TILE ONLY.

Clay tile to be No. 1 Vitrified in all sizes above 10". 10" and below to be No. 1 Hard Burned.

The specifications state where the line of tile being constructed is within 100 feet of trees, all joints are to be surrounded with concrete of a mimimum thickness of 3 inches. In quicksand all joints are to be wrapped in double thickness tar-paper.

Work to be commenced within thirty days from date of letting contract and to be completed on or before June 1, 1925.

All tile to be delivered at the ditch side subject to inspection and to be delivered as ordered by the Construction Engineer.

Wherever the tile improvement is laid in existing ditches average depth will be computed from the natural surface of the ground and the Contractor will be required to back fill all trenches to the height of the natural surface of the ground so that the existing ditch will be completely filled.

All ditches and drains to be constructed in all respects in accordance with the plat, profiles and specifications on file in the Auditor's office, at Garner, Iowa, subject only to such changes and alterations as may be made as provided by law.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, up to 1:30 P. M., on the day of the letting.

The price must be stated in the bid in figures, and permission will not be granted for the withdrawal or amendment of any bid after time for closing.

All bids must be made at a fixed price per station of 100 feet for each size tile and also a fixed price for each section complete in all respects including corrugated pipe, intakes and filling of ditches, and must also include schedule of overdepth adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, and on file in the Auditors office, for possible overdepth or underdepth beyond the average specified.

Bids will be received for material alone, for labor alone, or for complete labor and material.

The Board will at their descretion let the work as a whole or in sections to the lowest responsible bidder reserving the right to reject any or all bids, and also to adjourn the time of awarding the contract.

Each bid must be accompanied by a cash deposit or a certified check in a sum equal to ten per cent of the total amount of bid as a guarantee of good faith of the bidder

ALL BIDS NOT MADE IN CONFORMANCE TO THE ABOVE REQUIREMNETS WILL BE REJECTED.

The party to whom any contract is being awarded will be required to attend at the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, within ten days after such award, and execute a contract thereby agreeing to all provisions, terms and conditions thereof and shall also file with the County Auditor a bond subject to his approval for a sum equal to twenty-five per cent of the amount of bid, and in case the party to whom any work is awarded fails to enter into this contract and furnish bond within ten days as herein required, the deposit of such party shall thereupon become forfeited to Hancock County Drainage District No. 91, together will all rights under said award.

The deposit of the unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them within twenty-four hours after demand and the deposit of the successful bidders will be returned to them upon their executing the contract and filing with the County Auditor the bond as herein required.

By order of the Board of Supervisors.

Dated at Garner, Iowa, this 3 day of July, 1924.

J. D. Madison, County Auditor

COOLIDGE ASKS SCHOOLS DEPT.

Tells Teachers He Favors Creating Secretaryship of Education.

Washington.—Creation of new cabinet position of secretary of education and relief at the head of a Department of Education was indorsed by President Coolidge in his July Fourth address before the closing session of the National Education association convention here.

The President took opportunity in his address to voice the patriotic sentiments of the nation on the one-dred and forty-eighth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence and to express himself upon the question of education. Unknown to the assemblage, he left the bedside of his seriously ill son, Calvin, Jr., long enough to make the address and then hurried back.

Declaring that ignorance is the "most fruitful source of poverty, vice and crime," Mr. Coolidge came out for compulsory education.

The ten thousand school teachers and educators who crowded the Central High school stadium gave the President the warmest of receptions. His remarks were loudly applauded and his hearers interrupted him several times by standing and cheering.

Stressing the point that education "should be the handmaid of citizenship," President Coolidge said:

"On this day of all days it ought to be made clear that America has had its revolution and placed the power of government squarely, securely and entirely in the hands of the people.

"For the most part our institutions are attacked," he said later on, "in the name of social and economic reform. Unless there be some teaching of sound economics in the schools, the voter and the taxpayer is in danger of accepting vague theories which lead only to social discontent and public disaster.

"The body politic has little chance of choosing patriotic officials who can administer its financial affairs with wisdom and safety unless there is a general diffusion of knowledge and information on elementary economic subjects sufficient to create and adequately to guide public opinion.

"The cause of education has long had the thoughtful solicitude of the national government. While it is realized that it is a state affair, rather than a national affair, nevertheless it has provided by law a bureau of education."

Educators Elect Jesse H. Newlon President

Washington.—Reports of committees on resolutions and nominations were adopted at the final session of the National Education association's convention. Resolutions approved called for indorsement of the Sterling-Reed bill, demand for permanent tenure guarantees and pensions for teachers, approval of the child labor amendment and the anti-narcotic measures, recommendations for tribunals for consideration of international disputes to prevent wars, and regret for the disregard for laws, especially those forbidding liquor. Jesse H. Newlon, superintendent of schools of Denver, was elected president.

Lorain, Storm Destroyed, Asks Aid to Rebuild

Chicago.—Acting Mayor A. A. Sprague, in behalf of Mayor Dever, who is attending the Democratic convention at New York, in co-operation with other cities, issued an appeal to Chicagoans for aid to the tornado-stricken city of Lorain, Ohio. A fund of $800,000 solely for relief is needed, according to an appeal made by the mayor of Lorain. The fund will be handled by the Red Cross.

Nebraska Farmer Kills Family and Himself

Avon, Neb.—Howard Price, fifty-four, a farmer living a half mile east of Avon, killed his wife, four daughters and himself in their home.

The bodies were found by a rural mail carrier. No motive has been established.

The mail carrier had found a note in the mail box, written by Price, saying the bodies would be found in the house. The daughters were all under twelve years of age.

Eight of One Family Die in Crash of Auto and Train

Eagle Lake, Minn.—Eight persons, all of the same family, were killed when their automobile was struck by a Chicago & Northwestern passenger train at the grade crossing here and the only surviving member of the family may not recover.

Fire Peril Closes Forests

San Francisco, Cal.—An order closing extensive areas in seven national forests in California to all camping and other recreation, because of the critical fire hazard, was issued here by the forest service.

Italians Shoot Serbs

Belgrade, Serbia.—A serious incident occurred on the frontier near Kranj, when three Italian patrols shot and killed two Serbian soldiers at the Serbian boundary line.

ROY O. WEST

New secretary of the Republican national committee.

PRINCIPALS IN OIL SCANDAL INDICTED

True Bills Against Dohenys and Ex-Secretary Fall.

Washington.—Former Secretary of the Interior Fall of Three Rivers, N. M., Harry F. Sinclair, Edward L. Doheny and Doheny's son, Edward L., Jr., were indicted here on charges of conspiracy and bribery in connection with the Teapot Dome and California naval oil reserve leases executed by Fall when he was in the Harding cabinet.

Soviets Export Grain, Though People Hunger

Riga, Latvia.—An additional 5,000 tons of Russian grain arrived in Windau for the soviet trade delegation in Riga, which is offering the shipment to Scandinavian buyers. When asked about the Russian crop prospects, the delegates said that while the outlook is pessimistic, Russia will continue to export grain.

Officials callously report another famine is beginning in the lower Volga district.

LaFollette Joins Race as an Independent

Cleveland, Ohio.—Senator Robert M. LaFollette announced himself as an independent candidate for the Presidency. Senator LaFollette will not be a third party candidate. He will submit his name as an "independent progressive," with names of independent candidates for electors in every state in the union. As a result of his candidacy, the Wisconsin senator believes a new party will be inevitable, but he wants the party to be formed after the election and not before it.

Two-Year Sentence Given Gaston Means

New York.—Gaston B. Means, adventurer and former federal agent, received the maximum sentence, following his conviction of a conspiracy to violate the Volstead act.

Federal Judge Wolverton fined him $10,000 and sent him to the Atlanta penitentiary for two years. Elmer W. Jarnecke, his former secretary, escaped with a $5,000 fine and two years in prison.

Radical Jap Leader for War With America

Tokyo.—While the highest officials, including the prince regent, are expressing their keenest regret over the insult to the American flag, Mr. Shimizu, head of the Taigyosha association, which staged the recent raid on the foreign colony's dance at the Imperial hotel, and also sent a delegation to the American embassy, in a speech advocated immediate war with America.

Fast Passenger Train on "Pennsy" Wrecked

Lancaster, Pa.—The Broadway limited, one of the Pennsylvania railroad's fastest passenger trains from New York to Chicago, was wrecked one mile east of this city, eight of the nine cars leaving the rails. Two women passengers and one member of the crew were slightly hurt.

Coolidge Receives First Radio From Guatemala

Washington.—President Coolidge received the first message ever sent from Guatemala by radio. The new radio station at Puerto Barrios was officially opened with a message from the Guatemalan President to Mr. Coolidge extending both birthday greetings and Independence day felicitations.

Small Nations Invited

London.—Invitations to the London conference on the Dawes report have been issued to the smaller powers as well as to the great powers. These are Greece, Portugal, Rumania and Yugo-Slavia.

Forest Fires in Alberta

Winnipeg, Man.—Forest fires are now raging through valuable timber lands in northern Alberta. The Canadian Pacific hotel at Lake Louise was destroyed at a loss of $500,000.

SURPLUS ABOVE HALF BILLION

Figures for Fiscal Year Just Closed Show Excellent Situation.

Washington.—Final figures for the fiscal year which closed June 30 show that the excess of ordinary receipts over expenditures amounted to $505,366,986. This exceeds by more than $7,000,000 the estimate of $498,000,000 which President Coolidge made, and is $176,000,000 greater than the estimate which was made by the treasury last fall.

Adding the surplus of $505,366,986 to the public debt retirements required by law, the total reduction in the public debt during the year amounted to $1,098,994,376.

Customs receipts fell $25,000,000 short of the estimate which was made last fall. The actual customs receipts for the fiscal year 1924 amounted to $545,637,503. In the fiscal year 1923 a record total of $561,928,866 was reached and it had been estimated that the total in the year just closed would amount to $570,000,000.

Total ordinary receipts during the fiscal year 1924 amounted to $4,012,044,701, as compared with $4,007,135,480 in the fiscal year 1923.

Total expenditures chargeable against ordinary receipts in the fiscal year 1924 amounted to $3,506,677,715, as compared with $3,697,478,020 in the fiscal year 1923.

Internal revenue receipts, after giving the 25 per cent credit on six months of the 1924 personal income taxes, amounted to $2,795,157,036, as compared with $2,624,472,760 in the fiscal year 1923.

Secretary Mellon in a statement summarized the financial situation as shown by the final figures for the fiscal year.

"Comparing the estimates made in October with the actual results for the fiscal year, receipts were overestimated $32,000,000 and expenditures overestimated $208,000,000.

"The gross public debt stood on June 30, 1923, at $22,349,707,365, and on June 30, 1924, at $21,250,812,989, a decrease in debt during the fiscal year of $1,098,894,375. The annual interest charges on the debt represented by this reduction is equivalent to over $45,000,000."

Army Worms Wiping Out Illinois Crops

Belvidere, Ill.—Army worms in almost a solid front marched across northern Illinois, eating up the crops as they went.

Armed with torches, plows, spades, post hole diggers, poison bait and kerosene, farmers worked from sunup to sundown in all parts of Du Page, Kane, McHenry and Boone counties, trying to save their crops from this pest.

An actual count showed 49 worms to the square foot in a field of rye and timothy. Sweet clover is about the only crop the worms have not touched on this farm. Kerosene and tractor oil is used to kill them.

Practically all of the cow pastures have been eaten up by the worms in the dairying section east of Batavia.

Look for Delay in "Oil Scandal" Trials

Washington.—Trial of former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall, Harry F. Sinclair, Edward L. Doheny and Edward L. Doheny, Jr., against whom indictments in connection with the oil-lease scandals were returned in the District of Columbia Supreme court, probably will be delayed until after November election.

The defendants will come to Washington to arrange bail, which has been fixed at $5,000, to enter formal pleas of not guilty.

Southern Methodists Vote to Join Northern Church

Chattanooga, Tenn.—An official vote of 297 to 75 placed the stamp of approval of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South upon the proposal for an organic union with the Methodist Episcopal church. The question now goes to the annual conference for ratification. A resolution was adopted directing that the annual conferences of 1925 vote upon the union of the two organizations.

Government Settles Naval "Scrap" Claims

Washington.—The Navy department has settled the last of the claims arising out of the scrapping of battleships and cruisers, as provided in the five-power treaty. The claims were originally for $2,221,180, but were settled for $1,639,013. The total monetary loss to the United States in scrapping the ships is $193,903,013.

Mellon on Vacation

New York.—Secretary of the Treasury Mellon sailed for England Saturday. He expects to return before September 1 in order to be here during the Presidential campaign.

5,000 Hat Makers Strike

Another Suspect Taken for Rondout Robbery

Chicago.—Arrest of Herbert S. Holliday by Chicago postal inspectors indicated that authorities are in possession of evidence in connection with the $2,000,000 mail robbery at Rondout, Ill., which they have not yet revealed.

Holliday was taken into custody by Inspectors Keefe and Ross at Little Rock, Ark. He is said to be an escaped convict and a train and bank robber from Texas. He has been a pal of the three Newton brothers, now held in bonds of $100,000 each, it is said.

Northwestern Raises Big Endowment Fund

Chicago.—Raising more than $91,000 in two weeks, friends of Northwestern university put over the $2,000,000 endowment fund for the colleges of liberal arts and engineering at the eleventh hour. More than two years ago the general education board of New York promised a gift of $600,000 to the two colleges if the university had raised $1,400,000 by July 1.

Raid Reds' Rooms in the Reichstag; Find Grenades

Berlin.—The Berlin police entered the reichstag and Prussian diet buildings, broke open the committee rooms, lockers and desks belonging to the Communist members and seized one revolver, many hand grenades, numerous percussion caps, and documentary evidence to prove that the Communist party is engaged in political murders and was arranging new political murders.

Uncle Sam Slashes Pay Rolls Heavily

Washington. — Slashing of government pay rolls marked the first day of the new fiscal year, about 900 government employees being dropped as a result of curtailment of appropriations.

Many of the employees are expected to find places in connection with the administration of soldiers' bonus.

COMMUNITY SERVICE AROUSES INTEREST

Interest in community and civic betterment among members of the American Legion is growing rapidly, Garland W. Powell, director of the Legion's national Americanism commission, said in a recent statement issued at Indianapolis. Mr. Powell is directing this phase of Legion work.

Mr. Powell's statement was based on the hundreds of requests which have been pouring into the community and civic betterment bureau, a division of the Americanism commission, for advice on various subjects and for copies of the new pamphlet "Your Post and Your Town," for distribution by the Legion's bureau.

"While we have many reports concerning posts which have already assumed some community responsibility, it is, indeed, surprising how many Legionnaires are planning campaigns for betterment of conditions about them," Mr. Powell declared. "Requests for direction along these lines are received daily, and indicate that constructive work for their neighbors is the principal aim of this great group of ex-service men," he said.

Mr. Powell said there was no intention on the part of the Legion to supplant any agency engaged in work of this character, but that the Legion's broad membership would qualify it as an agency best equipped to align all community endeavor.

"The volume of the requests received decided the course of the new bureau, handling this work," Mr. Powell said. "The great number of these requests clearly indicate that Legion men are thinking in lines of community service and are seeking best channels of expression in the various lines. As a consequence, the community and civic betterment bureau is to function principally in an advisory capacity."

Advice furnished by the bureau will extend to every phase of community development and civic betterment, according to Mr. Powell. Perhaps most stress will be laid on recreation or some activity which will tend to occupation of the leisure time of the nation, but he declares this clearly anticipates civic betterment, including community building, memorials, playgrounds and recreation centers, health conservation, philanthropic administration, municipal progress and general community organization.

"Because members of the American Legion represent every class in the country," Mr. Powell declared, "I predict that the organization will go far in accomplishments for the nation—leading to ideal conditions of American citizenship."

Radio Is Presented to Reconstruction Home

A radio receiving set has been presented to the reconstruction home for infantile paralysis in Ithaca, N. Y., by the local volture of the Forty and Eight, the fun-making division of the American Legion. On the first night the set was installed J. A. Z. Mundy, grand chef de gare of the society in New York, broadcast a message to the veterans in the home from a New York city station.

Wants Ex-Service Men to Be Scout Leaders

Characterizing the boy scout movement as an "incubator for the manpower of the nation," "Les" Pierce, a Legionnaire of Toledo, urged on his comrades the necessity for continued efforts in behalf of the youngsters. He asked that every post furnish as many scout leaders from the ex-service men as possible, these men to attend a scout school for instructors.

Insures New Members

An accident insurance policy with every membership card issued by the post is the provision that members of the Hilton U. Brown, Jr., post of the American Legion in Indianapolis make for the future. Some of the members have already announced that their policy will be made payable to the post in case of death by accident. The policies are paid from post funds, and have been secured from a national casualty insurance company.

Post to Have New Home

In order that men of the Legion will accomplish their building fund in Darlington, S. C., R. E. Allen, a local merchant has offered to give the Legionnaires 1 per cent of his gross sales for the year. The post possesses a fine lot, the donation of other Darlington citizens, and it is expected that other merchants will follow the lead of Mr. Allen in providing funds for erection of a post home.

Long Pony Ride

Undertaking a long, overland ride from Marysville, Calif., to St. Paul, Minn., "Tex" Kuykendall, a former Texas ranger, is to represent the Golden state at the national convention of the American Legion. Kuykendall's departure will be a feature of the Legion's Fourth of July celebration in Marysville, and he will visit Legion posts along his route as he travels to the 1924 mecca of Legionnaires.

Uniforms for Legion Band

Uniforms for the Torrington (Conn.) American Legion band have been purchased at a cost of $1,300, according to post officers. The coat is of marine blue, gilt Legion buttons, flaps and shoulder straps of yellow; yellow silk fourragere, black Sam Brown belt, breeches with yellow stripe, and blue cap. The band has already secured a number of engagements.

Johnny O'Donnell of St. Paul Is Brilliant

St. Paul, which has produced such master boxers as Mike Gibbons, Jock Malone, Jimmy Delaney and Mike O'Dowd, has another candidate for fistic fame in Johnny O'Donnell, the brilliant ring craftsman who smothered Johnny Mendelsohn. O'Donnell has a dazzling right hand and a fine left. There is no lost motion in his boxing. He times his punches perfectly, steps about with the speed and grace of a ballet dancer, and has an excellent defense. The St. Paul harp is a legitimate lightweight.

O'Donnell may be knocking at the championship gates before long.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY WILL OPEN STADIUM

Expect Structure Ready for Rose Poly Game.

Indiana university, which more than two years ago began raising a fund for the construction of a modern football and athletic stadium, is to see the dream of many years reach fruition on September 27 when the Rose Poly and Indiana elevens inaugurate the new concrete ellipse at Bloomington. Plans for the inaugural game have been all but completed and it is hoped to make this a memorable occasion. Indiana university has been striving for many years to finance this stadium, and the vision of the alumni and students who have worked hard in the raising of the fund seems destined to be realized in full.

The present plans call for the stadium to be turned over to the Indiana university trustees September 1. The contractors have promised that delivery will be made on that date, and unless some unforeseen hitch arises the inaugural game with Rose Poly will be played in the new home of football.

This concrete ellipse, crowned by two rising memorial towers, is the latest design among stadia that has sprung up in the Middle West since football gained such a tremendous hold on the followers of the gridiron game in that section of the country. Work on the Indiana stadium was halted during the winter after construction of the cement sides had progressed favorably last fall.

In order to build a playing field that will be on a par with any in the country, a wide hunt was made for the desired loam, and some forty carloads were required to surface the field. According to Athletic Director Zora G. Clevenger, the plans call for a graded field one foot higher in the center than at the sides, assuring a good drainage. An elaborate system of lateral drainage sewers also is to be constructed, eliminating many of the troubles that were experienced at Jordan field, the old home of Indiana football teams. The first Big Ten to be played this year in the new stadium will take place November 8, when Indiana and Ohio State meet in their annual classic. On this occasion a second dedication will take place.

Sarcastic Comeback by Owner Charles Comiskey

Joe Cantillon, while umpiring in the American league, incurred the wrath of Charles Comiskey, because of certain decisions against the White Sox.

Some time afterwards Cantillon appeared at the gate and asked the turnstile keeper to pass in two of his friends.

"I'm sorry, but I can't do it," was the answer. "Mr. Comiskey has given strict orders that no one is to be admitted except on written passes. But I'll send a note up to Mr. Comiskey and ask him to send down two passes."

A few minutes later a reply came back from Comiskey. The gatekeeper instead of keeping it to himself, passed it along to the umpire. It read:

"If there are two men in Chicago brave enough to pose as Joe Cantillon's friends, pass 'em in—and give 'em box seats."

Canada Has Own Flag

Display of Canada's new "national flag" on formal occasions and officially has been made. The old flag for Canadian merchant ships was used for 30 years, but two years ago King George authorized the use of a new Canadian coat of arms designed for a quite different purpose and this has been appropriated for the new ensign. The main feature of the flag is the old union jack, with a combination of the crosses of St. Andrew, St. George and St. Patrick on which the new coat of arms is imposed.

WHY DRUGGISTS RECOMMEND SWAMP-ROOT

For many years druggists have watched with much interest the remarkable record maintained by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine.

It is a physician's prescription.

Swamp-Root is a strengthening medicine. It helps the kidneys, liver and bladder do the work nature intended they should do.

Swamp-Root has stood the test of years. It is sold by all druggists on its merit and it should help you. No other kidney medicine has so many friends.

Be sure to get Swamp-Root and start treatment at once.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

His Fatal Charm

A mother-in-law was in the habit of visiting her daughter just often enough to make her daughter's husband wish he had married an orphan.

One day she arrived and found her daughter in tears.

"What has happened? Has George deserted you? Has he run away?"

"Y-yes." (Sobbing.)

"Then there is a woman in the case; who is she?"

"Y-you!" (Sobbing.)

"Good heavens! And to think that I never encouraged him!"—Pasquino Turia.

"Intuition" Tells Her?

"My dear," remarked Jinks, who had just finished reading a book on "The Wonders of Nature," "this really is a remarkable work. Nature is marvelous! Stupendous! When I read a book like this it makes me think how puerile, how insignificant is man."

"Huh!" sniffed his better-half. "A woman doesn't have to wade through 400 pages to discover that!"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

TWIN LAKES FARM BUREAU MEETS

Plan to Eradicate T. B. in Twin Lakes Township

The Farm Bureau of Twin Lakes Township met at the home of E. J. Schneider of Goodell last Friday evening, July 11th.

Superintendent Peters of the Goodell schools gave a very nice talk on "The Necessity of a Farmer Taking a Vacation." This was followed by a talk by Dr. Snearly, of Goodell, on "The Effect of Tuberculosis on the Human Race." Dr. D. P. Anderson, local veterinarian gave a very helpful as well as interesting talk on "The Effect of Tuberculosis on Livestock."

An effort is being made in Twin Lakes Township to have a 100 per cent test for T. B taken of all the Cattle in the township, under the county area plan, which has been explained in former issues of the Times. It is a very good goal to work for as it means a great deal to every one in the township to have cattle free from tuberculosis. We earnestly hope that the time is not far distant when the whole of Hancock county will have its cattle 100 per cent tested.

MASON CITY BUTTER CONTEST

Many Entries Are Expected at North Iowa Fair

Fully one hundred entries are expected in the butter contest to be held in connection with the North Iowa fair, a Mason City, August 9 to 15, according to Prof E. F. Goss of the dairy department, Iowa State College.

Roy Scoles of the state department of agriculture, will as as superintendent of the contest. The judges are Howard D. Reynolds, Mason City; J. J. Bruner, Jefferson and C. N. Hart of Mc Gregor. Last year there were 70 entries in the contest and only one of them scored below 90, an exceptionally high average, according to butter experts.

Gold, silver and bronze medals will be offered for the second and third prize tubs. A silver loving cup will be given to the section of Iowa having the five highest scoring entries.

SUMMER SILAGE IS ESSENTIAL

Pays for Itself in Milk and Fat Production.

Silage has proven itself to be highly valuable in the dairy cow's ration during the summer months, in spite of the fact that the cow is on pasture according to Prof. Earl Weaver of the dairy department . Iowa State College.

Experiments conducted last year shows that summer silage keeps the cow in condition either maintaining her weight or adding to it. It keeps up the milk and butterfat production through the hot months when succulent pasture is scarce.

As a result of the summer feeding of silage, cows are in better condition to go into the succeeding lactation in the fall. Prof Weaver recommends that the herd man feed silage once a day preferably at noon. This has the advantage that the cows may be brot into the barn about 10:30 and kept there nutil after the evening milking, thus keeping them indoors during the hottest hours of the day.

The silage eaten during this noon period in the barn is sure to be more nutritious than the limited grass that would be eaten during those hours when the cow's chief occupation would be brushing away flies.

FATTER—AND FARTHRE

Passenger— Please, conductor, will you help me to get off the train?

Conductor— Certainly, madam.

Passenger— You see, it's this way, Being rather stout, I have to get out backwards— the porters I'm getting in— so they give me a shove and say. "Urry up, madam," I'm five stations past where I want to go now.

Where Bells Don't Ring

It seems to me I'd like to go
Where bells don't ring nor whistles blow,
Nor clocks don't strike, nor gongs don't sound
And I'd have stillness all around.

Not real stillness but just the trees'
Low whisperings, or the hum of bees.
Or brooks faint babbling over stones
In strangely, softly tangled tones.

Or maybe a cricket or katydid,
Or the songs of birds in the hedges hid
Or just some sweet sound as these
To fill a tired heart with ease.

If it weren't for sight and sound and smell
I'd like the city pretty well,
But when it comes to getting rest
I like the country lots the best.

Sometimes it seems to me I must
Just quit the city's din and dust,
And get out where the sky is blue—
And, say, how does this seem to you?

Thus far the summer weather has not affected the attendance of our services and we sincerely hope that it may not.

We shall try to make our services brief and interesting at all times so that no one may not be wearied but rather benefitted. This applies to the Sunday School as well as to the preaching service. Do not slight the Sunday school.

All services regular next Sunday. We begin on time in all services.

The Epworth League enjoyed enother fine social evening this week. The attendance was somewhat affected because of the threatening weather, however the enthusiasm was up to par.

All are looking forward to the next regular social event. Let us many of the Epworth Leagurs as en, plan for and atend the E. L. Institut at Clear Lake next week!

BANK ACCOUNT GONE

Postage Took Up All His Millions

New York— Alexander Konta, Wall Street banker, was informed in a letter from Germany that his bank account of 1,060,000 or so was wiped out. The 1,000,000 or so was in marks. The Dresdenner bank in Berlin wrote him the letter which, after saying his account of 1,123,--949 marks no longer existed, and adding that the smallest account now handled was 10,000,000,000,-marks, reads:

Your total account, therefore, has been used in part payment for postage on this letter and is now squared, we having paid the difference out of our own pocket." the bank wrote.

Sudan Can Be Planted Late

The latest possible emergency crop that can be planted this summer, where corn and other crops have failed, due to the late spring or to insect damage, is sudan grass. Experiments made at Iowa State College indicate that sudan grass will make a very heavy, good quality hay crop when planted as late as July 25 About 15 pounds of seed is reccommended per acre. This seed may be either drilled or broadcast and harrowed to cover.

JULY CROP REPORT

By Federal and State Crop Reporting Service, Des Moines, Iowa

The Iowa Corn crop shows an indicated yield on July 1, 1924 of 32 bushels per acre as compared with a 40 bushel yield last year and 45 bushel yield in 1922, according to the reports of correspondents of the Federal and State Crop reporting Service. The acreage of corn to be harvested shows an increase of 1 per cent over last year. The condition on July 1 was reported as 72 per cent normal making the corn crop forecast 347,327,000 bushels for this year—a reduction of 20 per cent. The predicted corn crop for the United States shows a reduction of 17 per cent.

Iowa Oats on July 1 show a condition of 88 per cent, indicating a yield of 37 bushels and a total production of 213,638,000 bushels as compared with 208,791,000 bushels last year. The United States oats crop is forecast as 1,356,338,000 as compared with 1,300,000,000 bushels last year.

Barley conditions 89 per cent indicating yield 27.8 bushels, production 4,392,000 bushels. Rye condition 91 per cent, indicating yield 17.3 bushels, production 744,000 bushels. The condition of the following crops on July 1, 1924 is reported as follows: Alfalfa 94 per cent, Clover Hay 85 per cent, Timothy hay 78 per cent, Clover and Timothy mixed 83 per cent, Wild Hay 85 per cent, Soy Beans 90 per cent, Flax Seed 94 per cent, Pasture 91 perc ent and apples 66 per cent.

RARE SPECIMENS DUG UP BY TREGANZA IN HUTCHINS PIT

BRITT, July 3—Some time ago J. A. Treganza went to the gravel pit west of Hutchins in search of fossils. He picked up a limonite mold of a cone which he deciced was from the Sequoia. The only fossils of this kind that had ever been found were in Maryland and California. He sent the fossil to Prof. A. O. Thomas at the State University of Iowa, for identification. The cone was forwarded about the twentieth of March and on June 26, Prof Thomas wrote Mr. Treganza as follows.

"A friend of mine at the University of California has sent me a number of the cones of the Sequoia growing there and I am delighted that there is no question upon comparing them with your fossil speiman but that our Iowa fossil is a Sequoia too. Am having them photographed side by side for publication in the Academy report. Where are we to suppose this old Sequoita forest grew? and when. I find that fossil cones of the sequoia have been reported from Maryland but the modern representatives are limited to the Pacific coast. Evidently these magnificent trees were once widespread."

This rare specimen was picked up along the side of the road west of the cement bridge on the paved high way east of Mike Gahan's . It was there too that the tooth of the Cretacous shark called Lamma and the tooth of the mastodon were located. When the large pit is opened a short distance south to obtain gravel for placing on the Kanawha-Britt road it may not be surprising if some rare fossils are unearthed.

COOL CHARACTTR

Admirer (to famous ski-runner)—Have you ever fallen into a crevasse?

Admired—I spent two days in one once.

LEAGUERS MEET AT THE HOME OF MISS ELVIRA STILLE

Plan to Attend the Devotional Meet-Every unday Evinig. . .

The Epworth League held their monthly social gathering last Tuesday evening at the home of Miss Elvira tille. The threatening weather in no way affected enthusiam displayed by the young people. The evening was spent in playing games of various kinds, some of which we dare say would revert our minds to the real "kid days".

Earl Josten was there with his ukulele and a fine time was had playing the piano and singing.

At the refreshment hour, ice cream and cake were served

The fun of the evening was brot to a close by a devotional hymn led by Mr. Josten.

Don't forget the devotional meetings every Sunday evening. We have a good leader with a good topic next Sunday so plan to be there. 7:15 o'clock.

Owing to the E. L. Institute at Clear Lake a week from next Sunday there will be no devotional service in Klemme, as most of the Leagurers are planning to go to the Lake for that day.

He crammed the letter into the envelope, thrust it into the pocket of his blouse and turned back across the yard; stopped, and glanced around at the woman.

"She had t' go and look after some—business," he said. "I 'low I'll ride in and he'p 'er"—he pondered a moment; went on—"and I reckon you better stay at Aunt Liza's, as she said. I'll be back t'night—sometime—but it may be late."

The woodsman probably never covered the distance to the barn as quickly as he covered it that day. The words: "If she's there," that had so puzzled the pair in the old cabin—as well as the man at the chink—flared clear as the mid-day sun. Hopkins—it was his last desperate move—a move totally unforeseen. His intentions toward the girl had been foul from the first. That he would make some attempt to rob the safe was to be expected—had been expected. But this—

He buckled on his spurs; bridled and saddled Graylock with a feverish haste that waked the mettle of the good horse. When he led him out, Mrs. Curry was waddling across the barn-lot.

In the tense moment he had forgotten that his haste must be causing her no small wonder.

"Yes, I 'low I'll ride in and find 'er," he ventured, "and bring 'er back t'night—sometime—but you better go on t' Aunt Liza's anyhow, f'r fear it'll be late, and we'll come and git y'u."

He saw that the attempt at reassurance—an attempt that cost him no little—had failed. The good housekeeper's face twisted quite beyond her control; her apron went up to her eyes.

"Oh, Jack," she sobbed, "I'm plum' fluster'd. Las' night Brother Hopkins left without leavin' no word, and now Texie's gone—"

The man turned and feigned to adjust the saddle girth. A woman's tears—the big woodsman was utterly helpless. He glanced back at the heaving apron.

"Now, Mis' Curry, don't be fluster'd. She's all right." He hesitated. "Them two facts ain't no ways—connected," he finally muttered, knowing only too well that they were. "The parson more'n likely went in after some more books, 'pears like he must 'a' gone through all them 'e had, and Texie—I'll hunt 'er up this afternoon and ride home with 'er." He gazed hard toward the village. "I don't b'lieve, if I was you, I'd leave the house till after dark, and I wouldn't mention she's gone—only t' Aunt Liza and Uncle Nick."

The apron came down from the troubled face and the housekeeper began to dry her eyes. The woodsman turned away; stopped; turned back.

"One question—did she take 'er revolver with 'er?"

"W'y, no," was the wondering answer—"why?"

"I didn't 'low she would 'a'."

The words came over his shoulder as he threw the bridle rein into the hollow of his arm and strode away down the barn-lot. He flung the gate open, sprang to the saddle and Graylock was off like a bird on the wing—twenty miles of dust and flying sand—toward the dim spired gateway that led out into another world.

CHAPTER XVII

Brickbat Alley.

There are men so big, physically and otherwise, that the world naturally expects big things of them—who seem to find big things always cut out for them. Jack Warhope was such a man—a singular mixture of romantic impulsiveness and calm, cogent reason; a dreamer; a thinker; a man of hard deeds, whose heart sometimes ran away with his head; a Sir Galahad strayed out into the Nineteenth century a thousand years behind his day.

The afternoon was half spent, and Graylock was foul with dust and sweat, when he rode across the long covered bridge over the Wabash and into the city.

Brickbat alley had a reputation all its own. He had heard that it was in the south part of town near the river, though its exact location he did not know. Riding down into that end of the city, he stopped to inquire of an old woman who happened to be standing in the narrow yard in front of a shabby ramshackle house with a furnished rooms sign in the window.

At the name—Doll Baker—the old woman bent upon him a look out of her bleared eyes that was both deep and searching.

"Ther' ain't many men runnin' around loose, like you 'pear t' be, but what knows whar Doll Baker lives. But, come t' look at y'u clos't, you're someway differ'nt. F'om the country, hain't y'u?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I 'lowed y'u wus—y'u look a differ'nt stripe f'om the likes o' them that hunts Doll Baker."

She paused and seemed to be weighing some thought before letting it fall.

"And this Doll Baker lives—?" he questioned, hardly able to hold the spur from Graylock.

"Brickbat alley—that's next alley down—fourth door on y'ur right.

"Be keerful, lad," she called, hopping like some crippled old bird out to the fence and halting him, for he was already riding away, "be keerful. I dislike t' see any harm fall on y'u—them's bad people."

It seemed to him that Graylock had never stepped so slowly. Hitching him in front of a small grocery on the street, he looked at all the other hitch-racks in sight for Brownie—but Brownie was not to be seen. Buttoning his hunting blouse about him so as to hide the six-gun, he walked into the alley.

The fourth door down on the right proved to be a large, two-story, closely-shuttered wooden structure standing almost flush with the narrow side-street known as Brickbat alley. There was another building on the same lot, a business edifice of brick, fronting on the street proper and apparently occupied by a saloon, and the two were connected by a sort of covered porch. All these facts the woodsman noted in the second or two of his approach.

He knocked at the weather-stained, unpainted door. Such a long time went by that he was just on the point of knocking again, when there was a shuffling inside and approaching steps. A key rattled in the lock, the bolt clicked back, the knob turned, a woman appeared at the very narrow slit the door was allowed to open and looked out at him. She was a large woman, in good flesh, and not bad-looking.

"Is this where Doll Baker lives?"

"Yes; won't ye come in?"

He entered. She closed the door, turned the key in the lock—a fact that he took due note of—and led the way into another room slightly better lighted. He noticed that both rooms were rather showily and expensively furnished.

He took the chair pointed out to him. The woman, seating herself by a small table a few feet away, eyed him covertly.

"And you are—?" he questioned, as if continuing the inquiry begun at the door.

"Miss Baker—Doll Baker."

"Well, Miss Baker," he had to watch his voice to keep it orderly and even, "I've got a friend—that is, a lady friend—that come t' the city t'day from the country. I come in t'day m'self, and I'd kinda like t' hunt 'er up and ride home with 'er. I was tol she's here."

Regarding the obvious blind of the sick brother, he said nothing, knowing it was but a trick of the very resourceful Hopkins. The terrible letter that had prostrated the old banker seven days before was in Ken Colin's own hand and absolutely genuine. There was no sick brother.

"What Kind of a Looking Girl Was Your Friend?" She Questioned at Last.

The woman sat for near a minute, studying him out of the baffling slits of her eyes—clothing; hands; face; feet—in a way she did not think he saw.

"What kind of a looking girl was your friend?" she questioned at last.

"Medium size, fair, brown hair, brown eyes—with smiles in 'em—and remarkably small and purty hands and feet."

"Well, she isn't here."

The gray-green eyes of the woman watched him covertly through their narrowed lids. He caught the look, felt the caution.

"Where is she?"

"Don't ask me."

"I'm awful sorry," he replied, in tones he tried hard to make meek and doleful. "She ain't nothin' but jist a raw country girl, and I ain't nothin' but jist a raw country boy, but we're both from the same little town out here a ways and I wanted t' see 'er awful bad b'fore she left—town."

The woman still eyed him closely, though her look seemed gradually to become more curious than distrustful, until at last she appeared to throw off all suspicion.

"Well, Mr.—Country Boy," she said, with an air of frankness and a twist of her face between a grin and a smile. "I don't know one thing about your—friend, and that's straight."

"Do y'u know Prof. Caleb Hopkins?"

The question caught the woman off guard. She started.

"Never heard of him,"—she hesitated; finally added—"but you might go on through and ask Bill."

"Who's Bill?"

"Oh, friend of mine—bounces bar out front."

The man studied her. In his eyes there waked a hardness that the Flatwoods had learned to know.

"Miss—Doll Baker"—it cost him an effort to hold his voice even and calm—"I'm right sorry t' say I'm doubtin' y'u."

"Doubting me!" A tang of hardness slid into her well-modulated tones; she flared up straight in her chair. "What do you mean?"

"I mean t' search this house."

The woman sprang up.

"Search th' house!"

"That's what I'm aimin' t' do," the woodsman went on evenly, rising and glancing about him.

The woman caught a small cord that dangled behind the door in reach of her hand and gave it a vicious jerk. It must have been a bell cord that led to somewhere outside, for immediately heavy steps sounded along the porch that connected the house with the saloon and a man dashed in at the door.

"Bill, you'll haf t' 'ten' to 'im"—she jerked a half clenched hand toward the woodsman—"threatens t' raid th' j'int f'r a gal he thinks is here."

So this was Bill—the "bouncer." He looked the part—broad-backed, thick set, heavy jowled, little pig eyes and short cropped, reddish hair. He raised his arm, pointed a stubby forefinger to the door and uttered the one word: "Git."

But had Bill only known what manner of man it was standing there and coolly measuring him through narrowed eyes, he probably would have studied a long time before making his next move.

"The devil y'u won't," he snarled, crouching and beginning to creep and circle.

"Don't hurt 'em," the woman cautioned, "he ain't nothin' but jist a raw country jake."

Almost with the word Bill sprang, aiming a blow that would have caved in the side of a house—only it didn't land.

The fact was instantly apparent that he was not a resourceful fighter, but placed his main reliance in his ponderous strength—even so, he was a dangerous man.

In a flash he wheeled and struck again. This time Jack parried the blow, instead of side-stepping, and shot across one in return—a light uppercut to the chin that jarred Bill's head back and drew from him a snarl and a curse. He came back with a whirlwind of jabs and swings.

Jack stepped right into the whirlwind, well knowing that others of Bill's ilk might come any moment, and sparred for an opening with such bewildering speed and cleverness that Bill raised his guard to cover his face. Jack shot across a vicious body blow. Bill dropped his left. Instantly Jack's tremendous right swung on the exposed jaw. Bill grunted, tottered, looked dazed. The right swung again on the same spot—clean from the hip—and Bill pitched against the wall like a bundle of dirty rags.

With a curse, horrible upon a woman's lips, Doll Baker ran to where he lay and bent over him.

She had hardly reached him before the woodsman was darting about the house and peeping into pantry and closets. There was no basement. He made sure of that, and sprang to the stairs. The woman tried to drag him back, he flung her off and dashed up the steps.

Every place where a girl could have been concealed was explored, but Doll Baker had told the truth—that much of it, at least. Texie was not there.

When he hurried down, Bill and the woman were both gone. He was just stepping from the stair door, wary and alert for a surprise of some sort, when there came a clatter of feet running across the porch.

He dashed through the house to the door by which he had entered. Just as he wrenched it open they rushed into the room behind him—four of them, Bill in the lead.

But, his purpose accomplished, Jack sprang outside and, with tantalizing deliberation, took his way toward the street. Bill thrust his battered face out at the door, scowled and swore, but none of the four ventured to follow, like the alley rats they were, not daring to chase their prey into the open.

Through a number of streets and side-streets in the neighborhood of Brickbat alley, Jack Warhope searched for Brownie. He even made inquiries at all the livery and feed stables in the vicinity, but failed to find any trace of her.

A thought suddenly came to him—he frowned hard; muttered some very uncomplimentary things about himself that it hadn't occurred to him before—the old tollgate keeper ten miles out on the River road, he had been there more years than Jack had lived and knew everybody from the Flatwoods. He would know if Texie had passed.

Next moment the fleet Graylock was racing toward the bridge.

Ten miles out on the River road he drew rein and dismounted by the well in front of the diminutive house of the tollgate keeper.

"Jist a mouthful f'r the hoss, Uncle Asbury."

"He'p y'urse'f." The old man shuffled up out of his rickety chair and limped toward the well. "Be'n lettin' 'im out, hain't y'u?"

"Some—yes."

He loosened the saddle girth; with the squeaky windlass cranked up a bucketful of water; allowed the horse to have it sparingly, a sup at a time.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Gowens' Marital Bark Hits the Shoals

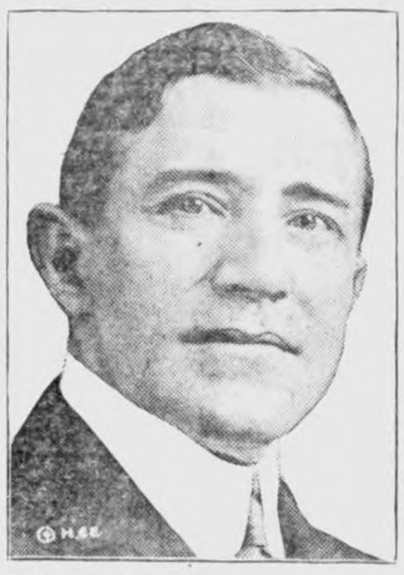
Their tiny craft, the Speejacks, the smallest boat that ever circled the globe, weathered tropical storms and monsoons and dodged uncharted rocks in strange waters during its eventful one-year journey, but their marital bark, launched in 1919, has proved not so staunch a craft, or not so well guided.

Mrs. Gene Gowen has filed a suit in Cleveland for divorce from her husband, Albert Y. Gowen, vice president of the Lehigh Cement company of Pennsylvania. So threatens the end of a marriage that started with a honeymoon that was the interest of the whole world, when the pair sailed around the globe in the 98-foot Speejacks.

The Gowens were married in New York in 1919. Mrs. Gowen had been married before. From August 19, 1921, the day it sailed, until April 19, 1922, the day the Gowens arrived in Chicago from the 50,000-mile trip, thousands watched with interest the fate of the little craft, waited for daily bulletins when the boat was overdue in the South seas, feared for it when no news came of it for days when the small vessel fought the monsoons of the southern ocean.

They had several thrilling escapes from disaster. In New Guinea they succeeded in frightening off head-hunters by discharging dynamite. Several times they were reported lost during severe storms among South Sea islands, in the China sea and off the Canary islands. They bagged elephants and tigers, for as a representative of the Field museum, in Chicago, Mr. Gowen studied wild life as he found it.

Says Navy Plums Go to "Butterflies"

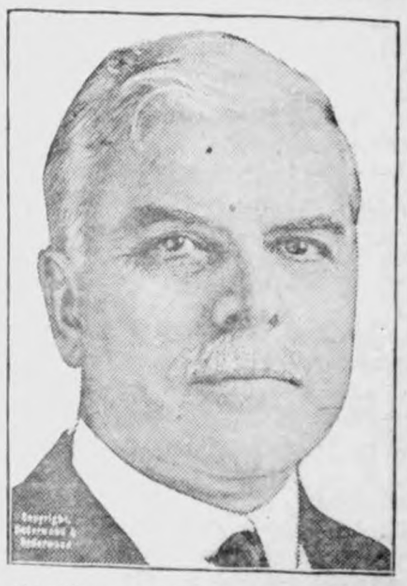


Navy promotions are regulated by a man's ability in the butterfly social set rather than on a battleship deck, and naval officers are still moved about "like checkers on a checkerboard" through the operation of the outlawed seniority system.

These were the sensational charges made by Representative Britten of Illinois, in a recent letter to President Coolidge in which the request was made for an inquiry into the promotion of six captains to the rank of rear admirals. A select ring of Washington line officers dominate the navy and assign to themselves and their friends all the military and social plums, Mr. Britten, who is ranking Republican on the house naval committee, said.

He declared further that naval assignments are "jealously parcelled out to those in the butterfly set and to no others," and with the exception of the two captains who had been previously passed, the six promotions were from the first ten captains on the list and the four captains passed over are graduates of the war college, while the six captains selected had never been to the college. Within 48 hours after his promotion to rear admiral, one of the six "lucky officers ran his battleship, the West Virginia, aground."

W. S. Stone Is Engineers' New Chief



Warren Sanford Stone, grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, is now the president of all brotherhood activities, including insurance, banking and the labor organization. He was elected to this high place at the recent triennial convention of the brotherhood and its insurance organization held at Cleveland.

"The chief mogul of the so-called conference for progressive political action" held at Cleveland on July 4, was the way Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States railroad labor board, characterized Mr. Stone in answering charges made by the labor leader and D. B. Robertson, head of the firemen. The charges alleged that the labor board chairman had used his public office to create controversies and made the board useless by discrediting it.

"You have diminished the confidence of organized labor in the fairness of public authority in settling of labor disputes," the letter to Mr. Hooper said. "You have objected to the political activities of organized labor, and yet no person has done more to convince railway employees of the necessity of political action." In answering the letter Mr. Hooper hurled back a reply that denied its truth and denounced the attack as one of radical political design.

Hertzog Succeeds Jan Smuts as Premier

Establishment of the first avowedly republican government in the British empire came coincidentally with the election to the premiership of South Africa of Gen. J. B. M. Hertzog, the Dutch Nationalist leader, who, with the support of the Laborites, headed by Colonel Cresswell, succeeded Premier Jan Christian Smuts.

Although General Hertzog is an advocate of secession from the British empire, he gave assurance during the pre-election campaign that the secession issue would not be raised during the meeting of the newly formed parliament. The defeat of the Smuts administration nevertheless, came as an unmistakable blow at the principle of imperial unity, and with the rejection of General Smuts by his own constituents in western Pretoria, comes the striking evidence of a new drift of opinion in the South African Union.

It is said that the direct cause of General Smuts' downfall was his campaign effort for imperial development and European settlement. His opponents charged him with too great interest in these larger issues and too little in important local affairs.

Thus, with the Hertzog-Cresswell party in power a new chapter opens in the history of South Africa. The most important question now is whether the new combination will be able to hold together.

HUSBAND SAID WHY NOT TRY IT

Wife Said She Would. Result Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Well and Strong

East Hardwick, Vt.—"Last winter I was not able to do any work at all. I had backache, headache, side ache, and was sick all the time for six months. When I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers, and my husband said to me, 'Why don't you try it?' So I said I would, and he went and got me a dozen bottles. It has done me more good than I can ever tell, and my friends say, 'What have you done to yourself? You look so well.' I tell them it is the Vegetable Compound that makes me well and strong. There is no use to suffer with backache and pains. I will tell every one what it has done for me."—Mrs. FRED. PRIMO, Route No. 2, East Hardwick, Vermont.

Housewives make a great mistake in allowing themselves to become so ill that it is well-nigh impossible for them to attend to their household duties.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, 98 out of every 100 report they were benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Chile's Labor University

At Santiago, Chile, a labor university has been founded at a cost of $100,000. The aims of the institution will be to educate working men and women in trades most suitable for their abilities. The sections for men and women will be separate. The municipal authorities, headed by the mayor are responsible for the new venture in education. A great deal of attention will be given to vocational guidance and specific trade training and, of course, technical courses will be featured.

Atmosphere

"What is this?"

"A talk on Carmen, sort of recital. Don't you get the atmosphere?"

"Somebody has been eating Spanish onions."

If you command wisely you'll be obeyed cheerfully.

If you can't stand classics any other way, take them homeopathically.

Get Back Your Health!

Are you dragging around day after day with a dull backache? Are you tired and lame mornings—subject to headaches, dizzy spells and sharp, stabbing pains. Then there's surely something wrong. Probably it's kidney weakness! Don't wait for more serious kidney trouble. Get back your health and keep it. For quick relief get plenty of sleep and exercise and use Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. They have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

An Iowa Case

O. L. Olson, Traer, Iowa, says: "My kidneys got out of fix and my back ached and pained. Mornings my back was so lame it was hard to stoop and there was a steady ache all the time and often sharp catches took me. My kidneys acted irregularly, too. Doan's Pills put my kidneys in good order and rid me of the backache."

Tragedy Wrecks War Hero's Life

Answered Country's Call and Still Waits for Girl He Left Behind.

Florence.—Rain or sunshine, from early morn until dusk, with a heap of colored chalks by his side, in an old, faded suit of clothes, old army cobbled shoes and a broad black mourning band on his left arm he sits on the pavement before the world-famous Uffizi gallery and creates on the cement blocks before him the masterpieces that hang in all their glory in the building above.

This city of glorious past in history, art and literature, once the home of Leonardo da Vinci and Michelangelo, of Machiavelli and Savanarola, "Supreme Florence," its citizens called it, this city is a fitting setting for the tragedy of this youth with the face of an old man.

Antonio Abruzzino, born in sunny Naples, once with a love song on his lips and a brush that streamed beauty and delight on canvas, now shattered by war and faithlessness, his mind a deep pool of brooding confusion, but with hands restlessly moving as if by mechanical propulsion to draw and copy the works of his student days, sits before the river portal of this old palace gallery close to Ponte Vecchio of Medici fame unseeing, unhearing, an inert mass except for ever moving fingers.

If the story of this man were not so tragic, one would, smiling, think of the old ballad, "The Face on the Bar-Room Floor." There is in reality much in common between the story of the ballad and Antonio. A shattered love as in the song sent him to the depths. But never has he either mentioned or pictured the face of the woman he loved. The Madonnas he draws are those of Raphael, Del Sorto, Guido Reni, Titiano. They are beautiful pieces of tender workmanship, which each night he very carefully washes off from the pavement so that no careless feet should tramp them.

Passersby, tourists, the curious, look him over, watch him work and sometimes a lire is thrown on the pavement before him. He pays no attention. Only recently an American, moved perhaps by the spirit of mischief, let a dollar drop on his work. The fingers of the man drew back startled and trembling. The figure grew tense, and the crowd that always surrounds him drew back in fear. With a snarl, yet without moving from his sitting posture he snatched the bill and hurled it from him. For a few moments he shook as if with the ague, and then collapsed and began to cry. That day he disappeared and was gone for a week. His chalks left behind him, his unfinished drawings were tenderly taken care of by the old flower woman at the bridgehead. Each morning she would put the package where he had left it. When he reappeared he was as before—silent, unspeaking, unhearing. He carefully washed the traces of the unfinished drawing off the pavement and began it anew.

Both Are Struck Down.

For a five-lire piece the motherly old flower woman told a bit of his story. She told it with a prologue. Her "bambino," Guillo, had been a comrade of Antonio in the war. Guillo had fallen. He and Antonio had been great friends. Antonio was an artist, but it made no difference to him if Guillo was a mule driver. They had been great friends. Once in a night raid they had a terrible fight. It was dark; one could not see. One just stuck and stabbed and clubbed. Antonio had been knocked to his knees. That instant there was a flare of light. An Austrian stood poised with bayonet, blinded by the sudden light. It was flashing on Guillo, who, recovering, struck down the enemy. After that they were close friends. In the great drive in 1918 when Italy smashed the Austrian front, both were struck down. Guillo never rose. Antonio lay a long time in many hospitals, and then disappeared. Last November he returned and has been drawing ever since. He knows no one. She has tried to talk to him, but there is only silence. It is so terrible. He was gifted. There was always a song on his lips, Guillo had said. Now—and with a shrug and the making of a cross with her hand, she, too, became silent.

From official sources the rest of the story was obtained. Antonio had as a youth come to Florence with his mother, a widow, and studied art. He was talented, an eager worker. In his second year in Florence his mother died. Apparently there were no other relatives. For a while he studied in Venice and even in Rome. Then he went to America, settling in New York, this was in 1910. For a while he worked for an American artist in Greenwich Village who turned out hand-painted copies of Old World masterpieces. Later he opened his own studio and became a well-known figure in the Bohemian quarter

Life was light and love was a smiling caprice to this talented Neapolitan. Until he met Blossom Mahoney. Blossom worked in a downtown store. She was red headed, Irish and a bundle of laughing blue eyes and lips. Antonio decided that life was neither light nor love a caprice. He loved with the wild ardour of his Neapolitan nature. Blossom was willing to be courted by Tony, but youth was too joyous to settle down and be married. So it went, with a fuss and a quarrel now and then, but with all joyous friendship.

Then came August, of 1914, and the war. The assault on Belgium awakened Antonio from his idyl. He became an ardent advocate for Italy's entrance in the conflict. Italians in New York will remember this youth as one of a group who insisted upon Italy's participation. In 1915 the Italian ambassador to America issued at the request of his government a call to all American-Italians to return to their fatherland. Italy was engaged with her centuries-old oppressor, Austria.

Among First to Respond.

Antonio was among the first to respond. He made but later withdrew a request for a brief delay while he finished a portrait of Blossom he was making. He intended the picture for exhibition in the spring Art academy salon. Blossom the night before he sailed kissed him and told him she would wait for him until he returned. He gave her a beautiful locket containing the miniatures of them both.

Antonio was wounded first in 1916. In 1917 he was badly gassed, and in 1918 terribly shattered in a mine explosion in an assault on an Austrian position. It was not until 1920 that he could leave the hospital.

After leaving the hospital he disappeared. The next that was heard of him was in July of 1921, when he was taken to a hospital after being found unconscious in the streets in New York. His case was reported to the Italian consul, who took steps to provide for his return to Italy. He was sent back in 1922, and again dropped out of sight until last year, when he took up his place before this gallery, where years before he had come as a gay youth to learn and to paint

What became of Blossom Mahoney is unknown. There were found in his pockets when he was picked up several old letters from her, badly worn, and one, poorly written and incoherent, by him, which was evidently intended to be mailed to her. Did she disappear, did she die, had she ceased to care?

In New York he perhaps would not be permitted to draw as he does on the pavement before Palazzo Uffizi. But then, sunny, idle Florence is not New York. Here he sits, while his fingers etch tender-smiling madonnas and lovely-faced bambinos. Here this once joyous, talented youth works blankly and mechanically, everything still and motionless, everything but restless fingers and memories—perhaps.

"Flying Torpedoes" by British War Experts

London.—"Flying torpedoes," steered by wireless, is the latest achievement of the research experts in the British war ministry. The new projectiles have bodies approximately similar in shape to those of the submarine torpedoes, but have fitted to them curved metal wings sufficient to sustain them in a gliding flight.

At the rear they have movable rudders and elevators like those of an ordinary airplane. The idea of the inventor is that a number of these bombs can be carried by heavy planes to a great height, outside the reach of anti-aircraft guns, and then released. By means of wireless flashes from the big plane the gliding torpedoes can be directed with some accuracy, and steered toward the objectives which are intended for destruction.

LEGION COMMANDER

"A 'ROUGH and ready' Irishman with a merry twinkle in his eye—

"So old-fashioned that he even wears suspenders—

"A man who talks straight out in a simple, homey manner that proves his bucolic upraising—

"That's the kind of a man the Legion now has in John R. Quinn, its national commander.

"Legionnaires who have the good fortune to get into close personal touch with this big, burly Californian who directs the affairs of the great organization of former soldiers in the entire world, are charmed by John R. Quinn's simplicity, his roughness and the innate honesty and doggedness of purpose which radiates from his person."—Douglas County (Nebraska) Legionnaire.

DR. ORLANDO PETTY CITED FOR BRAVERY

Unusual heroism by a Philadelphia physician who remained for hours under fire in his dressing station during the battle of Belleau Wood and then carried a wounded officer on whom he had been operating to safety when the station was destroyed, has been recognized with an award of the Congressional Medal of Honor by the government.

The man who is thus signally honored, says the Philadelphia Ledger, is Capt. Orlando H. Petty, attached during the war to the Naval Medical corps.

Doctor Petty enlisted in the naval reserves, four days before the United States entered the war. He left with the Fifth regiment marines. With the "Devil Dogs," he saw fierce fighting from June, 1918, until late in the summer. On June 11 he performed the deed which won for him the medal.

Under a heavy shell fire, he worked in his dressing station until it literally fell in flames over his head, when he escaped to a place of safety with the wounded officer on his back.

He was severely gassed, and was in the hospital many days, but he insisted, long before having entirely recovered, upon returning to duty. He was cited for bravery because of the action.

Doctor Petty was the only member of the Medical Reserve corps during the war to receive a Congressional Medal of Honor. He also was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross of the United States and the Croix de Guerre with palm, of France.

Recently he was appointed physician in charge of the department of metabolism of the Philadelphia General hospital and elected to the professorship of diseases of metabolism in the graduate school of medicine of the University of Pennsylvania.

Doctor Petty is a graduate of Franklin college and the Jefferson Medical college. For several years he was pathologist and director of laboratories at the Germantown hospital. He is a member of the Pennsylvania society, Sons of the Revolution, of the Aesculapian and Manufacturers' clubs, and is a fellow of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, and of the American College of Physicians.

Legion Boys Condemn School Board's Action

Action taken by the Macon (Ga.) city board of education in barring "Young" Stribling, a professional prize fighter, from completing high school work has been condemned by American Legion members in that city.

Stribling attended Lanier high school, but was dropped by the board because of his professional athletics. He has appeared under the auspices of a number of Legion posts in benefit boxing shows.

Disabled Veterans' Clinic

A disabled veterans' clinic for Cedar Rapids, Ia., has been sought by members of the American Legion in that city, according to post officals. Under the recommendations of the Legion, the clinic would be in the main for examination of tuberculous patients, in order to make available the services of a competent staff of sanitarium physicians located in the city.

To Help Sell Land

The American Legion in Umatilla county, Oregon, has offered to join with commercial organizations in the sale of lands to colonize the Teel irrigation district, if the project is approved by the state. A proposal has been made before the state irrigation and securities commissions to sell the land in farm units of 80 acres. The total tract is 16,500 acres.

To Help New Legion Home

A dollar from each member of the Woman's Relief corps in Blackwell, Okla., will be given annually to the American Legion. The local post is erecting a new home and the women's organization decided to make this donation in order to help the fund. One hundred and fifty members of the corps contributed to the fund.

Essay Contest

"The American Legion as a Community Asset" is the subject of an essay contest authorized in North Adams, Mass., by the Frank R. Stiles post of the American Legion. Special cash prizes have been announced for the best essay submitted by school children of high and grammar schools.

When Century Begins

The year 1900 was the last year of the Nineteenth century. Theoretically the Christian era began with the birth of Christ. Since a century is 100 years the first century of our era must have ended with the year 100 A. D. Therefore the second century began with the first day in 101. The first century consisted of the years 1 to 100 inclusive. We are now living in the 24th year of the Twentieth century which began January 1, 1901.

Famous Mount

Mount Parnassus is in ancient Phocis, 65 miles northwest of Athens. It is celebrated as one of the principal seats of Apollo and the Muses, and as an inspiring source of poetry and song. The Delphic oracle and the Castalian spring were on its southern slope. The expression "to climb Parnassus," meaning to write poetry, is an expression once in vogue.—Kansas City Star.

SWAMP-ROOT FOR KIDNEY AILMENTS

There is only one medicine that really stands out pre-eminent as a medicine for curable ailments of the kidneys, liver and bladder.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root stands the highest for the reason that it has proven to be just the remedy needed in thousands upon thousands of distressing cases. Swamp-Root makes friends quickly because its mild and immediate effect is soon realized in most cases. It is a gentle, healing vegetable compound.

Start treatment at once. Sold at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Hurt by Bobbed Hair

The future commercial prosperity of Chefoo, China, a city of 100,000 population, depends largely on whether American women will continue to bob their hair. Chefoo's chief industry is making hair nets and they sell $5,000,000 worth to this country each year, in addition to exporting $3,060,000 worth to France and other countries. In China the price for the nets runs from $1 to $2 a gross and for making them factory workers are paid 7 cents a day.

$22,000,000 IN ANNUAL INTEREST CHARGES HAS BEEN SAVED

United States Treasury Issues New Securities to Take Place of High-Rate Paper.

Washington.—The June fiscal operations of the treasury, while ranking among the smallest of postwar financial issues, will have a wider permanent effect in the way of cuts in fixed expenditures of the government than most of the quarterly operations in the last five years.

Treasury experts have calculated that a saving of approximately $22,000,000 in annual interest charges will result from the change in the public debt situation accomplished in June.

About $150,000,000 in new securities have gone on the market from the treasury this month, but proceeds from these with balances on hand and payments in the second tax installment will retire something like $445,000,000 in treasury notes and tax certificates which matured June 15.

The tax certificates bore 4 per cent and the treasury notes, which were issued in 1921, carried 5¾ per cent interest. The new certificates pay only 2¾ per cent interest, the lowest rate of any government security since the issue of Panama canal bonds.

At the same time the British government made a payment of $69,000,000, which, under the law, must be used to retire the American wartime debt. That payment therefore will cut off $69,000,000 of Liberty bonds bearing an average of almost 4 per cent interest.

While the cut in the total debt brought about by this one operation appears as a drop in the bucket when considered alongside the national debt of more than $21,000,000,000, treasury officials point with satisfaction to the amount of interest that would have to be paid, and that means taxes to be raised, provided there was no reduction in the debt.

The treasury has issued only $150,000,000 in new securities, while it has retired and destroyed a total of $521,000,000 in outstanding debt.

SUCH A QUESTION

Mrs. Mulcahy— An' why did yez keep Mickey after school?

Heacher— I asked him who George Washington was and he only stood and looked at me.

Mrs. Mulcahy— It's dumfounded the poor b'y was at yer ignoranse, likely.

SEPARATING THE GOATS

The old soldiers marched to the church and halted in the square outside. One wing of the edifice was undergoing repairs, so there was room for only half of the regiment.

"Sergeant," ordered thec aptain, "tell the men who don't want to go church to fall out."

A large number quickly availed themselves of the priveledge.

"Now sergeant," said the captain, "dismiss all men who did not fall out and march the others in—they need it most."

GIVING HIMSELF UP

Irate Father— Look here, young divil, I'll teach you to come home with a chorus girl at four o'clock in the morning.

Son— Oh, so you know how it's done, do you. Well, I don't mind taking a few pointers.

Drugggist— Well did it work?

Caller— Yes. But now I want you to give me something to get rid of the plaster.

APPRECIATED

'So you think you can dress a show window so that every woman comes along will stop and look at it do you.?" asked the manager of the dressmaking department of an applicant for work.

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Well, then, what is the first thing you would do?"

"I'd put a big mirror in the window and—"

"That's enough, young man; we don't want you as an employee. We'll take you as a partner."

FROM TIP TO TIP

"Yes, sir, when this eagle was measured it was 15 feet from tip to top."

"Now I understand the popularity of the word eagle for hotels."

CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS

Wiseboy: "Blivens, you are a time waster,—a man who stands around talking, while others drive. ahead and do things!"

Blivens: "Indeed, I am not!"

Wise: "Yes, yes you are. F'r example— while you've been standing here talking to me Henry Ford has made $3,500,000.

TRUE! TOO TRUE!

Weary— "I've rid in me own carriage in my day and I'm gonna to ride in my own carriage again."

Willie—"Don't kid yourself Steve—your poor old mother can't push you no more."

TALKING ABOUT US

Dorothy— "I had a very nice nut Sundae."

Dimples— "So did I — also another Thursday— but an awful one is calling this evening."

EVEN STEVVEN

A son of Erin, Tim by name, boarded a street car. All seats were occupied except one, in which a quite grouchy-appearing man had seated a pet monkey next to him. Finally Tim walked up and pointing at the monkey, said:

"Beg pardon, sor, but has this gent paid his fare?"

Without a word theg rouch picked up them onkey, sat him on his knee and Tim took thes eat. After a few blocks Tim asked:

Beg pardon, sor, but what nationality is your friend?"

"Half Irish and half ape!' 'snapped the grouch.

Tim smiled genially. 'Begorra, and he's related to both of us, ain't he?"

READY TO GO OVER THE TOP

Bang, went the rifles at the maneuvers. "O-oo! screamed the pretty gril— a nice surprised little scream, as she stepped backward in to the arm of a young man.

"Oh!" she said blushing. "I was frightened by the rifles. I beg your pardon."

"Not at all, said the young man "let's go over and watch the artillery."

THE GOOD SPORT

Hospital Nurse— You wish to see the young man injured in the motor accident. You are the lady he was with.

Gwendoline— Yes. I thought it would only be fair to give him the kiss he was trying for.

HARD BOILED

The waitress, plainly out of sorts sailed haughtily up to the table at which sat the brouchy customer.

"Whatcha want?" she demanded.

"Couplea eggs," growled the customer.

" How ye want 'em?"

"Just like you are."

MAKE 'EM STRONG

A woman went into a cigar store to buy some cigars for her husband, who was laid up.

"Do you want them mild or strong, madam?" the cierk asked.

"Give me the strongest you have.' she said. "The last ones he had broke in his pocket."

Just because some girl has her face painted like a Ben Davis is no sign she is a pippin.

HOT PACK CANNING NOW CONSIDERED BEST METHOD

Hot- pack canning is one of the recommendations made by the Bureau of Home Economics, United State Department of Agriculture, in its most recent publication on home canning. The reason for this recommendation is that studies in the department have shown that it takes much longer than was formerly supposed in the case of certain vegetables for the material at the center of the can to reach the temperature of the canner. A short precooking of the fruits and vegetables to be canned shrinks them and makes it possible to fill the jars with the material boiling hot. This hot packing is especially important with thick pasty mixtures, such as corn and sweet potatoes.

Tomatoes and fruits are canned more easily on account of the acid in them do not shrink so much during canning. It is possible to pack them directly into the can, but in this case they should be covered with the juice or sirup boiling hot. Even these may be heated to boiling and filled into the can, in which case a much shorter processing peris possible.

The department recommends that the nonacid vegetables, such as aspargus, string beans, Lima beans, corn, greens, okra, peas and sweet potatoes, becanned only in the pressure canner. Fruits and tomatoes may be processed in the water-bath canner.

Time-tables for processing fruits and vegtables based on the most reliable facts the department has been able to gather at present may be obtained on application to the United States Department of Agriculture.

The object of the radicals is to make big business feel small.

GOOD INTENSIONS

Some people mean well, but never do well. Their lives are paved with good intensions, never carried out, They are always intending to do something that never gets done.

Instead of taking a just pride in accomplishment, they are continual humilliated by the inadequacy of their excuses.

They do not even drift with the tide of humanity, but unresistingly are switched into the eddies of life.

To them there is a beginning and an end, but nothing in between.

They have neither true friends nor bitter enemies, because they do nothing to inspire either friendship nor enmity.

They are nameless because no one takes the trouble to name them.

Buck up— and start something.

Is Your Business still of the Dark Ages?

MOST of us probably think of the Dark Ages as a dead issue—something that happened a long time ago— something we had to study as boys—something wiped out today by the tremendous progress of business.

But think about those days for a minute. They were days of lost communication—days of doubt and mistrust—days when no man knew his neighbor—days when a man controlled only what he counld hold by constant fighting—days when everyone was the enemy of everyone else, because no one understood what others were doing.

Printing was on of the most powerful influences in break ing the dark ages. The discovery of paper, and developement of the art of printing from movable type spread knowledge and understanding through a world benighted.

When men have written and reproducted books lobariously by hand—where the only news of the outside world and the only stories ever heard were carried by traveling minstrels—printing now spreads news to millions.

What, you ask, has all this to do with you business?

Simply this:

Any business today which does not set down its ideas and ideas in printing—any busness which depends upon salesmen to tell its policy and present its goods in person, like traveling minstrels—is doing busness by "dark age" methods.

You cannot be known beyond your immediate circle; you cannot cantrol any more business than you can continually fight for; you canot be understood except by a relatively few—unless you use printing, or waste years doing what printing can do in days or weeks.

Crystallize your thoughts in the printed page. Speak, through printing to all you should reach. Look upon irnting fr what it is—the greatest instrument of communicatin, understanding, and progress ever devised by man. This is what printing is. That is what you should use t for.

Call on us and let us show you the many ways to use printing.

A baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Walter ("Happy") Johnston at Spencer about a week ago. Mr. Johnston was formerly employed at the Klemme Meat Market and Mrs. Johnston will be remembered as a former Klemme school teacher, Miss Sara Smith. Congratulations!

John Velau wishes to thank his neghbors and friends for hteir timely and helpful assistance when his home was burned down. With their aid they were able to save much of their belongings that otherwise would have been distroyed. Mr. Velau thinks the fire originated in a defective chimney as the fire was first seen near the roof.

For the time being the gravel is completed on the road north of this city. The gravel crew has moved to another location in another county and a crew from Cherokee is at work on the Britt Kanawha road. When that road is finished the crew will move back to the Klemme-Garner road and complete t. The gravel for the balance of this road will be hauled from the county pit northwest of Garner. The gravel for the Britt road is from the county pit at Hutchins.

John Bock's house was broken into last week Wednesday night when they were in town. Entrance was gained by removing a screen window. Four radio tubes and a shotgun were taken by the thieves. A short time before that chicken thieves robbed Pete Merkel's roost of nearly a hundred fine chickens. A charge of buck-shot in the right spot is the best remedy for such low down thieves, and if caught no mercy should be given them.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lau, of this city, driving their Chevrolet car through Garner Sunday were struck by a Ford sedan driven by Miss Maude Blackstone. The accident happened at one of those narrow intersection west of Main street. Mr. Lau had stopped his car at the intrsecton to avoid running down a lady who evidently did not see or hear his car approach. Before he could move on the Ford car struck him. The Lau car was badly damaged and Mrs. Lau received a bad cut on the head when she was thrown against the top bow. The Ford was not very badly damaged.

Average haul from Klemme, Iowa about 3 1-2 miles.

All tile must pass the specifications for standard drain tile of the American Society for Testing Materials.

BIDS WILL BE RECEIVED ON CLAY TILE ONLY.

Clay tile to be No. 1 Vitrified in all sizes above 10". 10" and below to be No. 1 Hard Burned.

The specifications state where the line of tile being constructed is within 100 feet of trees, all joints are to be surrounded with concrete of a mimimum thickness of 3 inches. In quicksand all joints are to be wrapped in double thickness tar-paper.

Work to be commenced within in thirty days from date of letting contract and to be completed on or before June 1, 1925.

All tile to be delivered at the ditch side subject to inspection and to be delivered as ordered by the Construction Engineer.

Wherever the tile improvement is laid in existing ditches average depth will be computed from the natural surface of the ground and the Contractor will be required to back fill all trenches to the height of the natural surface of the ground so that the existing ditch will be completely filled.

All ditches and drains to be constructed in all respects in accordance with the plat, profiles and specifications on file in the Auditor's office, at Garner, Iowa, subject only to such changes and alterations as may be made as provided by law.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, up to 1:30 P. M., on the day of the letting.

The price must be stated in the bid in figures, and permission will not be granted for the withdrawal or amendment of any bid after time for closing.

All bids must be made at a fixed price per station of 100 feet for each size tile and also a fixed price for each section complete in all respects including corrugated pipe, intakes and filling of ditches, and must also include schedule of overdepth adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, and on file in the Auditors office, for possible overdepth or underdepth beyond the average specified.

Bids will be received for material alone, for labor alone, or for complete labor and material.

The Board will at their descretion let the work as a whole or in sections to the lowest responsible bidder reserving the right to reject any or all bids, and also to adjourn the time of awarding the contract.

Each bid must be accompanied by a cash deposit or a certified check in a sum equal to ten per cent of the total amount of bid as a guarantee of good faith of the bidder

ALL BIDS NOT MADE IN CONFORMANCE TO THE ABOVE REQUIREMNETS WILL BE REJECTED.

The party to whom any contract is being awarded will be required to attend at the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, within ten days after such award, and execute a contract thereby agreeing to all provisions, terms and conditions thereof and shall also file with the County Auditor a bond subject to his approval for a sum equal to twenty-five per cent of the amount of bid, and in case the party to whom any work is awarded fails to enter into this contract and furnish bond within ten days as herein required, the deposit of such party shall thereupon become forfeited to Hancock County Drainage District No. 91, together will all rights under said award.

The deposit of the unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them within twenty-four hours after demand and the deposit of the successful bidders will be returned to them upon their executing the contract and filing with the County Auditor the bond as herein required.

By order of the Board of Supervisors.

Dated at Garner, Iowa, this 3 day of July, 1924.

Have you given any thought to that proposed amendment to the United States Constitution which yould provide that in time of war not only fighting men, but laboring men and wealth, industry and property should be conscripted? Don't you think that would tend to make wars not only brief and conclusive, but also extremely rare? Do you think that property should be more carefully safeguarded than people? Do you think that fortunes should be made and luxury acquired while the youth of the country is facing death in the trenches?

CITY IN BRAZIL HELD BY REBELS

Governor and Other State Officials Flee Sao Paulo, Consul Reports

Washington.—The governor of Sao Paulo and other state officials have withdrawn from the capitol, which is entirely in the control of the revolutionists, a dispatch to the State department from Consul Heeberie in Sao Paulo declared.

The dispatch was described as the first official information from the center of the revolt to reach this government. It gave no further details, except that protection of life and property had been promised.

An official communique received by the Brazilian embassy dated at Rio Janeiro said that the government artillery after bombarding the Luz barracks, stronghold of the rebels, "with excellent results," ceased firing. It was the wish of the commanding officers of the federal forces, the dispatch stated, to spare the city as far as possible. Sao Paulo, it continued, had been much damaged by the rebels.

Buenos Aires.—A new government is being formed by the Brazilian forces, who are in complete control of Sao Paulo and the surrounding countryside, according to advices received here from a source believed to be thoroughly reliable. These dispatches quote an English resident of Santos, Brazil, who has just returned to that city after visiting Sao Paulo to investigate the condition of relatives living there.

He states that the city is calm under the rebel regime, and that there is no fighting there at the present time.

McAdoo Pledges Support to the Davis Ticket

New York.—William Gibbs McAdoo who has been noncommittal as to the course he would pursue during the Presidential campaign, was induced to break his silence. Mr. and Mrs. McAdoo were in a theater audience when Will Rogers, the comedian, pointed Mr. McAdoo out. There was an outburst of applause and the Californian was finally brought to his feet to make the following statement: "I am leaving for Europe with my family for a little diversion but now that the convention is over, we must all get together and make sure that we elect .. Democrat."

Vampire Admits Sucking Blood of Fourteen Youths

Hanover, Germany.—Mass meetings are being held all over the city of Hanover to denounce the policy of the authorities following the confession by Herr Haarmann of the murders of 14 young men. Haarmann is accused of cutting his victims' throats and drinking their blood. Mob excitement prevails. Five policemen saved Haarmann from a mob bent on lynching him when he was taken to his home for an examination.

FRENCH AND BRITISH REACH AGREEMENT

MacDonald and Herriot Want American on Board

Paris—The premiers of France and Great Britain decided upon American arbitration as a way out of their differences respecting the application of the Dawes plan. They drew up a joint note to the other allies, outlining their ideas which will be laid before the London conference July 16.

Prime Minister MacDonald conceded to Premier Herriot that the reparations commission should not be robbed of its right to say when Germany is in default on that plan and M. Herriot, in exchange agreed to give up France's preponderance of votes in the commission.

The French statesman consented that an American be called in to sit with the commission and to vote on the question of whether Germany at any time is failing to carry out her obligations under the plan.

The aims and objects of the conference to be held in London, are set forth in a text drawn up which Prime Minister MacDonald and M. Herriot agreed should be substituted for the British text which caused a storm of protests in France. The new text first expresses the satisfaction of the allies that the United States has decided to have a representative present.

Couzens Defies Bosses; Refuses to Back Coolidge

Detroit, Mich.—Senator James Couzens of Michigan, announcing his candidacy for nomination at the September primaries to succeed himself, in a formal statement refused to pledge his full support to President Coolidge or either the state or national Republican platform. He challenged the right of the party "bosses" to dictate his course and made his bid for the vote of Michigan electors on his past record, for which, he said, he had no apologies to make.

Ford Acquires 307 Acre Site for Plant in England

London.—H. S. Jenkins, managing director of the Ford Motor company in Great Britain announced that the company has acquired a site of 307 acres at Dagenham on Thames, where it is proposed to produce all British Ford cars, beginning with 500 daily. The works will employ 10,000 men at a minimum of 3 shillings (66 cents) an hour.

Four Wyoming Banks Fail to Open Doors

SEEKS WAY TO AID DAWES PLAN

May Overcome Ban on U. S. Membership on Commission.

Washington.—Anxious to co-operate with the British and French governments in their desire to put into immediate operation the Dawes reparations plan, administration officials are seeking some method by which further American participation could be accomplished.

The presence of the apparent ban against American membership on the reparations commission, without first being approved by congress, as contained in the resolution of ratification of the German-American treaty, seemed to be an insuperable obstacle to meeting completely the desires of the British and French premiers. This resolution of ratification leaves no doubt that the legislative branch rather than the executive has supreme control in this regard.

The resolution provides "that the United States shall not be represented or participate in any body, agency or commission, nor shall any person represent the United States as a member of any body or commission in which the United States is authorized to participate by this (German-American) treaty, unless and until an act of congress of the United States shall provide for such representation or participation."

While State department officials withheld all comment on the cabled dispatches telling of the accord reached by Premiers MacDonald and Herriot in the conference at Paris, due partly to the absence from Washington of Secretary Hughes and the further fact that Ambassador Herrick has not officially advised the department of the Paris conference, it is known that both President Coolidge and Secretary Hughes are sincerely desirous of wholeheartedly entering into any arrangement that will expedite the application of the Dawes report. Confronted with the prohibitory clause of the German-American treaty, apparently the United States can do nothing in an official way.

Harry K. Thaw's Income Nearly $60,000 Yearly

Philadelphia, Pa.—Harry K. Thaw receives a yearly income of nearly $60,000 from two trust estates. The alienists who testified in his behalf at his recent trial when he was adjudged sane will receive fees of from $1,500 to $2,000 each for their services. Dr. Walter Riddle of Pittsburgh and Howard Irish of this city, who had administered his financial affairs while he was in the hospital, presented in Common Pleas court an accounting which was satisfactory to Thaw and they asked to be discharged from further duties in the estate.

Cheyenne Banks Closed; Deposits of $6,200,000

Cheyenne, Wyo.—The First National bank and the Citizens' National bank, both of Cheyenne, with deposits of approximately $6,200,000, closed. The First National bank failed to open for business Wednesday morning and the Citizens' National closed its doors shortly after noon. The First National bank had deposits of approximately $4,750,000 and the Citizens' National had $1,450,000. The liabilities and resources of the former in the last statement issued at the close of business June 30 were given as $6,986,209.

Eight Pirate Vessels Seize $500,000 in Rum

Halifax, N. S.—French consular authorities here are investigating reports of a raid on the French steamship Mulhouse off the New Jersey coast two weeks ago by rum pirates who took 33,200 cases of liquor valued at $500,000. When the Mulhouse arrived here Captain Ferrene reported that the vessel was boarded on June 24 by 30 raiders, who imprisoned the crew for ten days while they transferred the liquor to eight schooners.

Pirates Board Ship; Seize Booze and Kill Captain

New York.—Following a Halifax report that the French steamship Mulhouse was boarded off the New Jersey coast two weeks ago by rum pirates who took a cargo of liquor valued at $500,000, prohibition officials here received word that a second ship also was boarded by pirates who killed the captain and threw his body overboard. The identity of the steamship was not revealed.

PROGRESSIVES O. K. LAFOLLETTE

Wisconsin Senator Is Chosen on His Own Platform.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Senator Robert M. LaFollette was indorsed for President as an Independent Progressive, upon his own platform, by the national convention of the Conference for Progressive Political Action which adjourned sine die Saturday. The selection of a vice presidential candidate for his running mate was referred to the national committee of the conference, in co-operation with the LaFollette for President committee, headed by R. T. Rawleigh of Freeport, Ill. LaFollette's wishes will be followed in the selection.

Not being able to adopt a platform, the resolutions committee contented itself with reporting a "program of public service," which is practically a rewrite of the LaFollette platform with a few changes, such as resolutions sympathizing with Ireland's fight for independence, authorizing the sending of food by our government to starving Germany and protesting against the "plan of President Coolidge for holding a mobilization day on September 12."

The latter resolution was added on motion of Delegate Wax Swiren, member of the Liberal club at the University of Chicago, a follower of the "youth movement," and a friend of Nathan Leopold, who is awaiting trial for the Franks murder.

The "youth" delegates throughout the two days' session displayed a large red flag from the balcony, on which was inscribed "No more war."

No G. O. P. convention or Democrat gathering of other days could hope for as smoothly running a steam roller as was operated at this conference by the railroad shop crafts through the gavel of Chairman William H. Johnston, international president of the machinists' union and former bass drummer for the Salvation Army.

It has been seen by the credentials committee that none of the Communists at the St. Paul convention gained seats in this gathering, lest the red tinge might hurt the LaFollette candidacy, and Johnston's gavel took care of any other incipient outbreaks from Socialists, New York garment workers, or other radicals from the floor.

New Party After Election.

The report of the organization and campaign committee, containing the indorsement which the convention approved, also provides for the formation of a permanent new political party after the November election.

The national committee is called upon to organize July 18 at 10 o'clock, and on November 20, to issue a call for a special national convention in January to form a permanent independent political party for national and local elections.

With LaFollette indorsed preliminary plans were laid for a whirlwind campaign to begin at once and continue up to election day.

Representative John M. Nelson of Wisconsin, chairman of the progressive bloc in the house, who will be Senator LaFollette's campaign manager, had a long conference after the convention adjourned with leaders of the convention and two delegates from each state. Ideas were exchanged on the form of campaign organization to be set up and the character of the fight to be waged.

Headquarters in Chicago.

Nelson will open headquarters in Chicago immediately, working in co-operation with the national committee of the conference.

The indorsement of LaFollette was presented to the conference by E. J. Manion, president of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, as chairman of the organization and campaign committee.

Morris Hillquit of New York, representing the Socialist party, seconded the motion to adopt the committee's report, abandoning the fight of the Socialists for the formation of a new party at this time.

A. Lefkovitz of New York, representing the Farmer-Labor party of the United States, added the approval of his party to the indorsement.

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch of New York seconded the indorsement on behalf of the progressive women. Mrs. Blatch is a member of the national committee of the Conference for Progressive Political Action and a member of the executive board of the Woman's Committee for Political Action. She represented the latter organization as a delegate in the convention.

Mrs. Blatch lauded LaFollette as the man who stood ready to help women in their fight for suffrage when the two old parties stood against them.

When Mrs. Blatch had concluded she was accorded an ovation. Several delegates cried, "Mrs. Blatch for vice president."

Offers Financing Plan.

Harry Daugherty, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, reporting as chairman of the finance committee, recommended that funds to finance the campaign be raised through appeals to the general public through the press, to members of the organizations represented in the convention through their own groups, and by collections at all meetings, "as a matter of principle." The report was adopted unanimously.

DEMOCRATS NAME DAVIS AND BRYAN

Convention Selects West Virgina Statesman for Head of the Ticket.

LONGEST IN HISTORY

Governor of Nebraska Picked for Second Place—103 Ballots Are Taken Before Choice Is Made.

For President:
JOHN W. DAVIS OF WEST VIRGINIA

For Vice President:
CHARLES W. BRYAN OF NEBRASKA

The above ticket was selected by e Democratic National convention ednesday afternoon, July 9, the 14th y of the convention, and on the 16th ssion and the 9th day of continuus voting. On the 103rd roll call the ift turned to John W. Davis of West rginia. When the roll call was cometed it was apparent that he had re than 600 votes. Illinois started landslide by changing its vote to vis, other states quickly followed. rmer Senator Thomas Taggart of diana moved to suspend the rules d make the nomination by acclamaion. The motion was carried with whoop and all the pent-up feelings t had kept the delegates on edge so many days of balloting were loose in a wild demonstration in midst of which the convention k a recess until evening to comre the ticket.

Well, it didn't look as if they would it, but they did, at last. The mocratic party now has a ticket. e deadlock finally was broken. e dreary round of balloting has sed and the almighty voice from abama has returned home to repair worn vocal chords.

The bitter struggle between the Mcoo and Smith forces made this a ord-breaking convention. For proged balloting and noisy demonation, it is in a class by itself.

Throughout the long monotonous nd of roll calls frequent attempts re made by earnest Democrats to d some solution of the difficulty ing the convention, any solution t would leave the party in harnious unity. Ralston, Cox, and one two others who had been receivvotes withdrew their names in the e that such action would start the e toward some candidate upon om the delegates could unite. But only effect was to bring out new ndidates.

Tuesday evening, after the 93rd balFranklin D. Roosevelt, Smith nager, announced that he was auorized by Governor Smith to withw the governor's name if McAdoo uld do likewise. But until Mr. Mcoo would withdraw, said Mr. Roosee, the supporters of Smith would tinue to vote for the governor.

DEADLOCK IS JARRED

ust before the 100th ballot the adlock was jarred by the reading a letter from McAdoo releasing his egates. The Smith followers did take this as a bona fide withwal, so they continued to vote for governor. The 100th ballot showed following vote for the principal ndidates: Smith, 351½; McAdoo, Davis, 203½; Meredith, 75½; sh, 52½; Robinson, 46; Under, 41½.

he story of the more than 100 roll s is about as interesting as last s stock market reports, and about thrilling. While the balance of er was held by the leading canates, there was no possibility of a mination, and there seemed little lihood that either Smith or Mcwould ever weaken. The Smith wing held its strength consistentthroughout the many ballots, but McAdoo strength fluctuated from to time. McAdoo reached the of his power on the 69th ballot he rolled up a total of 530 votes. he began to hit the toboggan, ping to 310 on the 92nd ballot. owing the Smith announcement, e referred to, he began to pick gain and reached 421 on the 96th call. Shortly afterwards came announcement freeing his dele-.

ith climbed slowly in the first days' balloting, passing the 300 then more slowly until he ed his top vote on the 83rd ball-8. He stuck closely to this figuntil after the withdrawal of doo.

ON THE LONG ROAD

e balloting commenced on Monday, June 30, and continued with day and night sessions until the agreement finally was reached. The monotony of the roll calls was occasionally relieved by the excitement aroused by the meaningless switching of a couple of votes or the challenging of the vote of a state.

William Jennings Bryan added a dramatic touch on Wednesday when, arising to a question of personal privilege, he asked permission to explain his vote. It was a heroic attempt on the part of the Commoner to break the deadlock. He suggested the names of eight Democrats from among whom the convention might choose a leader. Last and most emphasized in the list was the name of William G. McAdoo, whom Mr. Bryan specially lauded, but the mention of the Californian's name threw the convention into a turmoil. Bryan was hissed and booed and had great difficulty in finishing his speech. If, as was intimated, it was an attempt to stampede the convention, it failed.

TWO BIG QUESTIONS

Not since 1896 when the big fight on the free coinage of silver was waged, has there been such a fight over the platform in any political convention. The two big questions at issue were the stand to be taken on the Ku Klux Klan and the League of Nations. All week the committee labored, day and night, in an effort to come to an agreement that would prevent the bringing up of the disputed questions on the floor of the convention. The earnestness of the members of the committee in their desire for harmony was dramatically illustrated just before the committee took a recess at six o'clock Saturday morning after an all-night session, when William Jennings Bryan offered up a fervent prayer for Divine guidance.

The Klan plank was bitterly fought on the floor. As it was finally adopted, mention of the Klan by name is omitted and the plank makes a plea for religious freedom and tolerance. This was the plank offered by the majority of the committee and it won out by a bare margin of four votes.

The other disputed plank was that referring to the League of Nations. Former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker offered a minority report flatly favoring a declaration for the Wilson league. The plank submitted by the majority declared for a referendum on the league and was adopted by a 2-to-1 vote over the Baker plank.

MUCH FIREWORKS

This convention is in striking contrast to the Cleveland affair. Here's all the old-time stuff. From the drop of Chairman Hull's gavel calling the delegates to order there was something doing every minute. Excitement and enthusiasm ran high, even at times drifting into sporadic physical combat. The first touch of the fighting spirit was injected when the Klan issue was dragged in by Forney Johnston of Alabama in placing Senator Underwood's name before the convention as a candidate for the Presidential nomination.

It was Temporary Chairman Pat Harrison who first let loose the flood gates that swept the convention off its feet. Senator Harrison is a master of oratory. He gave them the old-fashioned stuff and they liked it. With biting sarcasm and keen invective he scored the Republican party for its alleged deeds of omission and commission. His short snappy sentences had a sting in every one of them, and the delegates responded wildly to his every mood. Mention of the names of Jackson, Cleveland and Wilson set the convention wild, particularly the latter, which started a demonstration that lasted several minutes.

Senator Walsh, the permanent chairman, also did his share in inspiring the enthusiasm of the crowd. His activities as an investigator of the oil scandal gave promise that he would have something to say along that line, and he didn't disappoint. His denunciation of those hit by the senatorial investigation met with approving cheers. His enunciation of the basic principles upon which the party should make its campaign also were wildly acclaimed.

START NOMINATING SPEECHES

While the platform was being fought over by the committee it was decided to devote the time to getting rid of some of the nominating oratory. Forney Johnston of Alabama made the speech nominating Senator Oscar Underwood of Alabama. He read a resolution he had presented to the committee on resolutions condemning the Ku Klux Klan. It started something. A wild uproar ensued, several fights were started, but quickly stopped.

With nothing else to take up the immediate attention the delegates devoted themselves whole heartedly to the "man who" stuff. Former Senator Phelan of California presented the name of William G. McAdoo. The demonstration which followed lasted for nearly an hour. Counter demonstrations were started by the followers of Governor Smith. When Chairman Walsh thought it had gone far enough he restored order long enough to entertain a motion to adjourn and pronounce it carried.

When the convention met Thursday morning the speech making was resumed with frequent repetitions of the scenes of the day before. Franklin D. Roosevelt, former assistant secretary of the navy, was brought to the platform in an invalid chair to make the speech nominating Gov. Al Smith of New York. Mr. Roosevelt is paralyzed in the limbs as a result of an attack of infantile paralysis. He made a remarkable speech and when he concluded by pronouncing the name of the New York governor a demonstration broke loose that lasted for considerably over an hour.

PANDEMONIUM CONTINUES

For seven hours the pandemonium continued as the names of Senator Ralston of Indiana, Senator Ferris of Michigan, Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, Former Senator Saulsbury of Delaware, David F. Houston of New York, Gov. Jonathan Davis of Kansas, and Governor Ritchie of Maryland, were added to the list of candidates.

CHARLES W. BRYAN

The convention adjourned to Friday morning on a vote which was said to be a test of the relative strength of the Smith and McAdoo forces. McAdoo lost out by a large majority.

And Friday was no different from the days that had gone before. More oratory and demonstrations, but they finally got to the end of the roll call, and all the favorite sons were presented for the consideration of the delegates. That woman has become an active factor in political life was apparent in this convention. They participated in the proceedings on the floor of the convention and in committee work. Many of them appeared on the platform to make nominating and seconding speeches.

The balloting was started when the convention reconvened on Monday morning. The first ballot resulted as follows:

Underwood, 42½; Robinson, 21; McAdoo, 431½ Sweet, 12; Brown, 17; Smith, 240½; Saulsbury, 7; Silzer, 38; John W. Davis, 31; Ritchie, 22½; Harrison, 43½; Cox, 59; Bryan, 18; Ralston, 30; Jonathan Davis, 20; Ferris, 30; Glass, 25; Thompson, 1; Kendrick, 6.

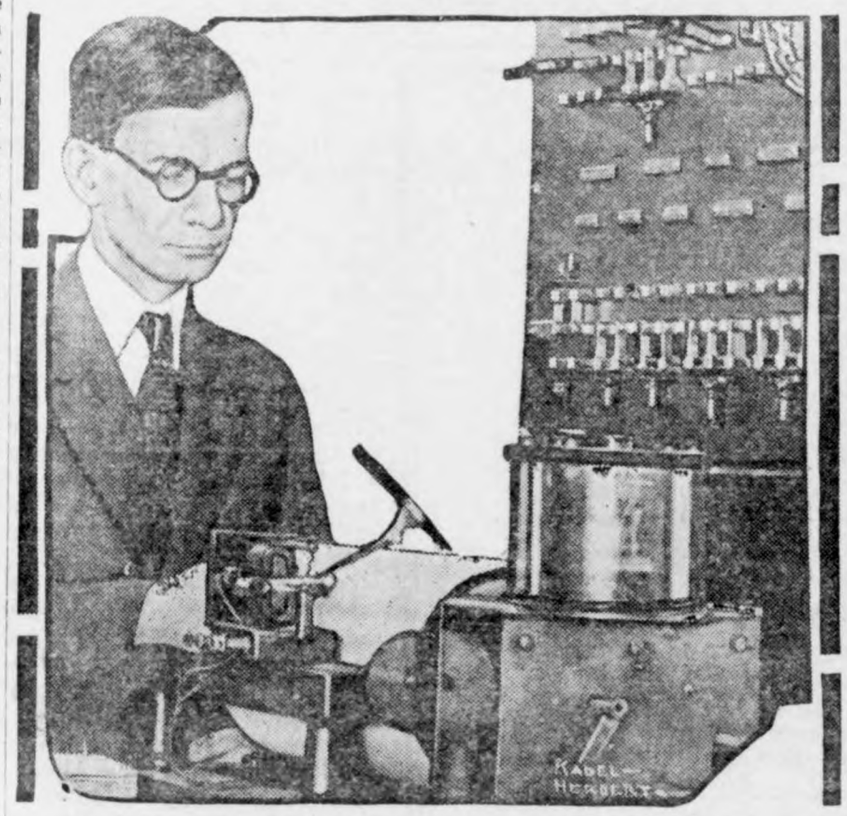
Transmits Correct Time



Paul Sollenberger, one of the astronomers at the United States Naval observatory at Washington, D. C., is the man who tells the world when it is noon. The cylinder at which he stands is a chronograph connected with the standard clock, which is kept in a triple vault far underground, where there is no vibration and no dust, and where the temperature never varies as much as one one-hundredth part of a degree. When the chronograph shows that the standard clock registers 11:55 a. m., Mr. Sollenberger turns on an electric switch. A transmitting clock, connected with the standard clock, ticks off the seconds over radio and telegraph for the next five minutes. A skip in the ticks gives the signal for noon and sets the clocks of the world.

LEGION MET MONDAY NIGHT

New Bonus Forms Filled Out And Two Officers Elected

The Klemme Legion Post met at their hall Monday night to take up various business matters.

Filling out the new bonus forms with typewriter took up part of the evening. It is also necessary to take finger prints on the forms. There is a lot of work making out the forms properly but we hope the boys will get their bonus soon.

As the Post Commander, Wm. Winters has moved away, and also the office of Vice Commander is now vacant, formerly held by Richard Bamman, who also moved away, a special election was held to fill the vacancies. Paul Grange was elected Commander and Ben Coobs Vice-Commander. With the present Legion officers the sucess of the Legion should be assured.

After the business meeting was over the boys went to the Seney Drug Store for refreshments.

IOWA AUTO PLATES FOR 1925 ARE ORDERED

Iowa's motor license plates next year will carry black letters on a gray background. They will be of the same size as the plates now in use. A sample of the new plate has just been received by the automobile department at Des Moines. The first carload shipment is expected this week. They are to be shipped this fall to the various county seats.

Figures on this year's registration given out by the automible department today, show that licenses for 1,897 vehicles have been issued. Of this total 532,380 were pleasure cars.

If you want to keep the good will of anyone, you had better use criticism very sparingly. Of sometimes it may be necessary, but it is not necessary nearly so often you think. The habit of criticism grows upon us because criticism is the easiest thing in the world. It does not take a thimblefull of brains to find fault, and the biggest numskull in the world can find fault with the greatest man in the world. We flatter ourselves that criticism is a sign of superior intelligence. It is not. It usually is a sign of bad manners, of lack of self-restraint and of an entire ignorance of psychology."—Exchange.

IT WILL PAY TO RAISE COLTS

Shortage of Yearlings and Two Year Olds in Iowa

There is a shortage of yearling and two-year-old farm horses in Iowa, and in fact all over the country according to Prof. A. B. Caine of the animal husbandry department of Iowa State College.

Every farmer in the opinion of Prof. Caine, would do well to push the colt crop to the maximum. He may rest assured that with the present lack of farm animals, he will find a good market for his surplus colts.

If the farmer has not been able to breed his mare for a spring colt, he might have better luck planning for a fall colt. The one advantage of a fall colt is that the mare can use it in the winter when she is not doing heavy farm work. There is the disadvantage that it is six or more months before the colt can get on pasture, but this is not serious.

The popularity of horses for farm work, is an assurance that they will always be in demand. The Horse Association of America estimates that more than 95 per cent of farm power in Iowa is furnished by horses and less than five percent by tractors. There are 1,139,000 horses in Iowa.

With the lack of a good supply of yearlings and two-year-olds coming along and the demand as strong as ever, the farmer with a horse or two for sale will be monye ahead.

One of the world's saddets sights is a bright man's dull finish.

OBITUARY—MRS. LAUDEN

Mrs. Alma Lauden, nee Kemp, was born November 15, 1876 in Pommern, Germany, and passed away Monday evening, July 14, 1924 at 7:15 o'clock in Klemme ,Iowa, at the age of 47 years, 7 months and 29 days.

The deceased came to America to make her home in 1888 to Fort Dodge, Iowa, where she first made her home.

On March 22, 1894 she was united in marriage to Mr. John Lauden,. To this union seven children were born, one died when but a child, but the other six are all living to mourn her death. The children are: Esther (Mrs. Chas. Overlees); Walter; Clarence; Alma, (Mrs. Irwin Rosendahl); Ella and Alvin.

Mrs. Lauden was one of the early settlers in this county and for 30 years she and her husband lived on a farm near Klemme until a few years ago when Mr. Louden died and she later moved to town.

The deceased has also been most faithful in church work and was a member of Immanuel Reformed Church of Klemme for over twenty two years.

Mrs. Lauden has been a long and patient sufferer and death came to her as a great relief from this world ly pain.

She leaves to mourn her death two sisters, four brothers and six children.

Funeral services were held last Wednesday at the Reformed church with Rev. A. A. Depping officiating.

Card of Thanks

The children of Mrs. Lauden wish to thank all those who assisted them during the illness and death of their mother, also for the flowers and kind words of sympathy.

CLEAN UP STRAWBERRY PATCH

Cut Down Rows, Thin Plants, Cultivate Every Ten days.

If backyard strawberry patches have not already been prepared for next year's growth, they should be taken care of immediatcly says Prof C. V. Holsinger, of the horticultural extension department, Iowa State College.

The rows, which are now probably two or three feet wide, should be cut down to a width of not over six inches. If possible, in cutting down the rows, take away the old plants. Since the old plants are usually in the center of the row, the strip that is left for next year should be to one side of the center. Block out each row, leaving clumps of plants six or eight inches apart.

If the plants show injury from strawberry leaf spot, leaf rollers or the larvae of the strawberry saw fly, mow the tops off first, burn them, together with whatever other rubbish the rake may gather. After the patch has been cut down, give continuous cultivation to it during the summr and fall, going over t at least once every ten days.

Beds that have been set out this spring, because of the exceptionally favorable season, will be making a heavy growth. It will therefore be wise to take a garden rake during the latter part of August, and go across the rows with it, taking out surplus plants. Too many plants, Prof. Holsinger points out, are as bad as so many weeds. The big, well, developed plants throw out the greatest number of fruit spurs. It is impossible to get well devlopd plants in an over crowded patch.

HIS OVERSIGHT

A Dollar Down

Beyond the aeons when the sun shall tread
His flaming circle of the sky;
When all the little days have fled,
The last pale moon has said good-
by;

When human dust its last embrace
Has pressed, and love is done;
When we no more meet face to face
In that for hour when world's are

And man and earth are one;
mist
And suns have dimmed to ash—
Close by your side I will insist
Upon that weekly cash.

For there's a thing that never dies-
That outlives every man—
It is the payments that he makes
On the installment plan.

"LIVE WIRES" ELECT

The members of the Live Wires elected their officers for the coming quarter, last Sunday morning. It appears that the Live Wires are living up to their name, for they are a wide-awake, enthusiastic bunch. The new president is Wlliam Gauger, who is planning great things for the class; and the Vice-president is Carlyle Gauger. Byrnes Missman was elected Secretary and Wayne Pavey is the new Treasurer. A party is beng planned for next week, and it will be a real one. Definite plans will be discussed on Sunday morning, so it would be well to be present and offer your suggestions, fellows

PULLING MACHINE ON ROAD

Will Be Exhibited at 10 or More Iowa Fairs.

Iowa State College's invention to test the pulling power of horses and mules will start on a two month's trip of Iowa fairs, starting the latter part of July and lasting trru September.

So far, Prof. A. W. Clyde of the agricultural engineering service has ten fairs on his itinerary and he is negotiating wth four or five others.

A new and lighter dynameter has been built under Prof. Clde's supervision that will be readily transportable. It is mounted on a Ford truck Its capacity was recently tested with tractors and it was found that the device would record as high as 3000 pounds tractive pull. Since this is 600 pounds than any team has ever pulled, the new dynamometter is thot to have sufficient capacity for thed emands that will be made upon it at the fairs.

DON'T FORGET THIRD SPRAY

Winter Apples Are at Premium This Year

It will pay apple growers to spray their trees during the latter part of July in southern Iowa and the first week in August in northern Iowa.

To date there has been a very light and backward outcropping of the codling moth, but there is apt to be a scattered and heavy second brood, in the opinion of Prof. H. E. Nickols of the horticultural extension service, Iowa State College. To catch the second brood it will be necessary for the fruit grower after applying the spray many worms are noticed just entering the fruit, he should apply the spray again.

An added reason for taking especial pains with the fruit this year is that the crop of apples is generally short and the supply of winter apples is estimated to be from 50 to 65 percent of normal.

One pound of lead arsenate powder and four quarts of liquid lime sulfur (or three pounds of dry lime sulfur) should be used for ecah 50 gallons of water for the summer spray.

Undoubtedly the largest electrical chicken hatching plant in the world is located at Petaluma, Cal., where a great new hatchery is rapidy being completed which will house an electric hen capable of "covering" 508,000 eggs at one setting.

NOVELTY IN STRAWBERRY PATCH

William Bush has a unique strawberry "patch" at his residence place, an improvised patch. Last winter he chanced to see a note in a newspaper that told him to "plant" a patch in a barrel and decided to follow instructions.

Taking an ordinary barrel, this spring, he bored seventy-two holes in the sides; four up and down ,and filled the barrel with earth; first, however, inserting an open 6 inch drain tile and cementing it at the bottom. This spring the plants were inserted in the holes, planted in thes oft earth the tile filled with water to provide sufficient moisture for the plants. The result is that the has growing, ripening strawberries all around the barrel and also on the top; there is no grass, and the sunshine gets all of the plants, in addition to which the strawberries are kept out of the mud when rainfall is excessive. The strawberries are large the plants filled with blossoms —Ackley Journal.

PREVENT RAPID SOURING

Keep Down the Bacteria Count in the Milk

Rapid souring of milk in the summer may be avoided if the dairyman understands the bacteriology of souring and will observe a few ordinary preventive measures.

Milk souring is due to bacteria whch change the milk sugar to lactic acid, to which the taste of soured milk is due. Bactria, in turn, are not "bugs", but plants, requiring certain favorable conditions for growth.

There are two general methods of keeping milk sweet, according to Prof. E. F. Goss, of the diary department, Iowa State College. The first method is by keeping as many bacteria out of the milk as possible, and

By using carefully washed and scalded milk paids and cans, by wiping the cow's udded with a damp cloth pust previous to milkink, and by using a partially covered sanitary mlk pail, the entrance of bacteria into milk is reduced to a minimum.

To prevent the rapid growth of bacteria already in the milk, cool the milk right after milking, and keep it cold. Cold temperature is unsuited to rapid bacterial growth. A temperature of 50 degrees or lower is effective in inhibiting growth.

FOURTEEN RIDE ON ONE TICKET

BOY INJURED IN RUNAWAY

Arm Broken When Thrown Under Hay Rake Thursday

Frederick Groh, ten or twelve year old son of Alec Groh near this place was seriously hurt in a runaway last Thursday afternoon at about 4:00 o'clock.

Frederick was helping his father in the hay field and was on a hay rake. The rake tongue dropped out of the neck-yoke and frightened the horses and they started to run. The boy was thrown under the rake and caught his right arm between the frame, breaking it between the wrist and elbow. He then fell under the rake and was rolled over a few times before the rake teeth lifted, letting him loose. He was cut and bruised when under the rake.

At the present time he is getting along fine and says, "It might have been worse."

NAUGHTY DAUGHTERS GET SPANKED

The evening of July 4th, an irate father cut a willow stick and administered a good, old-fashioned spanking to his two young lady daughters The chastisement took place at Interlaken Park and was witnessed by a few interested spectators. The young ladies did not appear at the car at the appointed hour for the departure of the family and upon being questioned as to why they were not on time, explained that they "were picked up" by a couple of guys. Dad wasted no time on further inquiries but immediately went into acton giving both his daughters a brisk trimming, bundled them in the car and started home. Possibly the experience was rather embarrassing both for the givee and the takees but it might work out about as well for all concerned if more cases of dilinquences of that nature were handled in the same way.—Bancroft Register.

U. S. CONSUL IS SLAIN IN PERSIA

Another American Fatally Beaten When Yank Camera Enrages Mob.

Teheran.—Maj. Robert Imbrie, United States vice consul here, was brutally murdered and Melin Seymour, an American, detained at the consulate for a year for alleged mistreatment of citizens in the south oil fields, was beaten so severely that he will die, by an excited mob, when they attempted to take photographs in a quarter of the city where a miracle was said to have taken place.

A large number of maimed persons seeking a cure had gathered at the place where the miracle was said to have been performed. Ignorant of Persian customs, the Americans failed to heed the warning of police not to take photographs, as women were present. As they entered a carriage the excited rabble spied the camera, which they took to be a machine for spraying suffocating gas.

The mob followed the carriage in which the Americans attempted to flee, arming themselves with whatever weapons they could get their hands on. Their number was increased by shopkeepers and others along the road.

Police stopped the carriage after it had proceeded a short distance to examine the Americans whose action was considered criminal here. The mob caught up with the Americans, dragged them from their carriage and mercilessly beat them.

More than thirty constables and officers were seriously hurt in trying to save the Americans from their assailants. The police succeeded in getting the two men to the central police station, but the mob broke in and beat Major Imbrie into unconsciousness. Major Imbrie died at 1 p. m.

112,078,611 Now Census of the United States

Washington.—Estimates of the census bureau show that eleven cities have grown past the 100,000 population since the last census. There are now 79 cities having a population of 100,000 or more, according to the new figures. Chicago has a population of 2,939,605, according to the statistics. New York now has a population of 6,015,504. The relative rank of some of the cities are changed by the new calculation. New Orleans has passed Cincinnati, Rochester has outgrown Jersey City, St. Paul has passed Denver,

Blame Is Laid on Rich Women for Bootlegging

Winona Lake, Ind.—"Some of the meanest bootleggers in America are women," Mrs. Elizabeth T. Stanley, president of the Indiana W. C. T. U., declared before the conference of the World League Against Alcoholism here. They are too smart for the male enforcement officers, she said. "You need a woman officer to catch a woman bootlegger." Rich women are a stumbling block to law enforcement, Mrs. Stanley said.

Wheat From Canada to U. S. Shows Big Increase

Ottawa.—Canada exported 20,428,396 bushels of wheat to the United States during the nine months ending with June, as compared with 131,167,301 bushels during the nine months two years ago, according to a government report. Exports of Canadian farm products to the United States were valued at $53,858,420 in same period, against $42,220,038 in the corresponding nine months of two years ago.

286,000,000 Bushel Drop in World's Wheat Output

Washington.—A reduction of 286,000,000 bushels in the wheat production of eleven of the leading producing countries of the northern hemisphere, as compared with last year's crop, is indicated in reports to the Department of Agriculture. These eleven countries producing 64 per cent of the world crop, will have 1,913,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, as compared with 2,199,000,000 last year.

NEW BOARD OF TAX APPEALS ORGANIZED

Body Told $50,000,000 in Sight for 1925.

Washington.—Acting Secretary of the Treasury Winston, in addressing the first meeting of the new board of tax appeals, announced that a revised estimate shows a surplus of $50,000,000 in prospect at the end of the fiscal year 1925, recently commenced. This is double the estimated surplus given by President Coolidge in his address at the semi-annual budget meeting on June 30, and indicates that all likelihood of a deficit has vanished.

Mr. Winston, however, warned that the new board of tax appeals must expedite cases so as not to slow up receipts from back taxes which were amounting to from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 per month up to the time of the passage of the revenue law, when a slump took place on account of the change in system of handling disputed cases.

The latest estimate of $50,000,000 as the 1925 fiscal year surplus does not take account of the saving of $83,000,000 which President Coolidge has asked departments to make below amounts appropriated for their expenditures during the year. Adding these two sums together, a surplus of $113,000,000 is a possibility.

Hits St. Louis; No Deaths

St. Louis, Mo.—Damage estimated at approximately $200,000 was caused by a severe electrical storm here which disabled 16,000 telephones and 20,000 electric light connections. The 54-mile wind destroyed thousands of trees. The telephone system was interrupted more than in any storm since the tornado of 1896, officials said.

Army Reaches the Limit; Order Stops Recruiting

Washington.—Suspension of further enlistments for the army was announced by the War department. The enlisted strength of the regular army has reached 123,793, which is in excess of the total authorized by congress. Appropriations for the new fiscal year permit an average enlisted strength of 118,750.

FARM WEALTH UP A BILLION

Growers Reap Harvest From Increase; Revives General Business Tone.

Chicago.—Practically $1,000,000,000 has been added to the agricultural wealth of the United States as a result of the sensational advance in grain values in a little more than a month.

At the same time many millions of dollars have accrued to the farmers in the Canadian northwest, where wheat prices have jumped 42 cents a bushel, as against nearly 30 cents a bushel in the United States.

This advance has brought about an emphatic reversal of conditions in agricultural districts and is reflected in general business with a more cheerful tone everywhere.

Six weeks ago speculative trading on the board of trade was around 20,000,000 bushels a day. Wednesday it reached the highest since May 1, 1923, with an aggregate of more than 110,000,000 bushels of all grains, of which 69,000,000 bushels were wheat for future delivery.

There has been no such revival in the grain trade for years in so short a time. Commission houses practically deserted a few months ago are now filled with interested buyers who have become impressed by the wonderful change in the world's wheat situation.

Foreigners are said to have bought upward of 25,000,000 bushels of wheat futures in Chicago and Winnipeg within a short time. July wheat, which sold at $1.03⅞ on June 9, touched $1.30½ Thursday, gaining 4½ cents for the day, while Winnipeg was up to $1.40½, an average of 4¼ cents, despite reports of rains in sections where most needed.

July corn has advanced from 78 cents to $1.13 in the same time and cash No. 2 yellow corn brought $1.16¼ in Chicago Thursday, the highest in several years, as corn is scarce in all terminal markets. Oats sold at 61½ cents and are up 10 cents of late, and rye brought 87 cents, a gain of 20 cents a bushel in the same time.

United States Giant War Submarine Is Launched

Portsmouth, N. H.—A submarine, twice as large as any built previously for the United States, was launched at the navy yard here. This big undersea fighter, to be known as the V-1, is the first of a fleet of nine. The vessel is 314 feet 6 inches over all, has a maximum breadth of 26 feet, and a surface displacement of 2,164 tons. She is so nearly self sustaining that she will not need the services of a mother ship when in port. The V-1 will carry seven officers and eighty men.

Deserter Killed Major Who Gave Him Auto Lift

Asheville, N. C.—Maj. Samuel H. McLeary, missing army officer, was killed by Mortimer H. King of Canton and a companion on July 2, King confessed to federal and local officials. The motive was robbery. After the major had taken King and his companion into his car to give them a lift they shot him to death. King is a deserter from both the United States army and the Marine corps.

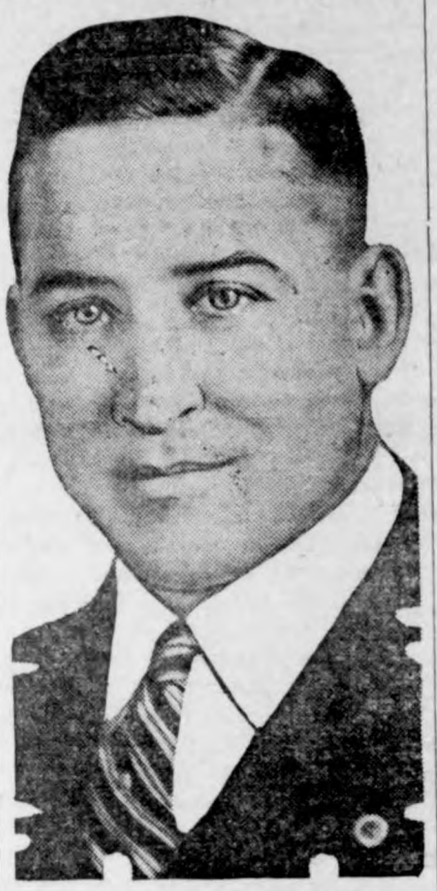
WAY FRED MAXTED GOT NEW MEMBERS

He just went out and got them. That's the way Fred Maxted, champion member-getter of Racine post No. 76, American Legion, Racine, Wis., tells the story of his remarkable record in adding members to the roster of his post.

Fred is very modest about his exploits. He just can't see anything unusual about it. He refuses to become oratorical about it. Seems to feel that anybody could go out and do the same thing he did.

But Fred went. That's the way he got them. He did not stick around the post quarters and loaf. Fred's no lounge lizard. He's a member hound.

Fred must have heard something or other somewhere about old Jule Caesar. Anyhow, he went and saw and got 'em to sign on the dotted line.



Fred Maxted.

Which is wnat Jule did. And he didn't have to cross the Alps to do it, either. It takes a pretty good man to have any influence in his home town, but Fred showed the stuff.

The boys signed for Fred—190 of them were rounded up single-handed in the main membership drive last spring. And in a supplementary drive staged by the post, Fred got some more. There were 25 in that bunch. That's a nice little postful, you will agree.

Fred must have used the Racine tragedy and gone out to look for them in the homes of the fellows and into the factories. He learned in the army that a fellow usually got what he was looking for if he looked long enough. It is a cinch that he wasn't watching the clouds or admiring the beautiful color effects as the sun sank to rest in the golden west—you know the line.

He was thinking of the work the Legion had done and is continuing to do for the former service men. He was thinking of his post and its influence in the old home town.

He explained all these things to the prospect. He told of the purposes of the Legion. He told what it had accomplished. The story of the Legion sells itself, Fred said, and apparently it does—with aid.

Impostors Reported in Scheme to Win "Bonus"

Employing "fly-by-night" stock promoters' salesmanship methods, three men, two of them ex-service men, canvassing through the state of Montana in the interests of a magazine subscription scheme, are exploiting patriotism to gain their ends, is the report of the department of Montana, American Legion. Their method is to inquire at a home if any ex-service man lives there and then to immediately begin a discussion of the national adjusted compensation, calling it a "bonus." After the conversation is begun they artfully talk about the bonus they will receive if a good number of subscriptions are forthcoming. A poster of a doughboy with a helmet and gun is then flashed with the words, "Lest We Forget" beneath. The keyword "bonus" is used with such abandon that the "prospect" becomes confused and thinks that by giving a subscription he would be helping the ex-service man to obtain a good-sized bonus (adjusted compensation settlement).

National Headquarters on Insurance Matters

To clarify the confusion arising from the fact that the government is now handling two types of insurance, war time insurance, and adjusted compensation insurance, both applicable to veterans of the World war, the American Legion at national headquarters, Indianapolis, made the following announcement: "War-time insurance may be retained until March 3, 1926, at which period it must be converted to one or a combination of the various forms of insurance granted by the government. Term insurance canceled or allowed to lapse since the discharge of a veteran from service may be reinstated at any time before the above date. The passage of the veteran compensation bill in no way affects the policies of insurance carried by veterans. The insurance granted by the new legislation is in addition to the government term insurance."

New Calendar Is Asked for 1928

Scientists Point to Value of Plan Having Uniform Dates for Each Day.

Washington.—The old question of reing the calendar is coming up anew. ial bodies of no less importance the weather bureau in the United es and the League of Nations in pe are giving serious considera- to a general revision of the method computing time. Efforts now are g made to bring about an interna- l conference for a discussion of problem and the formation of a system.

e League of Nations has appointed ecial committee to investigate the ssity and desirability for a reform e calendar. The committee has some sessions, but at present is in rnment pending the gathering of tional data. Should the United es government, or any other gov- ent, call an international confer- on the subject it is certain that committee would play a large part e deliberations.

r. C. F. Marvin, chief of the United es weather bureau, may be con- red as the head of the movement calendar reform in this country. has given much study to the sub- and is probably the leading Amer- n expert. He advocates a simplifi- on which would base the year on seven-day week as the major unit. year would consist of 13 months 8 days each, or exactly four weeks h.

One Day All by Itself.

ne extra day would be left over. ctor Marvin suggests that this ex- day be not included in any month, given a name of its own. It might New Year's day, or any other which ld be agreed upon. The day, under plan, would be a world-wide holi- . It should be placed, in Doctor rvin's opinion, between December and January 1.

Doctor Marvin would insert his extra th in midsummer, in the belief that would cause the least disturbance accustomed calculations. This ld bring it between the present ths of June and July. Every four rs would come still an extra day this would be taken care of by ab- tely separate classification. It ld have its own special name, such Leap Year day, and would not be art of any regular month. It, too, ht be a world-wide holiday.

Doctor Marvin says there are many antages to the plan he proposes. iding the year into months which precise multiples of the seven-day k would simplify business and entific transactions. Bank interest ld be more easily reckoned and ac- nting could be better standardized. entific data, particularly of a me- rological nature, would be better ndled on a basis of even week units. To effect the reform would be no mple matter. The governments of e world, business communities, scien- ic institutions and perhaps, most im- rtant of all, the various churches, uld have to be brought into agree- nt upon the program. Because of e numerous church festivals, saints' ys and the like, the church is close- bound up with the calendar; in- ed, heretofore the calendar has been the hands of the churchmen rather an laymen, and the calendar that is letter is dated by was established the pope of Rome.

Doctor Marvin points out that the ange could be effected with least in- nvenience by taking action before 28, the nearest year in which Jan- ry 1 falls on a Sunday. This would nable the new year to start on the rst day of a week.

The history of the development of e calendar is of absorbing interest. he earliest savages were dimly aware f divisions of time, reckoning them by stronomical phenomena. Our own orth American Indians to this day re- r to the months as the "moons." here is the "moon of blossoms" and on, with a distinctive name for each cycle of the moon. The Indian reckons esser periods of time, by suns. From ne place to another will be described s five suns' journey.

The early Egyptians had a year of 12 30-day months with an extra five days each year. In early Hebrew history we find the year of 12 months with an occasional extra month when one was needed to adjust the calendar.

The early Greeks also had a 12-month year. Every 19 years the moon returns on precisely the same day, completing a cycle, and the Greeks were guided by this and made adjustments accordingly.

The Greek month was not divided into weeks, as our month is, but into decades. Each 30-day month had three decades of ten days each. In some respects this might be regarded as a simpler system than the four-week month, but Christendom would never accept such a scheme because of the teaching of Genesis which specifically tells that the Lord labored six days and rested upon the seventh. The teachings of the Scriptures enjoin upon us six days' labor and then a day of rest. This has fixed the seven-day week in the Occident.

The Greek system was generally employed in the Mediterranean basin but by the time of the Roman emperor, Julius Caesar, the division of months had become sufficiently maladjusted by slight differences from year to year that the astronomers found the calendar to be two months out of the way. Caesar ordered his experts to work out a new system and they did so.

Julius Caesar, it must be remembered, was the head of the Roman church as well as the civil emperor of the Romans. The year in which the transition from the old to the new calendar was made was called the year of confusion. It contained 14 months. The new calendar was called the Julian calendar, being named after Julius Caesar, and a new name of July was given to a midsummer month to commemorate his service to mankind in readjusting the time measurement. The Julian calendar was employed by the entire Occident up until 1582.

By that date it was found to be about ten days out of reckoning and Pope Gregory instituted a study which resulted in the establishment of the calendar used today. To show the importance of obtaining the consent of the churches to any change in the calendar it may be recalled that the Greek church did not accept the Gregorian calendar, but adhered to the old one.

The result was that up until the memory of living persons the Russian time was about half a month out of the way. The difference was comparable to the difference in this country of two cities, one of which has daylight saving and the other standard time. In dating a letter one added the letters O. S. after the date if he were using the old style.

At the time of the French revolution an attempt was made to revise the calendar, but it proved abortive. The rest of Europe would not co-operate and the project was abandoned.

The East has different methods. The Mohammedan calendar shows differences from ours. In this country an occasional bill is introduced to change the methods of computing time, but little attention has been paid to them. The present movement is the most serious since that of the French revolution.

Pennsylvania to Assure Motorists of Pure Water

Harrisburg, Pa.—Analysis of drinking water along state highways has been begun by officials of the state department of health. An ambulance converted into a field laboratory took to the road at the extreme eastern end of the Lincoln highway, opening the movement designed to protect the health of motorists who use wayside drinking water.

As soon as the tests are made the results will be sent field engineers, who will post the drinking places. It is planned to post each source of water supply, and where the water is found to be dangerous to the public health warning signs will be set up.

Dr. Charles H. Miner, secretary of health, declared the movement is the first of its kind on the part of any state to protect motorists from impure water.

HABIT CLINICS FOR CHILDREN HAVE PROVED BIG SUCCESS

Department of Labor Reports Favorable Results in Treatment of Abnormal Cases.

Washington. — "Habit clinics" for young children, the latest development in the child hygiene field, are described in a report just issued by the children's bureau of the Department of Labor.

The habit clinic treats children displaying temper tantrums or other bad habits as "patients" and diagnoses and treats the bad habit on a scientific basis. By eliminating the cause of the bad habit the clinic helps the child to make a normal adjustment to his surroundings and develop into a well-rounded personality.

Dr. D. A. Thom, Boston, director of the habit clinics of the Community Health association of that city, is the author of the report issued by the children's bureau. He states that the first habit clinic, organized in 1921, was so successful there now are eight clinics, three under the association and five under the division of mental hygiene of the Massachusetts department of mental diseases. Doctor Thom also is director of this division.

Habits most frequently treated by the clinics relate to feeding problems, temper tantrums, pugnacity and shyness, problems relating to sex life, enuresis, destructiveness, delinquency and acute personality changes.

Children who just "won't eat" the wholesome food they need; children who respond to every attempt at discipline with a screaming, kicking attack of temper; children who are either too shy or too "bossy" to mingle happily with schoolmates and playmates, or even brothers and sisters; children who, without apparent reason, begin to lie or steal, and many others, come or are brought to the clinics to get their difficulties straightened out.

Prior to Doctor Thom's report this year, 160 cases were registered at the clinics, 130 of which were studied thoroughly. In only 19 cases, Doctor Thom reports, were results discouraging and no evidence of improvement shown. Of these discouraging cases, 12 came from families which gave no co-operation. Only seven children whose families co-operated failed to improve.

A $10,000 Soupbone

Muskegon, Mich.—A $10,000 soupbone threatened to be an issue in circuit court here. Mrs. Mary Kurzdiel, through her attorneys, has filed suit for that amount against the city of Muskegon Heights, alleging that the officers arrested her and took a package containing the soupbone from her, believing it to be liquor and that she was released when the officers discovered their mistake.

The Man With Milk On His Shoes

"It is rumored that a certain Banker, wise as Solomon, in determining whether or not his farmer friends were "good for a loan," always leaned across the counter to see whether o not they had milk on their shoes.

"A firm or an individual can be said to prosper in direct proportion to their credit rating. The ability to have credit extended means the life and growth of business. Credit is extended on a basis of security in just the proportion that security is safe.

"No greater asset can be had by the farmers of the middle west than a good herd of dairycows.

"The man who "straddles the milk stool" has a down pull on prosperity."
